MITCHELL THE FORGER.—The ex-honorable Charles F. Mitchell arrived in this city on Monday evening, in custody of officer Bowyer of the police, and is now lodged in safe keeping. Gov. Seward, having been applied to for the purpose, made a respectful requisition upon the Canadian authorities for the delivery of the forger, which was promptly complied with. Mr. Bowyer left Montreal on Saturday, having Mitchell in irons, and accompanied by Capt. Cormeau, of the Montreal police. Capt. C. accompanied them to the American waters, where he formally surrendered the prisoner.

The Courier says that Mitchell is in good health, and appears reckless as to his fate; avowing his determination to plead guilty to the crimes with which he is charged.

It appears that on his flight from this city he went to Philadelphia, where, after having procured a ticket at the Pittsburgh Railroad Office, (for the purpose of misleading any who might be in pursuit) he disguised himself in a suit of grey clothes, a broad brim hat with crape band, in which dress and green spectacles, and with a carpenter's rule in his hand, for four days openly walked the streets of that city, frequently meeting persons with whom he was well accquainted. He left Philadelphia for New York in the cars, and went up the river in the steamboat Utica; being all the while in company with persons whom he knew, but none of whom detected him through his disguise.

An incident occurred at Troy, which shows the constant apprehension of discovery under which he must have been laboring; while purchasing a stage ticket at that place, a person standing behind him, read aloud from a newspaper a paragraph, headed "Mitchell the Forger," upon which the guilty man turned suddenly around, under conviction that he was discovered: but finding such was not the case, he merely said he knew him to be a great rascal.—N. Y. Sig.

EXTRAORDINARY JOURNEY AND VOYAGE. It is stated that an English traveller, Sir George Simpson, who recently set out from Liverpool, and left Montreal on his wild route a few days since, is now engaged in one of the most extraordinary adventures of modern times. He is on his way round the world, and expects to travel in all, 36,850 miles. Thus, he left Liverpool and arrived at Halifax and Boston by steam-packet, a distance of 3500 miles.—He left that city in a canoe, and intends to visit French river, lakes Huron, Superior, White Fish, Lake of the Woods and Winnepeg, until he reaches the Red River settlement, being a distance of 2150 miles, all by canoes. He then proposes to travel on horseback and on foot, to the Rocky Mountains, a distance of upwards of 1300 miles. He will then proceed down the Columbia river, a distance of 1110 miles, by boats, until he arrives at Fort Vancouver. He will then travel on the Pacific Ocean by steamboat and ships upwards of 15,000 miles; will visit the Sandwich Islands, Kamschatka, and various other places. He will proceed to Siberia, and travel 700 miles on horseback—then along the Lena, a distance of 2640 miles, in boats. He will take horses, and after visiting various regions of the north of Europe, will visit Perm, Orza, Moscow, St. Petersburg, and proceed home through Europe, being a distance of 9600 miles in carriages and on horseback. His calculation is to be absent the whole of this year, and the greater part of next.

AN IMPORTANT INVENTION.—The Leesburg, Va., Genius of Liberty states that Messrs. Phillips & Jackson have invented and patented a machine for cleaning wheat, which will separate garlick, cockle, cheat and all impurities from the grain. It is said that the machine can be furnished at a price within the reach of any one who may require the use of it.—This invention, if it answer the purpose stated, will be of essential use to farmers, as the great difficulty, and indeed impossibility, of separating garlick, &c., from wheat and rye, has deducted largely from the value of their crops. We have no doubt the machine will be introduced into general use.

A SECOND "JULIUS FEROCIOUS."—The editor of that stormy and rabid Tory print, the Liverpool Mail, is said to have a map of the United States hanging in his sanctum, and every morning on entering the room he takes off his coat, rolls up his sleeves, squares off, hits right and left and gives the innocent map a regular milling and mauling, just to vent his spleen against the country and works himself into a good writing passion. His strictures upon President Harrison's Inuagural and also upon the McLeod question are amusing for their very absurdity.—Picayune.

BUSINESS—COLUMBIA RAILROAD.—During the month of April there arrived at, and departed from, the head of the Schuylkill inclined plane, on the Columbia and Philadelphia rail-way, six thousand eight hundred and eighty-one cars, being the largest number that ever passed in any one month since the opening of the road, and exceeding the number in the same month of last year by one thousand and seventy-four cars. We are also informed that on a single day of this month, (May,) there were despatched from the plane, two hundred and three cars.

ARRESTED.—A fellow was arrested in Boston, on Friday, on suspicion of being one of the persons who entered and robbed the hardware store of Joseph Lincoln, Jr. 6 Union street, about a week ago. Some of the stolen goods were found in his possession.

SUSPICION OF PIRACY.—James Reed, master of a fishing schooner at Gloucester, Mass., has made oath to a statement of which the following is a substance:—He swore that on the 12th inst., being about fifteen miles from the New Jersey shore, he saw a small boat with three men in it, heading so as to land opposite Manahocking. At the same time he saw a schooner about six miles east of him, with her mainsail set, and "yawing" in the wind so strangely as to convince him that there was no person on board to steer. He immediately bore away for her, and on reaching her found that she was the schooner Mogul of this city.—She was on her broadside, nearly full of water. He saw an augur hole which had been lately bored through her starboard quarter with a two inch augur.—Some of his crew were with him, and they went together into the cabin, where they found two chests open and empty. On the bed in the Captain's berth there was a number of clothes, and the appearance of a body in the berth; but the sea pressed the bed and clothes so hard against the carlins of the deck that they could not be removed. They left her at about 4 o'clock, P. M. at which time she was fast sinking. In conclusion, the deponent does most solemnly swear that it is his belief, and it was the belief of all who saw the bed and bedding before referred to, that the dead body of some person was in the captain's berth of said schooner Mogul.

Gen. Darcy, U. S. Marshal for New Jersey, in connection with several others is engaged in effort to discover the men who were going ashore in the small boat. The Mogul was owned by Nesmith & Leeds, and Mitchell & Co. of this city.—The owners believe that Capt. Snow and two others on board have been murdered. The crew consisted of William F. Green, mate, James Cantine, cook, Lyman French, James D. Fox, and Thos. Smith, seamen.—N. Y. Sig.

GAMBLING.—Let every young man avoid all sorts of gambling as he would poison. A poor man or boy should never allow himself to toss up for a half penny for this is often the beginning of gambling, and this ruinous crime creeps on by slow degrees. Whilst a man is minding his work, he is playing the best game, and sure is to win. A gambler never makes any good use of his money even if he should win, he only gambles the more, and he is often reduced to beggary and despair. He is often tempted to commit crimes for which his life is forfeited to his country, or perhaps he puts an end himself to his miserable existence. If he wins, he injures a friend or companion. And how can any honest man enjoy money gained in such a way.

TO MAKE A BEAUTIFUL FIRE-SCREEN.—Draw a landscape on paper, with Indian ink, representing a winter scene, or mere outline; the foliage is to be painted with muriate of cobalt for the green, acetate of cobalt for blue, and muriate of copper for yellow, which when dry will all be invisible. Put the screen to the fire, and the gentle warmth will occasion the flowers, &c. to display themselves in their natural colors, and winter be changed to spring. When it cools, the colors disappear, and the effect can be reproduced at pleasure.

THE GAINES CASE.—The U. S. Circuit Court at New Orleans, has again disagreed in the arbitrated case of Gen. Gaines and wife, against Relf, Chew, and others, involving so much property. The case was argued some time since, on a demurrer. Judge McKinley overruled the demurrer, on all points, and Judge Lawrence sustained it on all points. The case is, therefore again certified to the Supreme Court of the United States for the judgment.

WONDERFUL INVENTION.—Mr. Arnold is exhibiting, in New York city, specimens of the new mode of manufacturing cloth, without spinning or weaving. By this process, wool may be made into cloth with the greatest rapidity, and at an expense of less than six cents a yard. The Major's last observation was—"I anticipate now that I shall have a first rate suit of American broadcloth soon, in which to do my courting."

THE BROOKLYN MURDER.—The Daily News, in alluding to the murder committed at Brooklyn last summer says, that "at the last grand jury, satisfactory evidences were produced—the nature of it we are not called upon to explain—to satisfy that enlightened body of citizens, that in the matter the magistracy have not been asleep, and there is reason for the belief that Cook and Nesbit are the murderers."

FIRES IN NEW ORLEANS.—The incendiaries are still at work in New Orleans. On the 16th inst. a fire, known to have been the work of an incendiary, broke out in the cotton press of Mr. Ogden, which was entirely consumed. About 360 bales of cotton, valued at $15,000, were destroyed. Another attempt to fire a dwelling house was made but without success.

COMFORTABLE PROSPECT.—In allusion to the abundance of icebergs, which are voyaging off the coast, and which are supposed to occasion the cold weather, the Richmond Whig says that in 1836, when similar masses invaded our latitudes, there was frost in every month of the year but one!

THE "DIVINE FANNY."—An English paper says that Fanny Ellsler is 36 years of age, and has a son aged 18.

IMPORTANT ARREST.—A negro was arrested in Cincinnati on Wednesday last who is supposed to have been one of the gang of murderers of Weaver and Baker at St. Louis. He was identified by another black man brought on from St. Louis for that purpose; he made a most desperate resistance.

We learn that another of the perpetrators in that horrible murder was arrested at Cairo, and being question confessed his guilt. Two more are still at large; but by the determination and industry of those in pursuit, no doubt they will be speedily brought to punishment.

Since writing the above,—Brown, the colored man arrested at Cincinnati, as a party in the St. Louis murders, has arrived here, in irons, on his way to St. Louis, to stand his trial.—Louisville Messenger.

ANOTHER ARREST,—It appears probable that justice will not be defrauded of her rightful demands upon the inhuman actors in the late horrible tragedy at St. Louis. From the following it will be seen that a third one of the deep dyed villains has been captured, and but one is left at large. Their plan of dispersing themselves in different directions, though craftily planned, is likely to be wholly frustrated in its object.—ib.

From the St. Louis Pennant, 5th inst.

ANOTHER OF THE MURDERERS TAKEN.—We have the sincere satisfaction of stating that the disclosures made by Ennis the negro are confirmed, and that Warrick one the murderers, has been arrested, and is now in the calaboose in this city! Thus is white nature cleared from this most abominable stain, and the crime fastened upon negroes.

Warrick was arrested on Monday evening at Arrow Rock, on the Missouri river, by R. B. McDowell, Esq., who was despatched from the city on the Colonel Woods, under the direction of Gen. Lee, the City Marshal.

About a mile below Arrow Rock, the Col. Woods met the Omega coming down, and McDowell saw Warrick on board.—The Omega immediately rounded to, and Mr. McDowell went on board and walked into the cabin where Warrick was standing. Warrick, who knew Mr. McDowell, turned and said, "for God Almighty's sake, what do you want?" "I want you," was the reply. He made no resistance, but suffered himself to be bound hand and foot.

Mr. McDowell removed his baggage on board the Omega, and proceeded to the city with the negro in charge, where they arrived last night, a little after 12 o'clock, and Warrick was lodged in the calaboose. He was quite communicative on the way down, and fully corroborated the statements of Ennis, implicating no one but himself, Madison, Sewell and Brown. It appears that Madison and Brown were the persons who burnt the Branch Bank at Galena, a short time since.

Mr. McDowell deserves the sincere thanks of this community for his promptness and vigilance in this matter, and will not go unrewarded. Captains Dickerson, of the Col. Woods, and Littleton, of the Omega, distinguished themselves by their assistance on the occasion.

THE NATIONAL INSTITUTION.—The National Intelligencer says: We learn that our "National Institution for the Promotion of Science," is rapidly "going ahead." At the last meeting, letters were read from various parts of the world, promising collections, books, and communications, and announcing such as were already on the way.

The Intelligencer remarks:—"It is well known that Mr. Secretary Webster, upon his accession to the Department of State, allowed the Institution to use the spacious unoccupied apartment and rooms in the basement story of the new Patent Office, where the collection already in the possession of the Institution, is now being arranged; and Mr. Secretary Badger has entrusted to the care of the Institution the extensive and interesting collection of specimens in all branches of Natural History, lately received from the Exploring Squadron, in the preparing and arranging of which, accomplished naturalists are now engaged. Animated by an equal zeal for whatever will advance the history and science of his country, Mr. Bell, Secretary of War, has entrusted the Institution the whole interesting collection of Indian Portraits, which have heretofore hung on the walls of the War Office passage. We understand, also, that with the Portraits will be sent a fine collection of Indian curiosities."

THE TRADE OF THE ERIE CANAL.—The York Times says:—"The quantity of flour and wheat delivered from the Erie Canal at tide water, for the first week in May, is 4,241 bushels of wheat. Gentlemen from the interior of our State estimate a larger business on our canals this season than ever has been done before. Navigation opened late, in consequence of the unfavorable weather for the last two months, but it is supposed the revenue for tolls will amount to two millions of dollars."

SLAVERS CAPTURED.—A letter received yesterday from H. Carroll, Esq., U. S. Consul at St. Helena, dated March 26th 1841, states that five Portuguese slavers had just been brought in at St. Helena, having been captured on the west coast of Africa by the British naval force on that station, with upwards of one thousand slaves on board. The slaves had been landed at St. Helena, and remained of course subject to the orders of the British Government.—New Bedford Gaz.

But kind Providence sent relief, on Saturday evening last, a most de- l and plentiful thunder shower. It cleared the evening, and Sabbath was a remarkable day, and never, perhaps, since the forest med did it display its foliage with greater ty than on the Lord's day. We have not ble to do without fires all spring until the e or six days.

LEOD CASE.—This case has been argued in York on a writ of habeus corpus demanding ease, and committed to the court, who will robably deliver their opinion for a few days. Attorney General in his Plea remarked:

E STEAMSHIP PRESIDENT.—The arrival of aledonia has decided the question with the that there is next to no hope for the safety President. She had been out fifty-six days the Caledonia sailed, and no intelligence r. It is barely possible that she may have d some one of the Western Islands, or e may be disabled and afloat on the Ocean. e common opinion is that she came in con- with an ice berg which has sent her to the n of the "great deep." She is said to have bout 100 persons on board, among whom ord William Lennox, son of the Duke of mond, and the Rev. G. B. Cookman of the bdist Episcopal Church, late chaplain to ess. The papers take a deep interest in the f the latter.

FROM WASHINGTON.

From the Wash. Cor. of the Philad. Chronicle.

Washington, May 15, 1841.

GENTLEMEN:—The Capitol is again beginning to assume a lively and business-like aspect; the approaching extra session, and the changes in departments, have each contributed largely towards drawing together a goodly portion of people from all quarters, among them are some members of Congress who are here with their families apparently calculating upon a summer residence. It is generally understood that the extra session will be a protracted one, and in all probability one of much speechifying, without an adequate proportion of benefit to the country to compensate for the expenditure of time and money. The matters that will claim their attention, are in themselves, of vital importance to the present and the future, and are not to be passed over without due deliberation, which fact, together with the usual admixture of political jargon, leads to the anticipation of a warm and lengthy campaign. Some little stir has been made already in regard to the next speaker, a number of names have been fixed upon as candidates, but as nothing definite is yet done, I shall not mention them. The far-famed Collector of your port is here, and although he arrived but last evening, has already been seen in close communion with Mr. Ewing; several rumors are abroad as to the nature of his mission—whether it was voluntary or by order—and whether it was not for the purpose of providing some of his new underlings with their walking papers. The appointments in your Custom House have met with as much disapprobation here as in Philadelphia itself, and it is not to be questioned that President Tyler has fully repented of the folly of awarding the situation to so incompetent an individual. If the office was vacant again, Robert Morris would be the person chosen to fill it, whose claims seem to be universally acknowledged. You must not be surprised, however, if Mr. Roberts' resignation is the fruit of his visit to Washington, and that it is followed by the appointment of the distinguished individual already named. Several committees from your city have waited upon the Secretary of the Treasury within the last ten days, with a view to seek a remedy for the injudicious appointments said to have been made for Mr. Roberts, and it is understood that they have been instrumental in calling that gentleman to head quarters.

We learn from Col. Todd, that on his way to his residence in this county last week, he, in performance of a sacred duty, called upon the venerable Widow of our lamented deceased President. Whilst there, he was invited by that lady to a consultation with herself and her only remaining son, as to the ultimate depository of the remains of her distinguished beloved husband,—the Great and Good President. It was determined, at this consultation, to remove the remains immediately to North Bend, to be deposited upon a beautiful and elevated natural mound where the monument may be seen several miles up and down the Ohio. * * * There the traveller of distant ages, will be refreshed by a visit to the tomb of the Warrior, who was never defeated; of the Patriot who died poor; and of the Statesman, who from the proud height of President, "fell, like a star struck from its sphere, covered with glory and renown."—Shelby (Ky) News.

FOREIGN NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP CALEDONIA.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.—NO NEWS OF THE PRESIDENT STEAMER.

From the Philadelphia Chronicle.

The Caledonia, Capt. J. McKeller, arrived at Boston on Wednesday from Liverpool, in fourteen and a half days passage. She left Liverpool on the 4th inst., and was detained at Halifax fifteen hours. She saw several icebergs.

The fate of the President appears to be no longer uncertain—as up to the time of the sailing of the Caledonia nothing had been heard of her in England, nor is it propable that anything favorable ever will be.

The Cunard Steamship, Acadia, arrived at Liverpool on the evening of the 2d inst., in fine condition, making her passage in a little over 14 days.

The Death of President Harrison created quite a sensation in England—and is announced in the largest capitals by all the London papers.

A meeting of the East India and China Association has been held in Liverpool, for the purpose of taking into consideration the late proceedings in China. The result of the deliberations of the Association was the adoption of a letter to Viscount Palmerston, in which the members express their dissatisfaction at the recent arrangements entered into by Captain Elliott with the Chinese Authorities. The letter was signed on Saturday by all the houses engaged in the trade with China, and forwarded in the evening to London.

The dispute of France with Morocco has been settled by mutual concessions. The Governor of Mogadore has been dismised, and the French consul, M. de Lapore, has been recalled.

Major General, Sir John Harvey, has been appointed Governor of Newfoundland.

PARLIAMENT.—The proceedings in Parliament had been interesting and important. The Irish Registration Bill of Ministers occupied the House of Commons three days, was lost, and the anxious inquiry was, will the Ministry now resign?

A dreaful fire occurred at the terminus of the Great Western Railway, in Bristol. $100,000 worth of tar and timber were burning at one time.

A young Irish girl, Nancy Conway, has been convicted in Ireland for the murder of her mother, Catharine O'Neil, alias Conway.

Sir John Russell has given notice that he shall call up the Corn law question on the 31st of May.

The London Chronicle (radical) of the 3d inst. says:

"The sensation produced by the Government notice of Friday night, on the corn law, is rapidly extending throughout the country. Every where it is the signal of excitement and determination. By the monopolists it will never be forgiven; and by the people it will never be forgotten. Ministers have fairly thrown themselves on the nation for support in the assertion of a great national right and interest. The response will soon be heard in thunder. The untaxing of the people's bread is a prospect full in view; and the people will spring toward it like lions on their prey."

FRANCE.—The Paris papers are filled principally with speculations founded on the death of President Harrison, and the defeat of the English ministers on the amendment moved by Lord Howick to the Irish Registration Bill.

On the 27th of April a covered wagon passed through Rennes, loaded with four millions of gold, being a consignment from Hayti for the indemnity to the former planters.

THE MONEY MARKET.—Money was decidedly easier in Philadelphia during the last week. The out-door rates on first-rate paper, were in few instances higher than 9 per cent. per annum. Business is getting more contracted, the cautious and prudent portion of the community being unwilling to engage in any new enterprises, in the existing condition of affairs with regard to finance and currency. The new Relief or Bank bill was, and continues to be the main topic with all business men. The Philadelphia Bank has formally determined to reject it, and most of the other Banks have called their Stockholders together, with the object of submitting the matter to their consideration. The result is yet somewhat doubtful, and opinions vary as to what is best to do.—To accept the Bill would, it is argued, sadly cripple and perhaps destroy the Banks. To reject it, would place the State in a serious dilemma, and probably lead to the non-payment of the interest of the State Debt which is due in June. The question is a very nice one, and appears to puzzle some of our best financiers. Our own view is, that the Banks must consult self-preservation, and reject this bill, let the cost be as it may. They cannot afford to loan the State further funds. Better let the commonwealth know her true position at once, and thus induce her to apply a remedy. A remedy, did we say! There is but one—onorous taxation; and that is held by many to be worse than the disease.—Bicknell.

Business Department.

George Reed, of Bucyrus, O., will please collect $2,50 for us of John Morgan, due for our paper, received through the Bucyrus office.

Br. J. B. Turner, of Logansport, Ia, will do us a favor, if he will collect one year's subscription for our paper from Abraham Wolford and forward to us by mail.

There will be a protracted meeting held at Lafayette, on Hog Creek, commencing on the 12th of June. Brs. Hunt & Guest are invited to attend. Also a protracted meeting will be held in Lima, commencing on the third of July to meet the President's second visit. Brs. Crall and Devore are invited to attend.

Our camp-meeting will commence on the 6th day of August, at which I wish Brs. Flood, Stevens, Hunt, Devore, Guest, Thornton, Inskeeps; and to all the above meetings the unstationed brethren are cordially invited.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS.—We have had this document ready for the Mt. Vernon friends for some time, but it will not answer to send by mail, as the folding would spoil them for the purpose for which they are wanted. They will have to be sent by private hand, and will remain subject to their order. We have a few more copies than are promised, if any should be wanted for framing they can be had.

Br. Bassett, if you wish to meet Br. Ragan on the Bucyrus circuit, you will, no doubt, find him at Br. Robert Reed's, some three miles east of Bucyrus. Meantime if any of the friends will inform us where the meeting will be held, for that charge, we will let you know through the paper.

Br. Mercer, of Sandusky circuit, after stating how much unanimity of spirit prevailed in his charge, and alluding to the strength it had recently received by the addition of many valuable members, informs the executive officer of this district, of the appointment of a campmeeting to meet his visit, to commence on the 25th day of June, five miles north-west of Tiffin, O. He calls for assistance, and earnestly desires ministers and people to be on the ground at the commencement of the meeting.

A friend stated that we omitted to publish some "official memoranda" which was forwarded to us by by the "Secretary" of the Ohio Conference. We have no recollection of such omission—have examined and can find none. We think it possible that the extracts may have been published, but the Secretary did not notice them.—If not, and he will forward again he shall be attended to. We are not, however, to be understood as pleading justification on this score, for we have frequently detected ourself of unintentionally neglecting our correspondents, and have no excuse to offer but our many embarrassing duties. We hope all past offences of this kind will be forgiven, and we ask, in advance, the indulgence of such as we may thus sin against in future. We request, at least, that they will not accuse us of intentional negligence until they call on us for an explanation.

Mr. Editor: Is the following an answer to the puzzle, in reference to the 40 foot pole in a few Nos. back? I am of opinion, on the supposition the wire was as fine as could be imagined, and rapped one inch a part, it would be 2016 inches long, and the man would walk to unwrap it, supposing it to come off at the base, 32 miles. MISCELLANEOUS.

For the Western Recorder.

The following lines were composed by a little girl belonging to our church, 11 years of age, upon the death of a pious mother and two brothers. If you think advisable you can insert them.

J. W.

MY MOTHER.

And is my mother dead,
The one I lov'd so much?
And I upon her tomb-stone read
She slumbers in the dust.

Her spirit's fled away,
In endless joys to rest—
O, may I go her way,
And be forever blest.

MY BROTHERS.

My brothers slumber in the dust,
Among the silent dead,
I lov'd them very much,
But they to heaven have fled.

Their stay on earth was short,
They had no time to sin,
And soon t'will be my lot
To turn to dust again. S. J. E.

From the Literary Messenger.

THE YANKEE AND THE DUELLIST.

At a certain town on the Ohio, a Yankee and a Duellist happened, in the year 1803, to be boarders in the same tavern. The Yankee was a shrewd man, as yankees generally are, but nevertheless honest, good natured, peaceable, and withal fond of a joke: but even when joking he was accustomed to maintain a grave countenance, as if his face were made of wood. His age might be twenty-eight; he was by profession a schoolmaster, and his name was Jedediah Bateman.

I knew not whence the duellist came. He seems to have been hanging for a number of years about villages on the frontier, living by his wits as a cardplayer and land speculator. He was proud, overbearing and malicious; and had become doubly arrogant and assuming since he had been victorious in no less than three duels. Once he had crippled, and twice he had killed his man; making by these exploits two wives widows and five children fatherless. Such was his fame as a duellist, that it was thought little less than suicide for any man not perfectly expert with the pistol to meet him in the field of honor, as this sort of murderers call the place where they shoot one another.

In dress and manner he was a fop and a swaggerer. His red bushy whiskers almost met on his chin; his shirt ruffles were long and projecting; his cravat was stuffed with pading until it almost buried his chin; and his bell-crowned hat was tilted over his left eyebrow when he walked or rather strutted along the street, swinging and plumping down his cane at every step; and wheresoever he went he overlooked every body, and expected the way to be cleared for him by high or low. He considered himself justified in lording it over all who were about him, because he was the most formidable man about the town.

If any peaceful, worthy man did not cower at his presence, he was sure to resent the supposed indignity by sneers and insults. Many were the pompous gibes and bombastic witicism that he discharged from day to day at the schoolmaster Jedediah Bateman, who did not humble himself like a dog before the high and mighty Major Ashwell Bickerton, as the duellist styled himself. He professed to have borne a major's commission in the western army, and often boasted of his exploits in Gen. Wayne's expedition against the Indians. Some people doubted in their hearts whether he had been in that expedition at all, because he gave some erroneous accounts of marches and battles; but they doubted only in their hearts, for who would dare insinuate the suspicion of falsehood to the major's terrible self? The major's tongue might err but his pistol was nevertheless true. Who would have expected that our dry-faced yankee school master would, first of all, have to retort the sneers and insults of this hero of the pistol? He bore several of these attacks with the utmost apparent indifference.—Not a muscle of his face changed its habitual fixedness, not a drop more or less blood colored his cheek; neither word nor look indicated the slightest feeling of the bully's satire. This insensibility of Jedediah provoked the major sorely. He charged the artillery of his wit with still heavier loads of turgid phrases, to express his contempt for the schoolmaster. Still the yankee winced not: he only began with the soberest and most unfeeling gravity to utter some repartees, as dry and grating as the sands of Arabia, yet so perfectly free from open insult, as to incense the duellist's pride without furnishing him a decent pretext to take offence. But the natural malignity of his temper was so embittered by the schoolmaster's mortifying indifference and wit, that he begun to abuse and insult him outrageously on all occasions, with the obvious intention of provoking a deadly quarrel with him! Still the yankee maintained his imperturbable coolness; and replied only by jokes and sarcasm of more stony and indigestible hardness. The bully's rage became unbounded, and the yankee's friends saw clearly that the affair would come to personal violence. But their kind endeavors were vain to persuade Jedediah to soothe the bully's rage. "If you mortify his pride any further," said they, "he will assault you, and you will have to let him beat you with his cane or shoot you with his pistol."

"I shall let him do neither, I guess," said the yankee.

"How will you prevent him?"

"You will see when the time comes," was the final reply.

The same evening at supper, the duellist as usual, began to utter something designed to provoke the yankee. At first Jedediah gave no heed. To make the attack more direct, the bully proceeded, as he had often done, and as addlepates often do, to express his contempt of schoolmasters, or pedagogues, as he and other fops used to call them. Seeing Jedediah still paid no attention, he addressed him superciliously in these words. "Come, sir pedagogue, you are silent: be so condescending as to illustrate your profession by informing us how many ideas you have bastinadoed into the posteriors of your boys to-day. "Not one, sir," said Jedediah—"the boys do not carry their ideas in their posteriors, however they may have done it in your boyish days." "The deuce you say, Mr. Pedagogue: well then, give us a philosophical reason why you apply your birchen instrument with such impetuosity to that inferior part of their corporal system? Come, your philosophical reason, Mr. Pedagogue." "You shall be satisfied, sir. I apply the birch to that part, because it is the base of the system; all the baser elements settle down into it, such as sloth, pride, malice, insolence, ill manners, and whatever else may tend to make a man proud without virtue, boastful without merit, pompous without dignity and quarrelsome without, reason. —Therefore I apply the remedy to the base, in order to expel such baseness from its seat in the system."

The bully was so foiled by this answer that for some moments he showed his rage only by his fierce looks. Then setting his arms akimbo, he said, "You are a cowardly pedagogue to attack boys in that contemptible way. I never knew a pedagogue who was not a tyrant among children, and a———infernal coward among men." He interladed this speech with one of the oaths commonly used by bullies and blackguards: adding these words: "I had a pedagogue in my battalion during the campaign of '96 against the Indians, and the——rascal ran away in every battle, till I had him drummed out of the army, the——poltroon."

"You said the campaign of '96, are you not mistaken in the date?" asked Bateman, with cool gravity.

"Yes, sir, pedagogue; I said the campaign of '96 under Wayne. I mistake no dates, sir; and if I did, your pedagogical pusillanimity disqualifies you for the function of historical correction."

"Wayne's expedition against the Indians was over, and peace was made before '96," said Bateman dryly, as he sat nearly opposite to Bickerton, stirring a copious mixture of butter, molasses, and mush or hasty pudding, which were to be his supper.

"You are a —— liar, you —— pedagogue," roared out the bully; "what the ——— do you know of Wayne's campaigns? Stick to your ferule and your spelling-book, and leave military affairs to gentlemen; they are exterior to your province, sir pedagogue."

"Boys learn history in these days," said Bateman, as he rose from the table, and took down a volume from the mantle piece. After turning over a few leaves he resumed his seat, and said, "here is an epitome of American history, brought down to the year 1810," He then read a short paragraph, which confirmed his assertion, then holding the book towards Bickerton, he said dryly, "that is what my boys learn, sir. Would you like to see it in the book, major?"

"No, you are a —— fool, and an insolent liar, I tell you."

"One mark of a fool," said Bateman, as dryly as ever, "is to fly into a passion and call names about a trifle; and one mark of a liar is, to persevere in a false assertion in the face of evidence to the contrary."

The yankee had no sooner spoken these words, stirring his mush all the while, than the enraged bully lifted the case knife in his hand and flung it violently at Bateman's head. The yankee though seemingly intent upon his mush which he had now thoroughly imbued with the molasses and butter, kept watch, however with a corner of his eye, and dodged the knife as it flew whizzing towards his head, at the same time dropped the spoon he slipped his hand under the plate and adroitly dashed it, mush foremost, plump into the duellist's face. The centre of the reeking mass struck the nose which operating as a wedge, caused the clammy supper of the yankee to spread itself with accommodating facility over the whole fiery visage of the duellist, and to stop up every hole and fill up every hollow in said visage—the eyes and ears not excepted. A considerable quantity too became entangled in the very huge bushy whiskers; the superfluity gliding down with the plate made a lodgment in the bosom and manifold convolutions of the frill that stuck out prominently in front. Happily for the duellist, the operation of mixing and compounding the plaster had so reduced its temperature that it was not quite scalding hot, and the eyelids had instinctively closed themselves on the approach of the slap-dashing application, or those lately glaring eye-balls would never again have directed a pistol-ball at the heart of an adversary.

He was led by the hand into the back porch, where, after fifteen minutes' washing, the orifices and cavaties of his face were again cleared of the adhesive mixture, and he was able again to see, hear, smell and speak.

When he found his organs free, though his nose still wept blood from the rude contact of the heavy pewter plate, he began to roar out a torrent of oaths, imprecations and threats against the yankee, who had began to feed his hunger upon a second plate of hasty pudding, as if nothing had happened. In spite of the entreaties of the company, the raving bully started up stairs for his pistols, swearing in a most awful manner that he would shoot the offending pedagogue upon the spot.

Presently he was heard on his return cursing and swearing as violently as ever. "Fly Bateman, fly," said the company, "he will shoot you." "I guess not," said the yankee, "but I may have to mend his manners with something harder than hasty pudding." So saying he picked up a heavy fire-shovel at the hearth, and posted himself behind the door by which Bickerton would enter.

While some were endeavoring to dissuade the furious bully from his purpose, the yankee said to those in the room with him; "Tell him to challenge me; I will meet him in the field of honor." When his message was first delivered to the duellist, he only raved and swore the more fiercely, and demanded immediate access to the insolent pedagogue that he might drive a ball through his heart. He was gradually reduced to reason, however, by the argument of the lawyer in the party, who told him that if he killed the yankee now, he would be liable to punishment as a murderer, but that he might shoot him on the field of honor without getting himself into the fangs of the law. The duellist felt the force of the argument; for in those days even the honorable gentleman in a fine coat and a ruffled shirt, was in some danger of being hanged for wilful murder.—Now—only the friendless and beggarly murderers are liable to the gallows. But then as now, the murderer in a duel had nothing to fear from the law, but might be raised to the highest honors by the popular favor. Therefore Bickerton, being somewhat cooled by this argument, and believing that he could satiate his malice as certainly in a duel as by instant assassination, returned to his room and penned a challenge in duel form, according to the code of honor. Bateman promptly accepted it; to the dismay of his friends, who now looked upon him as no better than a dead man. He had a right as the challenged party to prescribe the terms of the fight. They were to meet at the next day at the great Indian mound about half a mile from the town, in a desert forest, they were to have no seconds, but to stand ten yards apart, and either of them might fire at pleasure, after calling out to the other "stop, take care of yourself." Their friends might stand fifty yards off, to see that these terms were duly observed, but were not to interfere unless they were violated. Nearly every man wished the yankee success, but expected only to see him killed at the first fire.

The duellist demurred at first at the extraordinary terms prescribed by the school master, but he finally acceded to them, feeling sure of his own quickness of hand, and doubted not but that he could pierce the heart whose blood he so eagerly thirsted for.

So on the next day, at the appointed hour, the redoubtable major strutted forth to the field of honor, with a well charged brace of pistols wrapped in a handkerchief and stuck under his left arm.—When in sight of the mound, he cast his eyes about in search of his adversary, but no yankee appeared. He moved slowly onwards, keeping a sharp look out for his man, and licking his lips in preparation for the expected feast of blood. The forest was always dusky with the shade in that place, and the morning fog still lingered in its damp recesses. When he came so near the mound as to see it and the trees about it distinctly, he was certain that the yankee had not arrived, and began with feelings of disappointed revenge to curse him aloud for a cowardly knave, a base poltroon and a chicken-hearted white-livered pedagogue.

He was pouring forth these imprecations, and lenghtened them out with all the choisest terms in the vocabulary of honorable bullies, when he was stopped in mid career by an unexpected phenomenon. On reaching a little open plot near the mound, he stuck his foot against a long pole that had been laid across the path, and at the same instant a voice of thunder smote his ears with the words "Stop! take care of yourself." He did stop in great surprise, and looked towards the place from where the voice had come, but he saw only the huge trunk of a tree that stood by the mound, ten yards from the pole at which he stopped. He had no time for deliberation; the voice thundered again, "Take care of yourself, I will blow your brains out;" and now he saw distinctly the muzzle of a great blunderbuss pointed towards him from behind the tree, and the yankee's eye at the butt, taking aim, while the tree concealed his body. The duellist was taken so off his guard, that he stood confounded for an instant, but as the expected shot did not come, he began to fumble about for his pistols, but he no sooner began to unwrap them, than the yankee called out in a decided tone, "Drop your pistols, or I'll shoot you." The bully hesitated. "Drop 'em, I tell you, or I'll blow nine buckshot into you as soon as I count three, mind now, one,—two,—th———." He had cocked his musket, and taken what the duellist saw was a sure aim. Before the word three was pronounced, the handkerchief containing the pistols fell to the ground, whether by accident, by a paralysis of the duellist's nerves, or by an act of his will, we shall not undertake to say, however the pistols fell.

"Now," said the yankee, stepping out from behind the tree, with his fingers still on the trigger, but the wide muzzle of his fire-lock elevated at the angle of thirty degrees,—"you have but one way to save your life. Right about face!" The duellist began to remonstrate. "Face about I tell you, or I'll drive a load of buckshot through you," and he began to level his musket as he advanced upon his adversary. The duellist faced about like a soldier. 'Very well: forward march!—march, I tell you—straight home: or tarnation seize me if I don't riddle you with buckshot, before I count three—one!—two!—.' The duellist did not wait for the next word, the angry voice was close behind him, and the deep mouthed blunderbuss within two yards of his back. He began to march with slow and rather halting steps, very different from his usual strut. The yankee followed with all gravity.—The company in the neighboring woods fell in the rear, tittering at the strange result of the duel. The line of march was pursued without intermission: for whenever the duellist attempted to halt or speak, the angry voice of the yankee drove him on with threats of buck-shot.

When they entered the town, Bateman began with solemn face and voice to sing—

'Yankee doodle came to town,
To buy a keg o' brandy;'

"Mind your steps there, or I'll blow your brains out."

Yankee doodle doodle doo,
Yankee doodle dandy.

Now it happened to be muster day for a battalion of militia, and the streets were filled up with people of all sorts from the country. When the crowd saw the terrible duellist with thunder and lightning in his face, walking along before the dry-visaged schoolmaster, and the schoolmaster with a large musket solemnly chanting yankee doodle, & marching coolly as if he drove an ox-cart, they gathered themselves about them with wonder and curiosity, to see what these things mean! When the bully reached the tavern door hundreds had assembled. Mounting the platform before the door, he turned to address his indignant remonstrance to the multitude. Before he could utter a word the yankee called out, "Halt! Face to the left; and tell the people, what a yankee trick I have played you."

"Yes," roared out Bickerton, glad to vent his raging indignation—"a derogatory, dishonorable, ungentlemanly advantage! Fellow citizens, I appeal to you and to the laws of honor. This disrepatable pedagogue had the audacious temerity and intolerable insolence, last night, to discharge into my face—yes, mine fellow citizens, the foul and slimy ingredients of his supper:—for which I would have punished him instanter, but for the intercession of the company. But to vindicate my outraged honor, I condescended to demand of him the satisfaction of a gentleman and he with most knavish design accepted my cartel.

"In the morning at the appointed hour, I repaired to the field of honor, equipped as gentlemen usually are for honorable combat. When I arrived at the place, the dastardly poltroon was invisibly concealed behind a giant son of the forest, armed with a musket enormously charged with nine buck shot; and before we had measured the ground or taken our positions, or the skulking dastard even showed his person, he presented his musket and threatened to shoot me, if I did not drop my pistols and return to town. In attempting to unwrap my pistols they slipped out of my hands, and thus was I exposed unarmed to the dastardly attack of this pedagogical poltroon with his dishonorable musket charged with an enormous quantity of buckshot. I turned indignantly from this contemptible attempt at assassination, and returned home, that I might, on a subsequent occasion, vindicate my outraged honor, and in public and ostensible conflict, inflict a larcerating flagellation upon the pedagogical author of this outrageous violation of the code of honor, heretofore inviolably observed by all who are entitled to the honorable appellation of gentleman."

When the duellist had concluded his speech, Jedediah soberly replied in these words: "Fellow citizens; I long bore with patience the unprovoked derision and insults of this professed duellist.—Last night he assailed me at supper-table with the most wanton abuse; which I parried with nothing but jests, until he threw a case knife at my head; I then returned the compliment by dashing my plate full of molasses and hasty pudding into his face. For this he challenged me to fight a duel. I accepted the challenge on these conditions and no other, that we were to stand ten yards apart, without seconds, and either of us might fire at pleasure after calling out, 'Stop!—take care of yourself.' Nothing was said about the sort of arms, he chose his favorite pistols, I prefered this musket. I stood behind a tree till he came to the mark I had set just ten yards off. I then called out to him, 'Stop—take care.' I had then a right by the terms to fire; but I left it to his choice either to take nine buck shot from my gun, or to drop his pistols and march back to town. He wisely chose the latter, and you all bear me witness that I have brought him from the field of honor, safe and sound; and that is more than he would have done for me, if he had been in my place and I in his. And now, to show that I meant to take no unfair advantages, I will change situations with him before you all. I will give him the musket, and let him, if he can, drive me as I drove him; or if he prefers to shoot me, as I guess from his looks that he does, then let him take his revenge, and put nine buckshot into me if he can." So saying, Jedediah turned to the duellist, and throwing the musket, said—"Here, take the gun and try your luck with it; turn about is fair play."

Bickerton snatched up the musket at his feet, cocked it with a grunt of malignant satisfaction, took aim at the yankee's breast, and pulled the trigger. "Snap," went the rusty old firelock. "Try her again, major," said the yankee. The duellist gritted his teeth as he cocked the gun the second time. Again he took aim and pulled the trigger. 'Snap,' went the rusty old musket with a duller sound than before. Now a phenomenon occurred.—The wooden face of the yankee was once wrought into a smile, and some affirmed that he actually laughed, though others thought that to be impossible. But the enraged bully began to smell a rat. He examined the capacious pan of the old fire lock. He found nothing in it but yellow rust. He hastily turned the muzzle to his mouth and blew into it. The air whistled through the touch hole; the old musket was not even charged; the nine buck-shot were all imaginary. He threw down the harmless old iron with a yell of blasphemy, and ran up to his room, while shouts of laughter convulsed the assembled multitude.

Half an hour afterwards, the chap-fallen duellist was seen on his horse trying to steal out of town by a back lane. He was pursued by hundreds with claps and shouts of derision, till he had galloped out of sight. The people of that town never again saw the face of Major Alonzo Dashwood Bickerton, the duellist.

Whither he went or how he fared,
Nobody knew and nobody cared.

THE POLITICIAN'S USE OF RELIGION..—It would be difficult to say what selfish and sinister ends religion has not been made subservient; history is replete with every variety of subversion, and for as many purposes—frequently for the most vile and iniquitous. The blood-drenched plains of Europe, the intrigues of courts, the machinations of demagogues and tyrants, and the demonish spirit of intolerance, have each in turn been mantled with a pseudo religion, and the holy sanctity claimed for the most unholy purposes. Whether or not Shakespeare says truly, "The devil can quote scripture for his purpose," it is certain that his emissaries have done it for ages, and may continue to do it to some extent to the end of time.

The meanest and most odious subversion that religion has saddled upon it in these days, is that wrought by politicians for the advancement of party. Several palpable instances occurred during the two last elections in New York, where an effort was made to cause a whole ticket, and we fear that too much disposition is manifested to carry the design to still greater lengths in that city.—In this city several individual instances have come under our notice, but the disgust and animadversion by which they were met, has given those who would have profited by them, reason to understand that such a proceeding will not be tolerated here. This country is the very last in which the least intolerance should be suffered to exist—the very last in which men should be proscribed for opinion's sake, or faith and politics be permitted to entwine around each other. —Jew or Gentile—the same scrupulousness adherence to an entire separation is necessary, and must be preserved.

The disgraceful appeals that are, of late, frequently to be found in several leading partizan prints, to a religious sect, to arouse their prejudicies and passions, and thus enlist them under a party banner, should be frowned upon by every reader, whether friendly to the sect or not We know that there is not a man from Maine to Georgia, who loves his country —we care not of what party he is—that could desire to see religious strife introduced into our political contests; and we might hope better things than such appeals from every intelligent editor in the country. It is a lesson to us, however, and serves to convince how far interested politicians will go to ensure their ends.

Every honest, reflecting man, would rather that his party should be prostrated for ever, than that it should succeed upon the popularity of religion. God forbid! that one faith should ever be arrayed against another in this land, for such purposes. It is too pregnant with danger and devastation, and too closely allied to the horrid strifes which have rent the Old World, and destroyed the vitality of religion and the virtues of governments for centuries.

The appeals, to which we have alluded are too frequent to pass unnoticed, and not to call for a manifestation of disgust from all to whom they came, and particularly from those to whom they apply.—The unprincipled creature who could make them, should be held up to the scorn of the land, as an enemy of his country—of her laws—and of the very sect for which he professes a love. We are for whatever will tend to perpetuate, and not degrade and destroy, free religion and equal rights, as political demagogueism will, and hence the propriety of keeping every sect free from its debasing influence.—Phil. Chron.

PENALTY OF AN ELOPEMENT.—A year since a letter was published from Montreal announcing the elopement of Mrs. Harris, wife of Captain Harris, 24th regiment, with E. D. David, Esq., of Montreal, barrister, and Major in the Montreal Cavalry. On the 6th ult. the action commenced by Capt. Harris against Mr. Davis was tried in Montreal, and resulted in a verdict for thirty thousand dollars damages.

MORE FORGERIES.—The Nashville Whig of the 30th ult. says—There were rumors in town yesterday of forgeries to the amount of six or seven thousand dollars in the Notes Discounted of the principal Bank of Tennessee. The spurious notes were manufactured in the adjoining counties of Wilson and Rutherford and sent in for discount last fall, with the forged recommendation, in pencil, of the county directors, who it was known by the parties engaged in the villainy would not be in attendance at the Board to detect the fraud. Other particulars we do not feel at liberty to go into, until the facts can be thoroughly sifted by the officers of the Bank.

ENLARGEMENT

OF THE

Saturday Evening Post.

THE PHILADELPHIA MAMMOTH.

A NEW volume of this well established and highly popular family newspaper, GREATLY IMPROVED and improved with entirely new type, commenced May 1st, 1841. The paper is printed in beautiful type, and has received the praise of many editors of taste, as "the handsomest family sheet in the Union." Our efforts have been directed to the combining of beauty and simplicity with utility and taste. The Post is printed on stout white paper, rendering it neat and durable for filing. It is issued at the old established rate of two dollars per annum CASH, or three dollars if not paid in advance, and may truly be said, now that it is enlarged, to be the

at the price it is sold. It has all the merits, and none of the defects of the large papers of the day, for while the earliest literary matter may be found in its columns, a judicious compilation of domestic and foreing news, with the usual variety of wit and sentiment, will render it a better family paper. The proprietors make no flourish of trumpets about the size and cheapness of the paper, or the firm basis upon which the "Ol Post" stands. It is not necessary. It has born the battle and the breeze for the last TWENTY ONE YEARS, and has held its position in the midst of tottering and crumbling rivals, and has faced and buried all kinds of opponents.

THE MODE OF CONDUCTING IT.

The proprietors having for a long time deprecated the floods of foreign literature, indiscriminately re-published in this country, have determined, without altogether neglecting this field, to select nothing but the choicest tales and sketches, from the English periodicals; and they have made arrangements by which they can furnish these to their subscribers in advance of every contemporary. The editors will also keep an eye to the best American tales afloat, giving always the preference to the writers of their own country. We shall still continue the plan of giving original stories from popular American writers. The well known Author of "Cruizing in the Last War," opened the volume with the first of a new series of thrilling nautical tales. In addition to the old, a number of new Contributors will enrich its columns with choice and entertaining original articles. In order that the SATURDAY EVENING POST may maintain its high position, as the

in the United States, arrangements have been made for a regular supply of choice and entertaining historical sketches, poetry, &c. We have been publishing for months past an unbroken series of choice original stories which have been procured at great cost, and have been widely copied and read. These we shall continue.

THE NEWS DEPARTMENT.

While it shall be the care of the proprietors to preserve for the paper, a high literary reputation, the great desideratum for a family newspaper, a carefully selected news department, shall not be made second in interest or importance. While every thing of note that is passing either in this country or in Europe shall be carefully collected or collated for our readers, a due regard shall be paid to the character of the matter. So that the paper may be with safety and propriety introduced and read in the family circle.

THE LADIES' DEPARTMENT will still be preserved, shall be choice and select, and shall receive strict attention. It shall be the effort of the editors to embrace in this department such selections of the floating literature of the day, as may be in an especial manner suited to the instruction and amusement of the female sex, and to combine the fashionable with the truly useful and good.

Such things as may suit that important and large class of our subscribers, will not be overlooked. In order to gratify, as much as possible, the laudable desire of our readers, a portion of our attention will be devoted to the collection and diffusion of such news as may seem IMPORTANT TO AGRICULTURALISTS, and the population resident without the confines of our great cities. The state of the markets and the fluctuations in the prices, will be regularly and what is of more moment, correctly given.

We determined at the outset, that while the paper continued under our control, it should be

and that as news and literary journalists, we had nothing to do with the matter; this determination has been strictly and rigidly adhered to, and while we shall continue to give our readers such public documents as may be deemed of interest to all, and such a history of the progress of political events, as are strictly in keeping with our duty, and the character of our paper, we shall studiously and thoroughly avoid any contamination of partizan politics.

THE TERMS.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST will be furnished at the exceedingly low price of TWO DOLLARS per annum, invariably in advance. We will send a copy to any person who may wish to see a specimen, by giving notice, post paid.

INDUCEMENT TO CLUBS.

As friends and neighbors often wish to club together to facilitate remittances, we will send 3 copies for $5 in advance, post paid,
7 do. for $10 do. do.

NO NEW SUBSCRIBERS RECEIVED WITHOUT THE MONEY.

We have no desire to extend our list but with cash subscribers, and the paper is sufficiently established to enable us to exert compliance with this golden rule. The Post is made worth more than the money, and it must be paid by those who wish the paper.

To those who wish to subscribe, we would say, that the safest plan is to enclose the money in a letter and direct to us. Most postmasters will frank their letters if relating to nothing but the business of the office, and all postmasters who will be kind enough to do so, we shall be pleased to acknowledge as agents.

Editors who may wish to exchange, will please copy, and forward a number of their paper marked with ink, to this office, and their favor shall be promptly acknowledged without fraud or delay, as is but too often the case. Address,

NO. II.

THE NATURE, DIVERSITY AND LIMITS OF EVIDENCE.

...t positive and actual existence must be the ...l source of all evidence, and the real foun... knowledge, that evidence must be always ...d from existence,—and, that it is not pos... existence to be derived from evidence, ...ter of intuitive conviction. No mathe... demonstration can be rendered more ...s or more convincing to the senses, than is ...th of the foregoing proposition to the hu... understanding. It is, at the same time, ...y demonstrable, that positive and real ex... must uniformly and of necessity imply ...idence of existence, that it is not possible ...y thing to exist, without affording by its ...existence, the best, and indeed the only ...nate evidence of its being; and, lastly, that ...gitimate evidence must be derived either ...diately or mediately from real and positive ...nce. The truth of the foregoing propo... is so perfectly intuitive, that no man ev... attempted to ascribe either evidence or ...edge to any other source than that of actu... relative existence, except by asserting the ...gination and eternity of knowledge, which ... clearly amount to this at the last, viz: ...if real existence be not the real origin of ...nce and knowledge, knowledge and evidence ... be absolutely unoriginated. Every thing ...ual existence, must of necessity be under ...mmediate cognizance of the Deity, and ...fore the primitive sources of all knowledge ... be always accessible to His infinite mind. ...ght, indeed, be presumed, in relation to all ...ed beings, that every act of creation itself ... of necessity imply in the Deity both a per... on of its existence, and a perfect knowledge ... nature and its properties; and yet it is not ... the act of creating such beings, but with ...act of their existence, that we must associ... ...e knowledge of their nature and properties. ...e order of time, the fact of their existence, ...he knowledge of their natures and proper... ...are co-eval and co-existent; but in the or... ...f nature, the fact of their existence is con... ...nt to the act which gave them their being; ...he knowledge of their existence and nature, ...is consequence to the fact of their actual ...ence. The real difference in all such cases, ...between the act of creation, in the process ... operation, and created production revealed ...mplete and formal existence.

...e evidence of potentiality, is not, in reality, ...erent evidence from that of actual existence; ...ther it be applied to the Deity or to finite ...gs; inasmuch as all potentiality has an ac... existence in all beings, whether finite or in..., to whom it may respectively belong. Pow... actual operation, and power in the state of ...t ability, are equally real and equally in ...g: so that even the knowledge of possibilties, ..., in reality, rest upon fact, and upon the ...anent basis of actual existence. The evi... of purpose, in like manner is, in reality, ...evidence of fact and actual existence; for ...ough mental purposes have only a relative ...tence, yet in the beings who are the authors ...hese purposes, the purposes themselves have ...al an existence as the beings who formed ...n. It therefore of necessity will follow, in rela... to even mental purposes, that their evidence ...t be derived from their actual existence, and ... their existence alone is the native source of ...the evidence of their being. Prescience or ...knowledge can have only a relative bearing up... the objects of its anticipation; it cannot imply ... some future thing does now actually exist: but ...ly that some future thing will hereafter proba... or certainly transpire, in consequence of some ...wn cause which is at present in actual exis... ...ce. The knowledge therefore is of something ...ctual existence, and the prescience is of some... ...g that will hereafter probably or certainly ...spire: but the prescience is derived from ...cisely the same source as the knowledge; only ... evidence in the one case is mediate, and ...the other it is immediate. Evidence there... is uniformly derived from actual existence, ...ather the inquiry be instituted concerning ...t or potentiality, or mental purpose: and if ... doctrine of an unoriginated and eternal pre... ...ence be not supported by the evidence of ac... existence presented under one of its forms, ...deduced by infallible inference from actual ...stence, the theory must of necessity fall to the ...und.

...Knowledge in all finite beings, and particular ...human beings, must of necessity be limited, ...cause their access to the primitive sources of ...dence is exceedingly partial. But although ...ir real and positive knowledge must be con... ...ed within the range of their own personal and ...ual observation, or, in other words, to their ...ans of access to the primitive evidence of ...ngs; yet there is ... knowledge of a secondary ...ler which is excogitated by the labor of their ...n minds, in the way of mental deduction from ...mitive evidence; and there is a knowledge of ...third order, which is derived from the testimo... of others, and is therefore denominated faith. ...t it is easy to perceive, or rather, it is almost ...possible not to discern, that both deduction ...d faith must be originally derived from actual ...d immediate observation, which is the native ...d primary evidence of all existence.

The original sources of human knowledge are ...ree only, viz: that of our animal senses, that ... mental deduction, and that of testimony or ...ith. The evidence of our animal senses has ...en divided into mathematical demonstration and sensible proof; and they have been placed in this order, because it has been said that mathematical demonstration cannot possibly deceive us, but that sensible proof may be sometimes illusive. Mathematical demonstration is effected by the introduction of a rule or medium between the premises and the conclusions, for the purpose of giving precision and truth to our investigations: as when, by the actual introduction of four different objects, we demonstrate that two and two put together make the sum of four; and by the application of a pair of compasses to two different diagrams, we demonstrate that, the three angles of an equilateral triangle are equal to two right angles. But when these and other problems, have been once solved by an actual experiment, the mind can easily recal the ideas and repeat the experiment by a mental operation. It has indeed been asserted, that our senses may possible deceive us; as when we mistake the real magnitude or distance of visible and distant objects; but then it is to be remembered that the error, in such cases, does not belong to the notices of the senses, but to the mental deduction which the mind infers from those notices. The sense of heat and cold, and the perception and impression of external objects are as real and correct as any mathematical diagram, but the inference which the mind deduces from such premises are sometimes drawn without the interposition of a process, like that of mathematical demonstration, and are therefore liable to be erroneous. But the possibility of forming an erroneous judgment, where we either neglect or have not the means of applying a test like that of mathematical demonstration, does by no means invalidate the evidence of our senses; because every mathematical demonstration is, after all, nothing more than sensible proof. The second division of evidence is that of mental deduction, which not only applies to all scientific ratiocination, but it equally applies to all mental and moral intuition. Mental deduction is of two kinds: and is either synthetical, which applies the summing up of particulars into one general amount; or it is analytical, which implies the separation of general truths into the particulars of which they are composed. In this department of evidence, all correct thinking amounts to mental demonstration, inasmuch as things equally understood must be equally plain, and equally demonstrable. All cases that will admit of mental demonstration, are cases of absolute certainty, and are as infallible as any mathematical demonstraion can be rendered. Locke has said, that, where the agreement or disagreement of any thing is plainly and clearly perceived, it is called demonstration. And Granville has said, the grand articles of our belief are as demonstrable as geometry. That mere negation could not have produced any positive existence is a matter of mental deduction, and it is as obvious as it is certain: and that this material world could not have bestowed upon itself the gift of existence, is equally demonstrable: that since, at the present moment, something is in actual existence, something must always have been in existence; and that all finite existence must owe its being to an infinite cause, is as demonstrable as any mathematical problem can possibly be rendered. It is true the Apostle has said, that "through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God."

That the world must have been created, by some means, is a subject of mental intuition, and absolute certainty: but that the worlds were made by the word of God; that he said, Let there be light and there was light, is not within the limits of mental deduction but it has been made known to mankind by revelation from heaven. The Apostle also inculcates, that through faith we understand that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear. Altho' it is instuitively certain that the matter of which this world is composed, could not have been eternal; yet, whether the matter of which this world is composed was original or renovated, could never have been discovered by the human mind: and therefore it is by faith we understand that the things which are seen were not made of things which do appear. One species of mental certainty may be denominated moral intuition, in which we perceive, by immediate conviction, the moral truth or falsehood of any proposition, and that without any formal process of ratiocination. As, for instance, that an infinite being must be absolutely perfect, and alike incapable of physical, mental, and moral error; or that, if all moral actions and the final issue of human life be the objects of a certain prescience, it is not possible for either of them to be contingent or for human beings to be morally free.

The third and last division of evidence is, the evidence of testimony, which if the testimony be valid, must be derived originally from the primitive source of all evidence, even from actual and real existence, although it may be delivered either by the original observer, or by any subsequent and subordinate testator, in such cases, the fact or doctrine which is testified or asserted may itself be correct, and true, and certain; but the evidence afforded by testimony of that fact or doctrine is of an inferior order to that of sensible proof, and inferior to that of mental deduction. Sensible proof, and mental deduction, are both of the nature of absolute certainty, but the evidence of testimony can never arrive at a certain evidence, because it will always be possible for the testator himself to be either a treacherous or an incompetent witness. Therefore the evidence of testimony is called faith, and those of sensible proof and mental deduction are called knowledge. From the foregoing remarks it would clearly appear, that the evidence of testimony will not endure the same testation, as those of sensible and mental demonstration, and therefore it is no wonder that persons who require the demonstration of certainty in support of the evidence of testimony, should be betrayed into the sloth of an universal scepticism.

There are many things which in popular speech are denominated certainties, but which are by no means supported by the irrefragable evidence of absolute certainty, and which therefore belong to the class of probable events. As for instance the rising of the sun on the morning of to-morrow, is regarded by many persons as being a natural and absolute certainty; but if it be only possible for the sun to rise no more after his going down at the close of the present day, then his rising again on a future morning cannot possibly amount to an absolute certainty, for upon the assumption that the sun will certainly rise once more, upon this our globe, after his going down at the close of the present day, then it must be equally certain, that he will rise again a second time, that he will arise at the distance of a week, that he will arise at the distance of a month, of a year, of a century, then, in short, it is absolute certain, that the sun will never go down to rise no more, but will continue to set and rise, in daily rotation, without interruption, and without an end.

There is a description of probabilities, of so exalted a character, as to be usually denominated moral certainties; because the evidence by which they are supported, is such as must justify and command our assent, and such as will render them worthy to be acted upon in real life, and even to be trusted in the momentous concerns of our eternal salvation. Of this description are the reports of there having been such a person as Alexander, and there having been such as Julius Cæsar, and there having been such a person as Jesus of Nazereth. For even in the matter of our personal salvation, we walk by faith, and not by sight. It may not be improper in this place to offer a few observations on the evidence of miracles, which I am induced to believe, must be ranked not among probable evidence, however exalted, but among evidence as certain, if not as permanent as these of mental and sensible demonstration.

It has already been observed, that although all competent testimony be derived originally from actual existence, which is the primitive source of all evidence, yet since, in all cases of human testimony, incompetency and fraud are not absolutely impossible, the evidence of testimony can never be ranked with that of demonstration.—But in all cases of accredited miracles, such as are recorded in the Holy Scriptures, we have testimony delivered and confirmed by an agency that is equally incapable of incompetency and fraud. Those persons, therefore, to whom Divine revelation was originally and immediately delivered, and who were witnesses of their miraculous confirmation, had the evidence of absolute and irrefragable certainty, for the truth of the matter revealed: so that all the facts and doctrines of Divine revelation, are supported by evidence which is every way equal to either mental or sensible demonstration. It is true, that when God is the testator, the evidence of testimony will amount to a moral certainty, since, in that case, the testimony is infallible: and yet the evidence of miracles is of an inferior order to that of mathematical and mental demonstration. The evidence of miracles to the person who was the immediate witness of that evidence, must be of a higher description than it can possible be to any subsequent believer; but the evidence of demonstration is equally accessible to every human being. And although the miraculous evidence by which the truth of christianity was originally demonstrated must become less and less accessible to every succeeding generation of christian believers, yet its internal evidence remains immutable, and its collateral evidence must be growing in magnitude with the number of christian converts, the increase of christian piety in the world and the experience and testimony of every happy individual who may die in the Lord.

The nature, and acquisition, and bounds of knowledge; and the competency of knowledge in human beings, will be my next inquiry. JOHN.

Mr. Editor: There are two practices that I depricate, which are common among farmers in this part of the west.

The first to which I refer is the practice of leaving corn in the field until spring; or gathering it only as it is needed through the winter. I would suppose that the difficulty and suffering experienced in gathering corn in the winter as well as the loss sustained by leaving it in the field until spring, should be sufficient to convince any thinking farmer of the inconsistency of such a course, and urge him to use diligence to secure his corn crop in season. The second practice to which I object, is that of leaving sheep run at large.

If you were to take a ride over the ridges in our section, at this season of the year, you would see that our sheep are neither white, brown nor black, but that they are rather of a blue cast, being literally covered with burrs. Ought this so to be? I think not.

The loss of time, trouble and vexation experienced in gathering a large flock of sheep together in the fall season, and in picking the burrs out of their wool in the spring, is a burden, the exemption from which would be sufficient to reward a man for preparing for them tame pasture. I am pretty well persuaded if the old ladies and girls did not pick the wool, more sheep would run in tame pasture. A WESTERN FARMER.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

IOWA CITY, MAY 12, 1841.

Dear Br. Springer: The friends of our Zion will rejoice to hear of the flattering prospects of the Methodist Protestant church on the Western Frontier; which may be very properly considered as one of the outskirts of civilization and christian enterprise.

Since the "secession" from our elder sister, the M. E. Church, my affections and interests have been identified with those of the Methodist Protestant Church, but from the time of my removal to this new and promising country till within a few days, I have stood alone, praying that the Great Head of the Church would open an effectual door, for the introduction of our institutions, and economy, into this field of rich promise to the Christian church.

We believe the "set time" to favor our Zion here has come. Mr. John Libby, a minister of of the M. P. Church has spent a few weeks laboring with us. A small society has been formed with a promise of speedy increase. A lot worth at least $1,000 has been donated by the Territory to our church. We have circulated a subscription paper, for the erection of a house of worship, and by giving a pledge to the citizens that we would obtain some help from abroad, we have obtained $2,000. We propose to build a plain, convenient and substantial edifice of brick, and need $1,000 more to complete it.

In view of the important position we occupy (this being the seat of government for the Territory and future state,) and being voluntary missionaries, and as such are laboring to promote the interests of our society, with the pledge on our part, as God may prosper us, to refund with interest, by assisting others, all that we may receive, we confidentially appeal to the liberal and benevolent of our Church for help.

The corner-stone of the Church has been laid this day, and the citizens have given an unequivocal expression of their predilections in favor of our institutions, not only by their liberal donations, but by the interest manifested in the progress of the building, and the profound attention with which they listened to an exposition of our doctrines and church polity, by Rev. J. Libby, and an able and appropriate address, by His Excellency, Gov. Lucas, the executive of the territory, with other appropriate exercises by ministers of several denominations.

Br. Libby leaves to-morrow, duly authorized by our society to make an appeal to our friends for funds, to complete the church, and we trust our preachers will "help him on his way," and that our friends will gladden our hearts and claim our gratitude by their contributions.

Yours, truly,
W. B. SNYDER.

WESTMINISTER, O., MAY 17, 1841.

Br. Springer: We commenced our third quarterly meeting on the eight of this inst., which was protracted for five days. We began this meeting under unpropitious circumstances, owing to the state of the roads and the inclemency of the weather. Brethren from a distance could not attend, consequently we were left without any ministerial aid except from the unstationed ministers. Owing to the infirmities of age, and affliction in his family, Brother Keran was prevented from attending. Dr. Besse was in attendence and his labors were highly appreciated and abundantly blessed.

It may be proper to say that this meeting was held in Unionopolis, at a new meeting house, which was dedicated on the occasion; the Lord of hosts was pleased to own His house and people by the awakening influences of His grace and the conversion of twenty mourners, out of which eleven members were added to the church, making an increase to this circuit, since conference of upwards of one hundred members. Yours, &c.,
JOHN M. YOUNG.

"SWEET HOME."

Among the numerous, interesting and touching compositions, prepared to be sung to the sweet melody called "Home, sweet home," the one found numbered 96 of the first volume of the "Christian Lyre," has always been clothed with peculiar interest to my mind from the circumstances in which it was originally composed, which was some 15 years ago in London, and were as follows: In the city of London there lived, at that time a young gentleman and young lady, both brought up in the lap of affluence, and furnished with what this world is wont to call a finished education. And as they had both embraced Unitarianism, they felt no scruples of conscience in regard to indulging in all the rounds of fashionable dissipation, such as visiting theatres, circuses, balls and watering places, &c., thus literally experiencing the sentiment contained in the original song, called, Home, sweet home," viz:

"Midst pleasures and palaces, tho' we should roam,"
&c.

Their spirits being so congenial and fortunes ample, a mutual attachment sprung up between them and consequently a marriage engagement was entered into. Inasmuch, however, as he was a Major in the English service, the duties of his office rendered it necessary for him occasionally to leave London for months at a time; but whenever he was thus called to leave for a season, the object of his supreme affection on earth, he would invariable request her before separating to sing him his favorite song, "Home, sweet home," which request would be invariably repeated on their first meeting after an absence from each for a season. During his absence from London for some months with the army, a friend of this lady induced her to accompany her to hear an evangelical preacher, who was preaching in one of the city churches with much success, in the midst of a revival of religion, where she was brought under powerful convictions of her awful state as a sinner before God; from which anguish of mind she was happily relieved by an unreserved surrender of herself, through grace, to the dear Redeemer, as the all in all in her salvation. But whilst permitted to walk with Christ as the bridegroom of her soul, in the raptures of her first love, as on the mount of transfiguration, her reflection turned with interest to the soul of him who was the plighted partner of her earthly career, and her ardent prayer to God the Redeemer was, that he also might be converted from all the lying vanities of this delusive world, and set his face Zionwards. While meditating deeply on this subject, the thought arose in her mind as to the most proper method of disclosing to him, on his return, the radical change which had passed upon her immortal soul, as to its dearest interest, since she had last enjoyed his society; and whilst thus musing, she remembered that he was wont, on leaving her, and also on his arrival at home again, as soon as he visited her, after his first salutation, to request her to sing to him his favorite song, "Home, sweet home;" and hence, after devout prayer to God for his guidance, she sat down and penned the following hymn, as expressive of her past experience, her present sentiments, and her blissful anticipations for the future. Having finished the composition, it was not long before her friend arrived, and immediately visited her, and after a joyful salutation, requested her to sing him his favorite song, "Home, sweet home." Upon which she sang to him, with a sweet and tremulous voice, as follows:

"An alien from God, and a stranger to grace,
I wandered through earth, its gay pleasures to trace:
In the pathway of sin I continued to roam,
Unmindful, alas! that it led me from home.
Home, home, sweet, sweet home!
O Jesus conduct me to heaven my home!

"The pleasures of earth I have seen fade away,
They bloom for a season, but soon they decay;
But pleasures more lasting in Jesus are given—
Salvation on earth and a mansion in heaven!
Home, home, sweet, sweet home!
O Saviour prepare me for heaven my home!

"Allure me no longer, ye false glowing charms;
The Saviour invites me, I'll go to his arms;
At the banquet of mercy, I hear there is room
O there may I feast with His children at home!
Home, home, sweet, sweet home!
O Jesus conduct me to heaven, my home!

"Farewell, vain amusements, my follies adieu,
While Jesus, and heaven, and glory I view;
I feast on the pleasures that flow from His throne,
The forestate of heaven, sweet heaven my home!
Home, home, sweet, sweet home!
O when shall I share the fruition of home!

"The days of my exile are passing away,
The time is approaching when Jesus will say;
'Well done faithful servant, sit down on my throne,
And dwell in my presence for ever at home!'
Home, home, sweet, sweet home!
Oh there I shall rest with my Saviour at home!

"Affliction, and sorrow, and death shall be o'er;
The saints shall unite, to be parted no more;
Their loud hallelujahs fill heaven's high dome,
They dwell with the Saviour forever at home!
Home, home, sweet, sweet home!
They dwell with the Saviour forever at home!"

The singing of such truly spiritual sentiments roused the native enmity of his heart, and he asked her with sternness: "How can you, knowing as you do my religious views, advance such sentiments to me, as those you have just sung?" To which she mildly, but firmly replied: "I advanced them as the sincere sentiments of my soul." Upon which he arose from his seat, and left the room abruptly in a passion. The next evening he determined to visit her again, and demand an explanation of her sentiments, and unless she at once relinquished what he imagined to be her enthusiasm, he would immediately announce to her that their contemplated union must be relinquished. The evening arrived, and firm to his purpose, he visited her, where she received him with her wonted sweetness of manner. After they were seated together on the sofa, he requested her to inform him of the manner in which this, to him, disagreeable change had been effected in her mind since his absence from London. She then, in a meek and humble manner, stated to him through what means she had been brought from death unto life, through the preaching of the Gospel of a crucified Redeemer, and stated to him, in this connexion, "that when I separated with you at your last departure from London, you occupied my supreme affections; but since that time I have given the Saviour my heart, 'as the chief among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely.' And now, to speak with Christian candor, if you are willing to accept of the second place in my heart's affections—my Saviour occupying the first—I am still willing to enter in due time with you into the nearest and dearest of all earthly relations. If, however, these terms do not meet with your approbation, painful as it may be to flesh and blood, I must bid you a final adieu."

This faithful representation, accompanied as it was with her meekness of manner, and the still small voice of the Holy Spirit, struck him like a dart, and he fell from the sofa, and called anxiously to God for mercy. He earnestly requested her to pray to God to have mercy on his poor perishing soul. This she gladly consented to do; and sent also for a faithful minister of the Gospel to converse and pray with him; and after days and nights of agony, he at last found peace in believing, and united with her in celebrating the Saviour's dying love in that same evangelical church where she first found the Saviour to be gracious to her soul. They were, moreover, happily united in the bonds of holy matrimony; and possessing ample means, they became as notorious in their career of doing good, especially to the poor and afflicted, as they had been in the days of their impenitence in their indulgence in the pleasures of sin, which last but for a fleeting season.—*Ch. PRESENTATION OF THE TIPPECANOE FLAG.

Interesting Correspondence.

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

New York, May 1, 1841.

In May last, on the Tippecanoe battle ground, in presence of some thirty thousand people, I was entrusted by the surviving soldiers of that memorable field with the flag that was in the midst and thickest of the strife, which I was commanded to take to this commercial metropolis, to be displayed here, before our fellow citizens, as a living, speaking emblem of the valor of their old commander, and of the perils he had undergone. When the political contest was over, (in which his courage had been questioned) and the People had settled him as President in the White House at Washington, I was also to bear it there, and, in the name of his fellow-soldiers, request him to deposite it among the honored trophies of the Republic. I promised on that ground to execute this commission, and with an earnest conviction of coming success—that the forty-two pounder of the Empire State should herald its arrival there, but, in the midst of scenes so eventful as those of March, I put off the duty, in the hope of a more quiet day, when, now, alas! there is the quiet of the grave!

I see, therefore, no way so proper to obey the orders of the brave men of Tippecanoe, as to lay this flag before you, the successor, for whom were the dying injunctions of their illustrious Chief, and upon whom his office, and I trust his spirit, has fallen, with the request that you will carry out the wish of his compatriots in arms by depositing it among the trophies of the Republic. I beg you, in their names, most tenderly to cherish it. Other flags of our country-men have, no doubt, been as gallantly defended, and were as glorious on land or sea; but, while they may have won but a single ship, or a single field, this has the high honor of winning whole States, of conquering empires, indeed. An old Eagle like this, borne by the pioneers of the wilderness, that has added to the reign of the cross, the reign of liberty and law, becomes a holy emblem, with its in hoc signo vinces upon it, crying out, as form the spirit of the past to the future, and which, as the country becomes older and greater, becomes to all posterity holier and dearer.

I have the honor to be,
Yours, respectfully,
JAMES BROOKS.

THE PRESIDENT'S REPLY.

TO JAMES BROOKS, ESQ.

Washington, May 4, 1841.

"The flag which was in the midst and thickest of the strife," and was committed to your care on the Tippecanoe battle ground by the surviving soldiers of that memoriable field, and which they commanded you to bear to this metropolis as a speaking emblem of the valor of their old commander, and of the perils he had undergone, has been delivered over to my hands and will be placed by me among the honored trophies of the Republic. The account which was given me some years ago, by the gallant Ensign, now no more, who upheld that banner amid the perils of the fight, had prepared me to expect to see it as it is, gashed by the tomahawk and rent by balls. That Ensign alone, of all the officers, with but twenty men of the gallant company over which, when the sun went down, that flag so proudly waved, survived to tell in the morning of the hazards of that terrible night. From that brave soldier, who afterwards held high place in the hearts of the people of Indiana, I learned properly to appreciate the fearless bearing and noble conduct of the patriotic citizen who has so recently exchanged this earthly tabernacle of clay for one that endureth forever. Death is the common heritage of all mankind; but so to live as that the darkness of the grave shall not obscure our names, and that they be placed in close association with the names of the great and good who have gone before and who are to come after us, makes death itself a consummation rather to be wished than feared, and throws a light of glory over the grave. Such now, is the condition of the "old commander" into whose hands, when you received this flag, you so joyously anticipated its delivery. His deeds are now "enrolled in the Capitol," and this banner shall be preserved as a memorial of a battle well fought, and of a victory most nobly won.

I pray you, sir, to accept the assurance of my great respect, JOHN TYLER.

The bearer of the flag at the battle of Tippecanoe, alluded to in the above reply of the President, some of our readers may not recollect, was Ensign TIPTON, a Tennesseean by birth, who started from home with only his axe for a patrimony, and who subsequently became a Senator in the Congress of the United States, and one of the most distinguished men in Indiana. Of him the anecdote is narrated; we have seen in public Journals, where Gen. Harrison is represented as riding up in the heat of the battle, inquiring of young Tipton, "Where is your captain?" "Dead! sir." "Your lieutenant?" "Dead! sir." "Your second lieutenant?" "Dead! sir." "Your ensign?" "He stands before you!" where Tipton then stood, holding and defending this very flag, but so covered with dirt and besmeared with blood that Gen. Harrison scarcely knew him. "Hold on," said Harrison, "for a moment longer; I will reinforce you;" and he rode off and led up there the company of Capt. Robb, by which time or soon after, of the seventy-five men under Capt. Spencer, there was only ten or twelve left not killed or wounded: in this company was this flag.—Nat. Int.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... JUNE 2, 1841.

We call the attention of our Methodist readers to the communication, on our first page, from W. B. Snyder, of Iowa city, and commend their case to the liberality of our readers, on whom this agent, referred to, therein, may call. We have not the pleasure of an acquaintance with this agent, but we are well acquainted with Br. S. and know him to be entirely trust-worthy. We hope our friends will do all they can to assist this enterprise.

We are pleased, from the reference made to him, in Br. Snyder's letter, to have our former good opinion of Gov. Lucas confirmed. His Excellency, we believe, is, or used to be a member of the M. E. Church, but very liberal in his religious opinions. And we have heard, indirectly, from him, expressing himself friendly to our principles, as a church. He is not like some democrats of our acquaintance, raving republicans in state matters, and yet go the whole hog for an iron despotism in the church. The governor's conduct is consistent on this subject.—We are gratified to see that he participated in the ceremonies of laying the foundation of the Iowa city church. It is evidence of his liberality of principle.

Evening Signal, N.Y.—We have enjoyed the daily visit of this sheet for some time past, and regret to hear that it is to be, in future, merged in the Tribune; "evening editions of which will be issued whenever the news is of sufficient consequence to call for them." The Signal was issued from the office of the New World; and the editors assigns as a reason for this transfer, their wish to give their time entirely to the latter paper. We shall feel much at a loss for the Signal. The editor in taking leave of his readers remarks:—

A Congee.—The Evening Signal, while bidding you "farewell," cannot retire into the shades of oblivion without dropping a courtesy and expressing its best acknowledgments. It has spent some pleasant hours in your company and derived no small satisfaction from the approving smiles with which you have sometimes scanned its proportions.

It has made some friends and few foes. To its friends it would say, "God bless you!" and to its foes "Peace be with you!" It bears no malice and asks to be forgiven. It has had a short life and a merry one; it takes leave of existence willingly and of his own accord. Small as it is, though larger than it was, "The New World" has not been found large enough to contain it. Like the child of bountiful parents, who have so many offsprings that they care very little for the brats, and are puzzled to know how to bestow them, it goes into adoptive keeping and takes the name of a new family—so that on "sober second thoughts," it cannot be said to die, but to part with its identity. It resembles Miss Smith who marries Mr. Brown—becomes a femme covert instead of a femme sole, loses its legal rights and assumes matrimonial responsibilities. If it would be deemed strictly modest, it would say that it has consulted its own happiness in its new aliance. It has not like some young ladies married for a support, for, having rich relations, it could have "got along very nicely" in a state of single blessedness. One thing is very certain, it marries with the full consent of all its guardians and has not eloped, though perhaps, that would have been more romantic.

It has, perhaps, said quite enough "situated as it is" as poor Power used to say in the Irish Ambassador. Its departure may not be regretted by many; but a few will be surprised, on these pleasant spring days, to find it both married and missed.

St. Louis Criminal Court—The Murderers Arraigned.—About 11 o'clock on the morning of Monday, the 10th ult., the prisoners were taken into the Criminal Court of St. Louis for the purpose of answering to the indictment found against them by the Grand Jury. To the first indictments, charging Madison with the murder of Jesse Baker, and the others as accessaries, Madison was the first to plead, and answered, "I am not guilty, sir." Seward made the same reply; and Warrick answered, "I assure you I am not guilty, sir."

The second indictment, charging Brown as the murderer of Jacob Weaver, and the others as accessaries, was then read, and the same response given—"I am not guilty." To a question from the Court, whether they had counsel or were able to employ counsel, Madison said, "I expect my master to protect me," adding some explanations, which were interrupted by the Court.

Judge Bowlin then assigned counsel for the prisoners—remarking that he selected the oldest member of the bar.

Warrick and Seward were then remanded to jail, and Madison taken before the Grand Jury.

The St. Louis murderers are now all in custody in that city. Thus, says the Pennant, by that fatuity which ever attends the criminal, have been discovered the perpetrators, through their own means of this monstrous villainy, which, without the confessions of those engaged in it, afford no clue whatever, and the mystery of which never could have been unravelled.

The Savannah correspondent of the Charleston Mercury, states that Lieut. Shubrick, U. S. N., accidently shot away a part of his face, while out on a scout in the Everglades a short time ago.

The Steamer President.—We are not among those who grasp at, and readily devour, all the surmises, stories, and newspaper paragraphs concerning this vessel. We clip the following paragraph from the Easton, Md., Gazette, and publish it with a view of encouraging those who are expecting to hear the best. If she has gone down, all those who embarked in her are undoubtedly safe, as she was well provided with boats. Hope lingers, and will not depart until the positive information comes that she is buried in the depths of the ocean:

"We are informed that Mrs. Cookman, now in this county, received a letter supposed, from the hand-writing of the superscription and the initials on the seal, to be from her husband, the Rev. George C. Cookman, on Thursday last, through our post office. It will be recollected Mr. C. was one of the passengers on board the steam-ship President, about whose fate so much anxiety has been felt. The letter bore the Hull post mark."

We also give the following from a London paper, which gives an instance of a much longer absence:

"A New York packet ship, on her return from London, in the winter of 1835, made the American coast in twenty-five days, encountered there very severe weather, was disabled, fell into the Gulf Stream, and so drifted to the coast of Portugal, after an absence of fourteen weeks from England. A vessel took her in tow and carried to Lisbon, whence she returned to London, after having been lost for 18 weeks, and finally she reached New York in five months after first leaving London."—Phil. Chron.

The Corn Law Question in England. Alluding to this question, the London correspondent of the N. Y. Courier says:—"That the probability of the success of this important proposal for the opening of the English market for foreign nations may be properly understood by the merchants of the United States, it may be proper to be remarked—that to recollect the large majorities in several of the last sessions of Parliament against the motion of Mr. Villiers and other ordinary members of Parliament, is not to perceive the wide difference in the state of the question when the cabinet 'unanimously,' according to Lord John Russell, have determined upon a contrary course. There now is not any reasonable doubt that the resolutions will be carried in the House of Commons; and if thrown out of the Lords, that a new House of Commons will be composed so as to force the measure into a law. Some parties, however, anticipate less difficulty in the House of Lords—the Peers being thought to be too sensible of the utter impossibility of resisting the whole nation in this change, and of the redemption of popularity which may be the result of an apparently willing submission to that which is held to be a large diminution of the value of their landed estates; to which is to be added the circumstances that great numbers of the Peers have been much distressed within the last few years, by the difficulty of raising money by way of mortgages on estates—may be much reduced in value by a change in the corn laws—the agitation on this question being therefore amongst such persons very greatly desired to be set at rest."—Bicknell.

The Money Market.—Money continued easy in our city, during the week which has just closed. In several instances first rate paper was discounted as low as 7 per cent. per annum; and the rates generally range from 7 to 10 per cent. The Bank question, as connected with the Relief Bill, is still unadjusted. Our daily journals have teemed with communications upon the subject—some earnestly in favor of the acceptance of the bill by the Banks, and others as decidedly adverse to such a step. Only two of the country Banks have thus far issued small notes—namely, the Harrisburg Bank, and the Exchange of Pittsburg. We learn, however, that others in the interior are making preparations for such issues, and also that one or two Banks of our city, in addition to those that are favored by the bill, (we allude to the Bank of Pennsylvania, the Mechanics' Bank, and the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank, are less decided in their hostilities to the measure, and will probably accept it.—Bicknell.

A Good Law.—The following is the English law, in relation to Postmasters and Newspapers. A similar enactment might be passed with propriety in this country. Many of our postmasters are entirely too careless on this subject; indeed, some of them appear to think, that they have a right to open and peruse any good newspaper they may take a fancy to, when it reaches their office. The English law provides:

"That every person employed in the Post Office who shall steal, or shall secret or destroy, or shall wilfully detain or delay in course of conveyance or delivery by the post, any printed newspaper, without covers, or in covers open at the sides, shall be guilty of misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall suffer such punishment by fine or imprisonment, or by both, as to the court shall seem meet."

Bank of Michigan.—The Detroit Daily Advertiser of the 17th ult. says the notes of this institution are no longer received by the Auditor General in payment for taxes or other State dues. They were also refused on Saturday for freight and fare on the Central rail road. Our merchants continue to receive them at a discount from 25 to 37 per cent.—Phil. Ch.

The melancholy Tragedy at St. Louis—Arrest of a Negro who says he knows "all about it"—Intense excitement.

Perhaps there never has been perpetrated a more fearful tragedy than the event which took place at St. Louis on the 17th of April, and which resulted in the burning of the store of Messrs. Simonds & Co. and a stock of about $50,000; and also the banking establishment of Messrs. Collier & Pettus, adjoining. Fortunately, the safe of this bank was not injured by the fire. The property burnt in all amounted to $100,000.

But the horrible part of the tragedy was the murder of two young gentlemen, Mr. Jacob Weaver, who was a clerk in the store of Messrs. Von Phul and McGill, who usually slept in the room immediately in the rear, and of Mr. Jesse Baker the clerk of Messrs Simonds and Morrison. Mr. Weaver was found in the dress he had worn during the day. He had been shot through the head, the ball entering above the left eye. One, or both of the young gentlemen, some of the papers say came originally from some part of New England.

On the 27th of April a free negro, in a drunken fit at Alton, disclosed that he knew all about it. He was taken possession of, and subsequently disclosed that the horrid deed was perpetrated by four negroes; one or two of them belonging to St. Louis, one to Cincinnati, and the other, a daring spirit of New Orleans. Measures were at once taken to arrest all of them. They are all slaves but one or two. The informant gave a particular account of the manner of the murder. He says that Mr. Baker was killed by a blow over the head with a bar of iron, struck by the negro from New Orleans. Weaver was struck over the head several times with a bowie knife, but fought manfully, having discharged both his pistols without effect; finally they got him down and drove a marlin spike into his head; yet fearing that he was not dead, they struck his head with a crow-bar. After making a great many fruitless attempts to get into the vault of the banking house, they set fire to the house in various places and fled.

The feelings of the people have been dreadfully excited. The purpose of the negroes was plunder, but this they were prevented by alarm, from accomplishing. The name of the negro arrested is Ennis.

The papers of St. Louis say that it is impossible to give any idea of the excitement which yet pervades the city. All classes are shocked—alarmed, and with reason—at the enormity of the crimes. In the very heart of the city, the most revolting murders have been committed, and an attempt made to shroud the whole in darkness, by the total destruction of the house and all within it.

The rewards offered for the perpetrators of the horrid deeds, were $5,000 by the mayor and $15,000 by the citizens.

By the St. Louis New Era, extra, of the 5th instant, we learn that the officers in pursuit of the murderers had just returned with two of them, Warrick and Sewell. Warrick was taken on board the steamer Omega, (engaged as steward.) He acknowledged his participation in the crime and corroborates the statement of Ennis, who, he says, planned the plot, but was not present at its execution. He also accused a white man of being concerned, but refuses to name him. Sewell was taken on board the Atalanta, (engaged as a hand.) He also acknowledged his guilt. The other mulatto, Brown, he says, was at Cincinnati, and expected to return to St. Louis. So he is pretty safe, it is hoped. They have all since been committed.—Sat. Courier.

The U. S. Bank Case.—The suit of Kercher vs. the Bank of the U. S. was tried on Wednesday last, before Judge Stroud in the District Court. The plaintiff claimed the amount of a deposit with twelve per cent. interest from the time of its demand and failure of payment in specie.

The question involved was, whether the Bank by making an entry in a depositor's book that a deposit is to be paid in current bank notes, current bank funds, or any entry of a similar kind, can avoid its liability to pay in specie. Judge Stroud decided that the Bank had no right to receive deposites to be paid otherwise than in specie, and that such conditions annexed were void; he therefore directed the jury to find for the plaintiff, with 12 per cent. interest from the time that specie was demanded and refused.—Bicknell.

Conversation.—Avoid quotations, unless you are well studied in their import and feel their pertinence. My friend ———, the other day, while looking at the skeleton of an ass which had been dug out of a sandpit, and admiring and wondering at the structure of that despised animal, made a very mal-adroit use of one. "Ah," said he, with the deepest humility, and a simplicity worthy of La Fontaine, "we are fearfully and wonderfully made."

A Shipwreck.—The Pictou (N. S.) Mechanic of the 5th ult. says, "the barque Stratono, from Liverpool for Montreal went down among the icebergs off Cape Ray, S. W. point of Newfoundland, at midnight 24th of April. She had a valuable cargo of Tea, Dry Goods, &c. The Captain and crew, 17 in all, succeeded in reaching Cape Ray in their boats, whence they were taken by Capt. Franklin, of the brig Franklin."

A Steamboat Destroyed.—The steamboat Maryland was burned on Saturday night, the 15th ult. at the mouth of the Licking River. It was supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

Good and Bad News.—Bad news weakens the action of the heart, oppresses the lungs, destroys the appetite, stops digestion, and partially suspends all the functions of the system. An emotion of shame flushes the face; fear blanches; joy illuminates it; and an instant thrill electrifies a million of nerves. Surprise spurs the pulse to a gallop. Delirium infuses great energy. Volition commands, and hundreds of muscles spring to execute. Powerful emotions often kills the body at a stroke. Chilo, Diagoras, Sophocles, died of joy at the Grecian games. The news of a defeat killed Phillip V.—One of the Popes died of an emotion of the ludicrous on seeing his pet monkey robed in pontifical and occupying the chair of state. Muley Mulock was carried upon the field of battle in the last stages of an incurable disease; upon seeing his army give way he rallied his panic-stricken troops, rolled back the tide of battle, shouted victory and died. The doorkeeper of Congress expired on hearing of the surrender of Cornwallis. Eminent public speakers have often died in the midst of an impassioned burst of eloquence or when the deep emotion that produced it had suddenly subsided. Lagrave, the young Parisian, died when he heard that the musical prize for which he had competed was adjudged to another. Hill at New-York was apprehended for theft, and taken before the police, though in perfect health, mental agony forced the blood from his nostrils, and he was carried out and died.

Steamer Shafts.—We advise all who have leisure to walk to the foot of Pine street and look at the splendid shaft intended for the war steamer Missouri, which now lies at the navy yard at Brooklyn. It is probably the finest specimen of workmanship ever produced in this country. It was brought down yesterday by the sloop Wave, on board of which it may be seen. It is wholly wrought—made we understand, by laying together short iron bars, heating them to a white heat, and then applying the trip hammer. The shaft in its present state weighs 24,400 lbs., or about 11 tons. It is 25 feet long and 18 inches in diameter. It cost we understand, 18 cents per pound or $3,892. It will soon be put on board the magnificent steamer for which it is made. The mate to it, of the same size, is nearly completed at the foundry of Mr. Kemble in West Point. We understand that a part of the Missouri's machinery has already been put on board. The Wave also brought down half a dozen heavy guns, bored out for firing patent shot, intended for the man-of-war Delaware, now lying in the river.—N. Y. Signal.

Sudden Deaths.—Our Coroner, Jno. Chambers, Esq., furnished us returns of three inquests held by him in our city and county, since the 11th ult., viz:—

No. 1—On John Middletown, who came to his death by the effects of intemperance at the house of Mr. Ratcliff, of the city of Pittsburgh.

No. 2—On Wm. Martin, a single man and respectable Druggist, who was found in his house at the corner of Seventh and Smithfield streets, on the 14th ult. Supposed he died in a fit. Verdict—"Who died by a visitation of God."

No. 3—On the supposed body of Henry Ichard, who came to his death in February last, on the Youghigany river when he was catching drift wood, near to Connelsville. He was a sober and industrious young man, and has left a poor old mother to lament his loss. Inquest held at Mr. Jno. Kelly's, Elizabeth township. Verdict—Came to his death by accidental drowning.—Pittsburgh Int.

Case of McLeod.—The Supreme Court yesterday made the following order in regard to this case:

The People vs. Alexander McLeod.—The defendant, who stands charged by indictment with the crime of murder, having been brought into Court by the Sheriff of the county of Niagara, by virtue of a writ of habeas corpus, and a motion having been made for his discharge, and it being improbable that the court will be able to render its judgment in the premises of the present term, it is therefore ordered, that the defendant be committed to the custody of the Sheriff of the city and county of New-York until the further order of the court. When the transfer has been made the Sheriff of Niagara will be no longer chargeable with the custody of the defendant.—N. Y. Sig.

The U. S. Court is in session. Present, Hon. Judges Baldwin and Irwin. Robinson alias McNulty, has been found guilty of robbing the U. S. Mail at Mercer of a $100 note.

Yesterday at noon, the grand jury found two bills against Dr. John F. Braddee—one for stealing mails, the other for inducing Peter Mill Strayer to act with him; and the grand jury found a bill against Strayer also.—Pitts. Int.

Port of Pittsburgh.—Rivers, 6 feet in the channel and falling, with a prospect of rain and a rise. Business continues comparatively good for the advanced season on the Canal and Rivers, but freights are becoming scarce. Steamboat arrivals on the Monongahela from the 14th to the 21st inclusive, 40. Departures, 43. Total, 83. On the Alleghenny, arrivals and departures, 11.—Harris.

Thirty-four of the seamen belonging to the U. S. ship Brandywine, have deserted. A reward of 25 dollars each is offered for their apprehension.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

The New York Anniversaries.—The reports of the various philanthropic and religious institutions, whose anniversaries have lately been held in New York, are before us. We condense them so as to present our readers with a general view of the operations of each.

The American Temperance Union.—The report of the executive committee states that 15,000 drunkards have been reformed in the United States within the last six months. The following temperance publications have been circulated during the year, at an expense of $10,347 29; 105,000 temperance books; 200,000 juvenile temperance publications; 30,000 copies of the Annual Report; 24,000 Temperance Tracts, Almanacs, &c.; 26,000 extra New York Observers and Evangelists, with Extracts from the Essay of Anti-Bacchus, and 15,000 copies of the celebrated "Beer trial," in Albany. With $3000 annually, beside the income from the sale of books, pamphlets, &c. the Society can carry forward its plans into successful operation. No summary was given of the number of members in each of the several States. The number of distilleries within the limits of the Union was stated at 9,657, annually manufacturing 36,343,236 gallons of ardent spirits. In contrast with this, the fact was stated that, sixteen years ago, the number of distilleries was 40,000, manufacturing 72,000,000 of gallons.

The report on the financial condition of the Association presented the following summary:—Amount paid for printing, &c. $5,241 09; salaries of agents, $3,341 20; postage, freights, public meetings, and other purposes not specified, $1,655 20. The receipts are, for sales of books, &c. &c., $4,127 98; donation of E. C. Delavan, $5,000; other sources, $1,451 99. Balance in the treasury, $341 48.

The Rev. Mr. Scott, of Stockholm, Sweden, presented at the anniversary meeting many interesting facts relative to the progress of temperance in that kingdom. He said that with a population of less than 3,000,000 Sweden had 160,000 distilleries, furnishing more than 40,000,000 of gallons yearly.

The receipts from various sources have been $14,357. The disbursement and appropriations have been $10,481 43; leaving a balance of $850.

Foreign Missionary Society.—The general operations have been prosperous and successful. In the East, at Syria, the opperations have been interrupted by political troubles, and the Missionaries compelled to retire; but they again returned, and the last accounts are very favorable.

In Turkey, the persecution two year since has entirely ceased, and the spirit of religious inquiry has become more fearless than ever before. A seminary for youth has been opened near Constantinople.

In Nestoria, uninterrupted prosperity has attended the Mission. There are more than three hundred pupils in the schools, and a printing press, the first in Northern Asia, was received last year. Several schools have also been opened among the tribes in the mountains.

Among the Indians in this country, the results have been of a usual character.—Considerable progress has been made in the arts of civilization.

In the Sandwich Islands the operations has been very much prospered. The whole number that has been added to the churches is 21,379. The number of pupils in the schools is 15,000—the number in the seminaries is 250, 685,000 books have been printed containing upwards of forty-five millions pages. The number of seminaries is 9; the number of boarding schools is 16, having about 1000 pupils. The number of churches is fifty-six.

In China, the mission has been suspended.

In Siam, the past has been a year of steady and successful toil.

In Ceylon the number of church members is 500. In the seminary are 156 pupils, of whom 105 are members of churches. In the female schools are 140 pupils. In the English preparatory schools are 400 scholars. There are 75 native free schools, containing upwards of 25,000 pupils. This mission has been somewhat weakened during the past year.

In South-Eastern Africa, the mission has been resumed.

In Western Africa, a new station has been formed at Cape Palmas.

The American Bible Society.—The Treasurer's report for this year, shows a gratifying increase of 21,505 dollars over that of the last year—the whole amount of receipts being 118,360 dollars 41 ce[nts]. Among the receipts, 9,747 dollars w[ere] from legacies.

In the course of the past year 400 [in]dividuals have become life directors [or] life members. In the same time ninet[y] new auxiliaries have been formed mo[re] of those in the western states.

In course of the Society's labors n[early] ly 3,000,000 of Bibles and Testame[nts] have been sent forth directly from its [re]positary, and means furnished for publ[ish]ing not less than 200,000 copies mor[e] foreign countries, and foreign tongu[es]. They have been published in five Ind[ian] tongues, in seven of those spoken in [Eu]rope, in five of those used in Asiatic T[ur]key, in seven of those of India, in the C[hi]nese, the Hawaiian, the Sandwich [Is]lands, and in the Grebo tongue on [the] west coast of Africa. Means have also b[een] furnished for the purchase and distri[bu]tion of the scriptures in as many as tw[en]ty additional tongues, making someth[ing] like fifty in which they have, directly a[nd] indirectly, gone forth to the world.

American Education Society.—T[he] society held their twenty-third anniver[sa]ry at the Tabernacle, New York [on] Thursday evening week,—the Hon. T[heo]odore Frelinghuysen presiding. The [re]ports of the different officers were re[ad] and all tended to show that the Socie[ty] is fast progressing in usefulness. T[he] Treasurer reported a balance in the Tre[as]ury of $604 41, and the amount collect[ed] by the Central society and branches du[r]ing the past year as $75,000. There a[re] at present under the patronage of the S[o]ciety and its branches between eight hu[n]dred and nine hundred young men. T[he] Tabernacle was crowded with people, [and] and very interesting addresses were d[e]livered by the Rev. E. N. Kirk and t[he] Rev. S. H. Cox.

Invention of Steamboats.—The fir[st] successful application of steam for t[he] purpose of propelling boats, was accor[d]plished by Robert Fulton, a native of t[he] State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Fulton's inventive genius displa[y]ed itself at an early age. It seems th[at] as early as the year 1793, he had conce[i]ved the idea of propelling vessels b[y] steam, and he speaks with great con[fi]dence of its practicability.

After a number of years residence i[n] Europe, and a variety of experimen[ts] both in that country and this, his labo[rs] were finally crowned with success.

In the spring of 1807, the first steam[-]boat built in this country was launche[d] from a ship yard in New York, on th[e] East river. The engine, which he pr[o]cured from England, was put on board i[n] August; and the boat was completed, an[d] moved by her machinery to the Jerse[y] shore. This boat, which was called th[e] Clermont, soon after sailed for Albany [in] which voyage she accomplished, goin[g] at the rate of about ten miles an hour.—She afterwards became a regular passag[e] boat between New York and Albany.—The account of her first voyage to Al[-]bany is thus described:

"She excited the astonishment of th[e] inhabitants of the Hudson; many of whom had not even heard of an engine, much less of a steamboat. She was described by some who had indistinctly seen her, passing in the night, as a monster moving in the waters—defying the tide, and breathing flames and smoke. Her volumes of smoke and fire by night attracted the attention of the crews of other vessels. Notwithstanding the wind and tide were adverse to its progress, they saw with astonishment that it was approaching them: and when it come so near that the noise of her machinery and paddles was heard, the crews in some instances sunk beneath their decks from the terrific sight, and left their vessels to go on shore, while others prostrated themselves and besought Providence to protect them from the approaches of this horrible monster, which was marching on the tides, and lighting its path by the fires which it vomited."

From the time that this boat was put in motion, this noble invention has been rapidly extended, till it is now used in every part of the civilized world.

"We Regret."—We should imagine that nearly every editor in England, are never without crape-bands round their hats, so continually do we hear of their lamentation,—"We regret" is ever on their lips. If a peer of the relm sinks into the family vault, if a member of Parliament adjourns to Hades, the journalists cannot communicate the sad tidings without a prefatory "We regret." No subjects are beneath their sympathy. If a prize pig expires with the meazles, if a chimney pot tumbles into the street, if a lady lose her pattens, or a philosopher his wits, "We regret" is the the incessant restrain of the doleful ditty. Some of these lachrymose scribes have so constant a supply of Jeremaids on hand, that we should not be surprised to see one day, like Niobe, dissolved in tears.—Eng. Paper.

Follow the Plough.—Good land emits a pleasant and refreshing smell when it is dug up, and often affords relief to invalids. It is said to be highly beneficial for a consumptive man to follow the plough—that is, walk behind the ploughman, as he turns up the furrow.

Dr. Dyott.—Daniel Man, Esq., has succeeded in getting his old friend, Doct. Dyott, released from the debtor's department of Moyamensing, by becoming bail on all the different judgments pending against him, for his appearance at the next Insolvent Court.

THE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE.

WEDNESDAY, ... JUNE 2, 1841.

☞We refer the reader's attention to the abstract from the post-office law on our last page.

☞The Wilmington (Del.,) Journal says, the prospects for peaches and apples, in that vicinity, are uncommonly good.

THE WEATHER.–We have had no rain since last Saturday week; the ground is becoming quite dry, and a shower is much needed.

We forgot to record the death of John Porter, at his residence, a short time since, one mile West of Zanesville. He was an old citizen, and long known in this county as an inn-keeper.

☞A document has been forwarded to the "Meadow Farm" Post-office, for "Wm. H. Jabbs." We know of no such name, but should there be such person, he will please call and receive his package.

BRADDEE THE MAIL ROBBER.—A Grand Jury of Allegheny county, Pa. found, on the 21st ult., two bills against Braddee, one for robbing the mail, and the other for inducing P. M. Strayer to act with him.

☞A post master informs us, that one of our distant subscribers does not take his paper from the office. He adds; "we, here, do not put any dependence in him; you can do as you think proper." We exceedingly regret that some of our agents impose on us so many such worthless names. We will be thankful to those post masters who will give us prompt information of the character of delinquent subscribers.

AMERICAN INTELLIGENCER.—This is "a monthly newspaper, devoted to the subjects of Moral, Political and Politico-Economical, interesting to all classes as American citizens," published in Philadelphia and sustained by donations. The papers are sold, over 500 at the rate of 20 dollars per 1000; under 3 dollars per 100. Address J. Robson, 106 Chesnut street. It is a double medium sheet folded into 16 pages; the first number, before us, is occupied with the letters of Joseph John Gurney to Henry Clay, on the pecuniary, moral and political condition of the West India Islands. We may probably re-publish those letters, if we can find room.

NEW MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The Methodist Abolitionists, at a meeting for the purpose, in Lowell, Mass., have formed a new Missionary Society, to be denominated "The American Wesleyan Anti-Slavery Missionary Society." The constitution contains two very distinctive features: 1. The Society will not receive into its treasury moneys or gifts of any kind which is derived from the unpaid toil of the slave. 2. Whenever it is proposed to establish a missionary, either at home or abroad, a superintendent of the M. E. Church is to be consulted, and if possible his consent obtained; but if not obtained the missionary is notwithstanding to receive his appointment. It is easy to see that this last provision of the constitution, will be the most routed at head quarters.

ANDERSON PLOUGH.—We referred our readers, some time since, to the advertisement, on our last page, of the Putnam Foundry, and recommended the Anderson Plough. Since we have made an experiment with this plow in new ground and find it to be the best implement of the kind that we have ever used for breaking up new land. Its angles are so well adopted to the purpose, that it slipped under the roots with great facility and raised them out of the ground until it was literally strewed with them. This adaptation of the proportions of the Plough makes it slip through a rough sod something like a half horse higher than the old bar share. In fine, it seems to answer every purpose for which such an implement is wanted, and is, we believe, fully as strong as any other metal Plough. We say thus much in justice to the enterprizing manufacturer, and for the information of our agricultural readers in this quarter, who, if they will call at the Foundry, will be permitted to test the article for themselves before they are required to purchase.

EDUCATION.—A committee appointed by the citizens of Clarksburgh, Va., have issued a circular, inviting the inhabitants of North Western Virginia, to meet in convention at that place, on the second Wednesday of September next, for the purpose of promoting in that section, the interests of education. The committee in their circular, remark, "That the subject of education, calls loudly on the citizens of Virginia, is evinced by the returns of the marshals, who took the late census of the inhabitants, showing the most deplorable deficiency in the education of the people of Virginia. The State contains between 7 and 800,000 inhabitants, of whom nearly 20,000 who are above 20 years of age are totally without education; something upwards of 8,000 of whom are west of the Blue ridge of mountains; and more than 2,000 of them in Harrison county; and the other counties of the North West, have, of course, their full share in this disgraceful deficiency. Let us up and be doing.

It would seem, from the above, that the labors of the marshals, on this subject, have had a good stimulating effect. We commend the laudable enterprise, and hope Western Virginia will enter into it with suitable spirit.

DEAD LETTER.—We have before us a letter written by Russell Tuthill, and dated Pittsburgh, Nov. 18th, 1836. Addressed to the "Rev. Benj. O. Springer, Cincinnati O.," which contains a $3 bill on the Commercial Bank of Scioto. This letter, it appears, not being taken from the office at Cincinnati, was sent to the Department, at Washington as a dead letter, which returned it to Pittsburgh as the law directs, being of "value." One of the clerks of the Pittsburgh office wrote the following note:—"This Br. Benj. O. Springer lives near Zanesville, O. No information relative to Tuthill can be obtained. August 18th, 1837." And laid both it and the letter by in one of the books of the office and forget them.—Mr. Lynch, the Ex-Post Master the other day, in removing his books from the office found the letter and memorandum and immediately sent them to the Department at Washington, which, according to the information contained in the Memorandum sent to Zanesville, and they were presented us; and we were probably the person alluded to by the Pittsburgh clerk, but we have no knowledge of either of the parties. We are thus particular to show that public functionaries may sometimes be cencured when there is no intentional delinquency in office. We also publish the facts of the case for the benefit of the parties; if any of our correspondents know of either of them and let us know their whereabouts we will inform the Department. Tuthill appears to have been about removing from Pittsburgh, as he gives his future address, "Brownsville, Jackson, Illinois."

PRESIDENT HARRISON.—When the news of the death of President Harrison reached England, the Americans in the cities of London and Liverpool held meetings, and passed appropriate resolutions. The flags of the American shipping in both ports were hoisted at half-mast. The following are the resolutions adopted at the meeting in London:

1. Resolved, That the citizens of the United States now present, have received with feelings of deep sensibility the painful intelligence of the sudden death of William Henry Harrison, President of the United States, which took place on the 4th of April, at the seat of the Federal Government.

2. Resolved, That as a mark of respect for the memory of the deceased, we will wear badges of mourning for three months, and that it be recommended to our countrymen abroad to do the same.

3. Resolved, That copies of these resolutions and proceedings be transmitted to Mrs. Harrison, with our sincere condolence in the late afflicting bereavement by Divine Providence.

The general tone of the English press shows a more favorable knowledge of the character of the institutions of our country, that has heretofore been exhibited. It speaks favorably, and will do more in tending to renew the kindly feelings that should ever exist between the two nations, than all threatening and warlike operation. The Spectator, which paper may be taken as a fair sample of the whole, says:

The new President, Mr. Tyler, has issued an address. Having had less time to compose it in, he is briefer than customary; but the address suffices to declare that he will carry out his predecessor's general police, domestic and foreign, and to develope as strong a disposition to restrict the centeral power as that which characterized Gen. Harrison. Mr. Tyler enters into a disquisition on the President's power of removing public officers, which he seems about to use pretty freely; but he condemns it, and promises to use it only against bad servants and "partisans;" and he suggest that Congress should take some measures to restrict it in future. The motto of these last two Presidents, Gen. Harrison and Mr. Tyler, seems to be an imitation, inverted against themselves, of the famous declaration of the English Parliament—"The power of the President has increased, is increasing, and ought to be diminished." There is perhaps some excusable flattery of the popular pride in this self-humiliation of the American Presidents; but Mr. Tyler is said to be an intelligent, temperate and firm man, with fixed opinions, and the will to carry them through without violence or perverseness. Time will show.

The Liverpool Times, of the 4th ult., announces his death, and appends the following remarks:

It is now, indeed, impossible to tell how General Harrison would have discharged the duties of the arduous office to which he had been chosen, had his life been spared, but the principles which raised him to the high post which he occupied for so short a time, were reasonable and just, and his conduct toward the host of office holders, who had been appointed by his predecessor was singularly generous.

He was evidently a man in whom the passions of party had not destroyed, as they too often do, a proper regard to the opinions of others, and a generous construction of his opponents' motives. In a country so much depraved of party spirit as the United States, and in which so bad an example of vindictive exclusiveness had been exhibited by his immediate predecessor, conduct so indulgent and conciliatory may be regarded as an evidence of a good understanding, a generous temper, and a superiority to the vulgar prejudices of party.—Phil. Chron.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE, June 2.—Flour 3; wheat 50 cents.

BALTIMORE, May 22.—Flour—has advanced 12½ a 18¾ cents per barrel within the last three days, and all the stocks of standard brands, of every denomination, have been disposed of at cash prices—Howard street at 4,75 a 4,81¼ per barrel at which sales of several hundred barrels were made yesterday, in lots of 100 bbls. at the latter rate; and City Mills and Susquehanna at 4,75. The purchases were to fill up vessels already in progress of loading, among which is a barque for Liverpool, with 600 bbls.; not that such rates are presumed to be maintained in the face of lower prices both abroad and at home, longer than receipts in this market shall increase, (of which they are the present week as last, very limited,) or existing orders to be filled.

Provisions—To fill a special order, sales of barrelled and smoked descriptions have been made since our last report at the following cash prices for prime quality, viz: 125 bbls. Mess Beef at about 12,50 per bbl; 170 do. Mess Pork, at 12,00; 3000 lbs. Hams and 12,000 do. Sides, both Baltimore cured, the former at 9,35, and the latter at 7,30 per 100 lbs. Sales of small lots, also, Mess Pork at 12,50, cash; and towards the close of last week, not reported in time for our paper, 50 bbls. Prime do. at 10,00 per bbl. 6 mos. The transactions in Western Bacon during the week have been very fair, say nearly 100,000 lbs. at 6 cts. cash, for assorted lots of 5 a 7,000 lbs; and in one or two instances a shade over this rate.—Sales of prime Hams at 8 a 8½ cts., and 10 cts. for canvassed; Sides 5 a 5¼, and Shoulders 4¾ a 5. Lard is rather inactive at 9 cts. for No. 1 in kegs, although small sales are making; and 7½ cts. cash, for bbls. We hear of no operations in Butter.

The Home Market.—The stock of Beef Cattle remaining in first hands having been exhausted, the market was quite bare on Monday morning. On that day, however, about 130 head arrived from the State of Ohio, 100 of which were prime stock, and sold readily at 8 a 8,50; of the remainder, which were inferior, 6 or 8 only sold at about 7,00. On Tuesday evening a drove of 105 arrived, which was purchased on the road near Philadelphia, and brought back to this market, and on Thursday another drove of 100 arrived, 70 of which had been previously contracted for, both sales having been made at 4,12½ per 100 lbs. live weight, supposed to nett about 8,00 when slaughtered. We quote 7,50 a 8,00 per lbs. as the market rates. Live Hogs are plenty and sell at 5,00. —Lyford.

PHILADELPHIA, May 25.—Flour—The sales of Flour early in the week were at 4,62½: subsequently at 4,75, and the stock so much reduced that the principal holders are asking higher prices to-day: receipts continue very limited.

PITTSBURGH, May 21.—Business, for the advanced season of the year is very good, and the stocks of Dry Goods, Hardware, Queensware, Groceries, Shoes, and all kinds of Foreign and Domestic and Pittsburg manufactures are excellent and prices low and accommodating. Par money and Eastern funds are rather scacre, but currency is more plenty amongst our merchants, manufacturers and business men.

Flour and Wheat are both active, and command the cash and ready sales at a small advance. Flour has came in very freely during the week, both by the river and wagons, and has sold in large lots from first hands, at 3,25 a 3,37½, and latterly at 3,40 a 3,45, and for choice lots 3,50 per bbl. has been paid.

The cost, including an appropriate pedestal, and steps in American marble, will not exceed 10,000 dollars; and the contractor binds himself for its completion in eighteen months.

Of all poverty, that of the mind is most deplorable.

The late cool weather and chilling winds have done very great injury to both the cotton and corn crops in South Carolina. Some planters have had to plant cotton seed the fourth time.

The St. Louis Bulletin says we learn from the Columbia Patriot, that William Gallagher, who killed McKenney a few days ago at that place, was tried and found guilty of murder in the second degree. The jury passed judgment at ninety-nine years, but Judge Leland thought proper to reduce the term, by taking off eighty-four years, reducing the punishment to fifteen years.

It is said more public land was sold in Missouri, during the year 1840, than in any other State or Territory; and yet hundreds of the population propose setting out for Oregon and the Californias.

A western cattle dealer was decoyed into a house in St. Mary street, on Sunday night last, and robbed of $90 in money. Strangers must be cautious.—Phil. Chron. 25th ult.

OUR BANKS AND THE RELIEF BILL.—The impression now prevails that most of the banks of this State, including a majority in the city and county of Philadelphia, will accept the Relief Bill. The only two however, in this city that have yet acted formally upon the subject are the "Philadelphia Bank," which has rejected, and the "Farmers & Mechanics' Bank," which has accepted the Bill.—Bicknell.

The Legislature of New York is still in session. An act has passed and become a law, appropriating $8,000 annually for the term of 4 years, for the promotion of agriculture and household manufactures, to be apportioned to the several counties in which societies shall be formed for that purpose.

ATROCIOUS MURDER.—A man by the name of Brady was stabbed a few days since in St. Louis at the races by a Mr. Ames, the proprietor of the race course, and died within a few minutes after receiving the wound. The Grand Jury, being in session at the time, returned a true bill of murder in the first degree against Ames, and his trial was set for yesterday.—Alton Ill. Tele., 22d ult.

ILLINOIS STOCKS.—From eastern papers we are happy to learn that our State bonds are on the rise. The last sales were at 54½, being an advance of 6½ cents. Illinois State Bank stock on the same day was sold at 33.—ib.

JUDGE DOUGLASS has appointed Dr. John Cook Bennett, one of the prominent leaders of the Mormons, Master in Chancery for county of Hancock. Heretofore, appointments of this kind have been conferred where they legitimately belong—upon some one of the legal profession; but the Judge is reversing the ordinary course of things.—ib.

From the returns made by the respective Marshals in the different States of the Union, it appears that the population of the United States is upward of 17,000,000.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—On Tuesday evening last, a colored boy, aged about 6 years, son of Mr. George McCoy, of this place, was caught by one of the water-wheels at the Factory, and instantly killed.—West. Cit., 26th ult.

STEAMBOAT ACCIDENTS.—The steamer Brazil struck a ledge of Rocks on the Upper Rapids, a few weeks since, and sunk in deep water. Cargo lead.

The steamers Oregon and Tennessee came incollision on the evening of the 26th ult. about ten miles above St. Louis, by which the boilers of the latter were knocked down, and her engineer and several others got badly scalded. The Oregon took her to St. Louis.—ib.

It is said that a Miss Charlotte Mitchell, of Georgia, appeared on her wedding-day dressed entirely in silk of her own manufacture—cap, gloves, stockings and dress—equal to the best Pongee. Girls, do you hear that. Such a girl would be worth more to a young man just starting in the world, than a thousand dollar farm, and half a dozen pianos to boot, says a thoughtful cotemporary.—ib.

BLOODY SCENE.—The last St. Augustine Herald, after noticing the cold-blooded assassination of Gen. Reid, in Tallahassee, states that great excitement existed, and that there appeared some disposition to wrest the murderer from the hands of justice. In a postscript, it adds: "We learn that the sheriff of Leon county was compelled to shoot a man, who is expected not to recover, and that Harris, the city marshal, in another affair, was nearly cut to pieces by a man named Rogers."

Fruit will not be so abundant hereabouts as was anticipated.—Leb. O. Star.

Extract of a letter from the Rev. L. F. Cosby, Gravel hill, Va.

"Our church in Cumberland increases gradually. We are now favored with the services of Br. Samuel J. Atkins, whom we licensed to preach the gospel at our first quarterly meeting. Last Saturday and Sunday we held quite an interesting meeting at Walton's meeting house in Cumberland county. On Sunday, three very aged men presented themselves, asking an interest in the prayers of the church. Our old-side brethren will succeed us with a two days' meeting, next Saturday and Sunday, and we follow with a three days' meeting commencing on the following Saturday. The above named meeting house was almost entirely abandoned, until Br. Atkins commenced regular preaching there; but now the good people will hardly lack spiritual instruction in that neighborhood.

Our next quarterly meeting will be held at Price's, on the first Saturday and Sunday in June. May it prove a lasting blessing to us all."

Extract of a private letter from an esteemed brother, in Charleston, to his friend in this city, dated May 15th, 1841:

"I am happy to inform you that Br. Stier is in fine health. He arrived in time for our camp-meeting, and preached much to the edification of his hearers. His style and manner are very acceptable, and already through his instrumentality, much good has been done; our people are revived and enlivened. Br. Stier holds prayer meetings every morning at about 5 o'clock, which are numerously attended. Truly the Lord is with us and is making his venerable and much beloved servant an instrument of good in Zion. Our meetings are invariably attended with showers of Divine grace, and sinners begin to quake and tremble. Pray that you may soon hear of the commencement of a powerful revival in Charleston. Br. Stier has endeared himself very much to the Church here, and we will keep him as long as we can."

The present volume commences with two steel engravings by A. L. Dick.—SUNDAY MORNING, and the SALE OF THE PET LAMB. Also, a beautiful colored FASHION PLATE.

THIS is an outlay for Embellishments unprecedented in this or any other country. The great beauty of the pictures will give pleasure to every lover of the beautiful, and it shall always be our aim to procure such subjects for the engraver as will even, without the poetical illustration, tell their own tale. While thus giving attention to that which pleases the eye, we will show that equal attention has been paid to catering for the mind.

MRS. L. H. SIGOURNEY,

Who has lately returned from Europe, has made such arrangements as will ensure us a supply of articles from the best female writers in England.

MARY RUSSELL MITFORD,
MRS. S. C. HALL,
MARIA EDGEWORTH, } Their first contributions to an American periodical.

Will each contribute to the Ladies' American Magazine; from the two last we now have articles on hand.

The HON. MRS. NORTON will also be a contributor.

While from abroad we are receiving such assistance as will serve to make an agreeable variety, we must not forget to mention that we are now publishing an article from an eminent writer of our own country—

The author of 'losing and winning,' and 'sensibility.'

This tale we are certain will cause as great a sensation as did the publishing of "Losing and Winning," which was re-published in half the papers of our country.

Let it not be forgotten that Miss Lesslie contributes to the Lady's Book only. ☞No other magazine has articles from her pen.☜ She commences in this No. another of those graphic sketches that give so much pleasure to our readers,

LEONILA LYNMORE.

While paying a proper tribute to the great talents of the English ladies previously mentioned, be it remembered we have our own Hale, Sigourney, Leslie, Parsons, Embury, Hentz, and a host of others, to mention which we have neither time nor space.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From Bentley's Miscellany.

THE GLORIOUS UNCERTAINTIES OF THE LAW.

In a certain town in Normandy, the authorities ('for divers good reasons then thereunto moving') thought proper to issue a proclamation to the effect that none of the worthy inhabitants, under a severe penalty, should stir abroad after sunset without a lantern. Well, it chanced that in the very same evening a man was seized and taken incontinently before the dispenser of justice, to be dealt with according to the new law.

'I am exceedingly sorry,' said the chief officer, recognizing the individual, 'that a citizen of your respectability and station should be the first to infringe the new regulation.'

'I would not willingly do so,' said the man coolly.

'Have you not read it?'

'Certainly,' replied the captured party, 'but may have unfortunately misunderstood it. Will Monsieur oblige me by reading it, that I may learn of what I am guilty?'

The officer graciously complied, and after glibbingly running over the verbose preamble, came to the point 'that no inhabitant should stir abroad after sunset without a lantern,' which he certainly delivered with peculiar emphasis, to the admiration of the fellow who had taken the man into custody, and was twirling his fingers, impatient to receive his moiety of the fine.

'I have a lantern, Monsieur,' firmly contended the man holding it up to view.

'Yes; but there is no candle in it,' replied the officer with a smile.

'The proclamation does not mention a candle, I believe, Monsieur,' replied the cunning fellow, most respectfully.

'A candle!—but of course—' began the informer, trembling lest he should lose the fish he had hooked.

'It does not mention a candle; and I contend Monsieur, I have not infringed the law,' persisted the quibbler. 'The words are—without a lantern—and here it is.'

'Hem!' cried the officer, endeavoring to conceal the confusion occasioned by his defeat by pouring over the copy of the proclamation. 'I must confess there is an omission, and I am happy to give you the benefit thereof. The case is dismissed.'

The informer was not only defeated, but rather alarmed, when the prisoner called to mind a certain act which rendered him, the aforesaid informer, liable to heavy damages for false imprisonment, &c., and the poor devil was fain to avert the infliction of an action of law by disbursing a certain sum in hard cash to the accused.

But lo! on the next evening he again encountered his 'dear acquaintance,' and to his infinite delight, he beheld the same unilluminated lantern in his hand; for an amended proclamation had been issued that morning, with the words 'that no inhabitant should stir abroad without a lantern and a candle therein!'

The informer chuckled at the ignorance of the man who had so coolly victimized him on the preceding night, and with a heart beating with the desire of revenge, and a certain prospect of the restitution of the mulct which he had suffered, he with a sneering politeness requested the honor of his company to the justice-room.

'Really, it is impossible to resist the amiable importunities of a gentleman who pays such delicate compliments and—such good coin!' replied the man; and away he walked, chatting good-humorly and joking with his delightful captor.

'What, again?' cried the officer.

'I hope Monsieur will do me the honor to remember that my former appearance here was not only against my inclination, but against the law,' said the prisoner.—'Really these proceedings are very vexatious and——'

'Have you read the proclamation?' interrupted the officer.

'Monsieur did me the favor to read it only last night, and— '

'I will read it again for your edification,' replied the officer; and he looked furtively at the informer, who could scarcely contain himself for very joy.

The amended proclamation was read. The accused stood placidly smiling at the rigmarole vibage; but when the officer read the concluding words 'that no inhabitant should stir abroad without a lantern and candle,' he started.

'Ha!' cried the informer unable longer to restrain his feelings.

'How very, very fortunate!' cried the delinquent, and quickly opening his lantern, continued, 'Lo! here is a candle!—How fortunate!'

'But it is not lighted!' exclaimed the informer with uncontrolable agitation. 'It is not lighted, nor has it been, as the wick itself proves!'

'Lantern and candle! a lantern and a candle!' repeated the man. 'I appeal to the justice of Monsieur, that there was no such words as lighted candle in any part of that respective document!'

This was a clencher! The parties were completely outwitted; while, to abate the fever of the informer's extraordinary excitement, the man charitably repeated the 'bleeding' which he had so effectually performed on the former occasion. Of course, the lawyers lost no time in 'amending' the 'amended' proclamation, and inserted lighted before the word 'candle.'

RATES OF POSTAGE, &C.

As it is the business of an editor to collect information for public benefit, and as we are frequently asked in reference to postage and post office regulations, we have taken some pains to examine the subject, and through the politeness of Mr. HOGE, we are permitted to make the following abstract from the law and instructions, for the use of our readers.

Letter Postage.—For a single letter carried not over 30 miles, 6 cents; over 30 and not over 80 miles 10 cents; over 80 and not over 150 miles 12½ cents; over 150 and not over 400 miles 18¾ cents, and over 400 miles 25 cents. Packages composed of two, three or four pieces of paper are chargeable with two, three or four times those rates. If a package consist of more than four pieces and weigh less than one ounce it is still chargeable only with four-fold postage; but any letter or package of one or more pieces of paper, weighing an ounce avoirdupois is chargeble with four-fold postage, and single postage, for every additional quarter of an ounce. Less than quarter of an ounce are disregarded. Packages weighing more than three pounds are excluded from the mail.

Bank notes, or any other pieces of paper, except what may be attached to an official seal, if sent in a letter, constitute it double, triple, &c; and though attached by a wafer or otherwise, they are still counted separately. Hand bills and other advertisements, circulars, and in short every thing that is not a newspaper, or pamphlet, is chargeable with letter postage, and even these if any thing except the address be written upon them, or if they be so closely enveloped that the post master cannot tell what they are. In determining the distance, the most direct post route and not the nearest route that a traveller might pass, is considered the measure; though if sent by a route that is safer and more expeditious but longer, then the postage will be charged according to the distance on such route.

Letters overcharged in the estimated number of pieces, must be opened in the presence of the postmaster or his assistant or he is not permitted to make any abatement in the charge, however well he may be satisfied that the letter did not consist of the number of pieces charged for; but if over charged in the estimate of distance he may make an abatement when satisfied of the fact. The postmaster, at the office to which a letter or package is sent, is bound to make an additional charge where he believes a letter to be undercharged; but this he may abate if afterwards satisfied that he was deceived, though the letter was not opened in his presence.

Letters may be delivered to the person addressed, or his agent, but in cases of doubt, especially when the letter appears to contain money, the postmaster may require a written order, or else personal application. If a letter be opened by mistake, through similarity of name, it may be so endorsed, resealed, and returned to the post office, when the postmaster shall, if satisfied of the fact, return the postage. There is in connection with this part of a postmaster's duty, a matter in which publishers are especially concerned; and we invite the attention of sundry of our friends to it.

☞A postmaster may frank a letter containing money in payment of subscription, when the letter treats of no other business.

Newspaper postage.—A newspaper is defined in the instructions to be "A printed sheet, containing current intelligence, issued in numbers at regular intervals." The postage of a newspaper sent to any office in the state in which it is published, or to any office in another state, not exceeding 100 miles from the place of publication, is one cent; and if sent a greater distance it is a cent and a half. This postage is payable quarterly in advance; the postmaster being required to refund the deficiency should a paper not be sent for the full time paid for. On this subject, the postmaster has no discretion, his instructions being "without such payment, you will not deliver them any papers, even though they tender you the postage on them singly." The same postage is chargeable on a half sheet, or a small sheet, as one of the largest size. Publishers of newspapers receive their exchange papers free of postage; but this exemption does not apply to magazines and pamphlets, and of course they cannot receive free of postage any publication for which other subscribers pay magazine or pamphlet postage. The exemption in favor of printers being designed to promote the speed of early intelligence, the reason does not apply to magazines.

Magazines and other Pamphlets.—"A magazine is a pamphlet published periodically in numbers, containing articles on science, literature, politics, news, &c." On these the charge per sheet for any distance not over 100 miles is a cent and a half, and 2½ cents for any greater distance, but for pamphlets not puplished periodically the charge is 4 cts. per sheet for any distance not exceeding 100 miles; and for a greater distance 6 cents.

Magazine or pamphlet postage is chargeable on reprints of books, such as Waldie's Library, or monthlies generally, on journals of state legislatures, session acts of congress and the state legislature, public documents printed by order of congress or of state legislatures, reports of committees, executive messages, almanacs, college catalogues, and annual reports or minutes of societies. Books, other than pamphlets, are not mentioned by the law, but postmasters are instructed to charge as for pamphlets not periodical. When documents are franked by members of congress, or others entitled to that privilege, they of course pass free.

To determine the number of sheets contained in a pamphlet is frequently difficult, especially for persons not familiar with the mode of printing and folding; and tho' it is made the duty of publishers of magazines to print the rate of postage upon the cover, this is not always done, and when done is not always correct. When paper was moulded by hand, the sizes were uniform, and every one familiar with the subject knew exactly what was meant by medium, royal, &c., but since the introduction of machinary for that purpose, paper is cut to suit the convenience of publishers and a sheet might be made a mile long.

The instructions say that 4 folio, 8 quarto, 16 octavo, or 24 duodecimo pages, whatever be the size of the paper shall be considered a sheet; but if more than 24 pages be printed on a sheet larger than royal, still 24 pages are to be taken as a sheet. Where the paper is royal or less, the number of pages is disregarded.

The surplus pages of any pamphlet or magazine are to be considered a sheet; and pamphlets printed on less than a full sheet of paper, of a size larger than royal, are to be charged with the postage on a full sheet; if however, they be printed on a half or a fourth of a sheet not greater than royal, they are chargeable with half postage. When pages are attached to a pamphlet they are chargeable according to the same rule, and when taken in connexion with the rest of the publication they constitute a fraction of a sheet, they are chargeable as a full sheet. The cover of a pamphlet or magazine is not to be rated with postage, unless the matter printed on it be a part of the body of the work, or, unless it be used as a vehicle for general advertising. Engravings are rated as other leaves when they are of the same size but if they occupy a whole sheet, they are rated as a sheet.

A newspaper or a pamphlet should be packed, leaving one end open, that the postmaster may determine what it is, otherwise he is bound to charge letter postage; which however may be remitted if the package be opened in the presence of the postmaster at the office to which it is sent. The postmaster is required to take off the covers of all packages before he delivers them; and though this is not always done, it certainly should be where the postmaster has any reason to suspect that any thing improper is concealed in the package. If any letter be concealed in a newspaper, or pamphlet, or if any endorsement or memorandum be made upon a newspaper or pamphlet, that information may be carried at less than letter postage, the postmaster shall not deliver the paper to the person to whom sent until single letter postage is paid on every piece of which such package is composed. This may in some instances prove dear postage, but no discretion is left with the postmaster; he is bound to make the charge, and if not paid to return the package to the office from which it was sent, when it becomes the duty of the postmaster there to discover if possible who sent it, and to cause a fine of Five dollars to be collected of him for such imposition. On this subject persons should be on their guard, for they cannot fail to discover that without some such protection constant fraud would be practised on the post office. This does not prevent a person from writing his own name on a paper, that the person to whom it is sent may know whence it came.

At the close of each quarter the letters on hand are to be advertised in the newspaper having the greatest circulation in the vicinity, or manuscript lists are to be made out and posted up in public places. In offices, where the nett balances average $500 per quarter, the letters are to be advertised monthly.

Mail carriers and stage drivers cannot lawfully carry out of the mail any letter or package sealed or unsealed, unless it be delivered at the next post office as a Way Letter.

Letters may be sent to the several British Provinces in North America, without paying the postage in advance to the U.S. line, as an arrangement to that effect exists between the governments; but all letters to other foreign countries must be paid in advance to New York, or some other suitable seaport.

The foregoing are such features of the post office regulations as appear to us likely to interest some of our readers.—Zanesville Gazette.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.
Appointment Office, May 11th, 1841.

SIR,—Yours under date of the 5th inst., and the enclosures, are received. The summary of the P. O. laws is a very good one, and its publication may prove useful to your citizens. In answer to your several inquiries, I have to say—

1. That the "N. Y. Mirror" is a newspaper.
2. "Waldie's Circulating Library" has been decided to be a periodical pamphlet, taxable with postage as such, and therefore not coming within the class of publications received free of postage by editors of newspapers.
3. The "Christian World" has been decided to be a newspaper. The cover, is also chargeable as a separate sheet.
4. The postage on the "Youth's Magazine," should be rated as a sheet periodical. Respectfully, Yours, &c.

P. C. FULLER,
Second Assistant P. M. General.

ISRAEL HOGE, P. M.
Zanesville, Ohio.

The department has also decided that the "Reformed Presbyterian" is chargeable with two sheets postage.

Considerable complaint has existed for sometime with regard to the arrival of the Eastern newspaper mail. I addressed a letter of inquiry to ascertain the cause, and received the following from Dr. KENEDY, the agent of the department.

"The delay of the Newspaper Mail which you speak of is caused by its magnitude, and the impractibility of placing it in the mail coach, and will continue until the department makes other arrangements." Respectfully,

ISRAEL HOGE, P. M.

U. P. Bennett, Esq., Ed. Zanes. Gaz.

INTERESTING STATISTICS.—The standing armies of Europe bear a proportion to the population of their respective populations of the kingdoms and States are follows, abstracted from a late work on the subject:

England	1	soldier	to every	140	of its pop.
France	1	do	do	110	do
Austria	1	do	do	100	do
Russia	1	do	do	90	do
Prussia	1	do	do	68	do
Bavoria	1	do	do	69	do
Poland	1	do	do	60	do
Wirtemburg	1	do	do	59	do
Sweden	1	do	do	53	do
Denmark	1	do	do	57	do
The Roman States	1	do	do	300	do
Tuscany	1	do	do	300	do

It may be well to add that the proportion of the United States army to its population is 1 to 1600.

In China according to the latest and most accurate accounts, the population exceeds 360 millions, and the army is rated at 700,000, making a ratio of 1 soldier to every 514 persons.

THE AMERICAN TEMPERANCE UNION.—The anniversary of this society was observed in New York on Tuesday morning last. By the report of the executive committee, we learn that tracts to the amount of 10,000 dollars had been circulated during the past year. The number of distilleries in the United States was stated to be 19,567; annually manufacturing 36,343,236 gallons of ardent spirits. This shows that there has been a great falling off in the production of poison for the last sixteen years.

AGE OF MARRIAGE.—A correspondent desires to know the earliest age at which a male can marry in this State. By the common law, with consent of parents or guardians, he may marry at the age of fourteen. Without such consent, by the statute, not before the age of twenty-one. With females the ages are twelve and eighteen.—Phil. paper.

THE U. S. ARMY.—According to Mr. Pointsett, the army is in a high state of discipline, and is composed of 10,669 men. The expense for each person in the army in 1836, was 400,13, and in 1840, 375,76; showing a reduction of 24,19, or more than 6 per cent.

A TREE WORTH OWNING.—Capt. Sam. Kemp, of Tioga county, Pa., recently felled a white pine tree, which was manufactured into boards and plank measuring 5,876 feet. At the rate the timber sold, the tree was worth, when standing, $131 43.

THE DIFFERENCE.—A negro preacher once observed to his hearers at the close of his sermon, as follows: "My obstinacious bredren, I find it's of no more use to preach to you dan it is for a grasshopper to wear knee-buckles."

TWO whales went ashore at Westport, near New Bedford, a few days since. One was about 50 and the other 25 feet long, and the joint product of oil is expected to be about 1500 gallons.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.—The number of Sunday Schools in the city of New York is 93: of scholars, 17,032; of teachers, 2565; volumes in the different libraries, 22,000.

LARGE RAFT.—A raft came into Baltimore on Monday, from the Susquehannah containing five million feet of lumber.

PROGRESS OF TEMPERANCE.—Trades societies for the promotion of temperance, are now in New York. This augurs well for the cause.

MOVEMENTS OF A DIPLOMATIC.—The Prussian Minister and family intend to reside at Wilmington, Del., during the summer.

LITERARY EMPORIUM.—The Boston Athenæum now contains 31,788 volumes. The real estate, fine arts, building, &c., belonging to the institution, are valued at $38,441; the paintings, busts, &c., $18,833; books at $52,103; and stocks and notes receivable at $28,083

NEW DISCOVEIES BY OUR EXPLORING EXPEDITION.—Capt. Lawrence, of the whale ship Champion, at Edgartown, on the 12th inst. reports the U. States brig Porpoise, Captain Ringgold, at Tapita, on shore cruise, and thence to Society Island, all well. Capt. Ringgold reported having discovered several new islands.

SCHOOL BOOKS.
Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

For the Western Recorder.

Adieu my home my native cot,
To foreign lands I hie;
And leave behind to mem'ry dear,
Scenes to my heart most nigh:
And scenes that I can ne'er forget,
Nor bid adieu without regret.

To think of home to me is sweet,—
The scenes of youthful play,
Come rushing back to mem'ry's seat,
And leave my mind the prey
To anguish keen and deep regret,
That we must part and ne'er forget.

The bubbling stream, whose gentle waves,
Rose to the passing breeze;
The finy tribes that sport beneath,
And songsters of the trees:
All, all adieu! one sad farewell,—
I lov'd thee all, alas! to well.

Adieu! to those whose gentle care,
Watch'd o'er my youthful dream;
Bid me beware of sinful snares,
And caus'd mine eyes to gleam
With joy, as to the house of God,
My little feet the pathway trod.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

Dear Br. Springer: I have long thought that the attention was due to the action of our last General Conference, on the final disposition of the petitions on the subject of Slavery. You, as a member of that body, will doubtless recollect that those petitions were referred to a committee, and that, that committee reported a resolution declaring slavery to be a 'Moral Evil.' I think you must also recollect, that the principal reason why the resolution was not then adopted,* was that the conference was not sufficiently instructed as to the wishes and sentiments of their constituents on that particular subject. Hence the disposition that was made of the resolution, viz: laid on the table, and the whole subject left with the people in their primary assemblies, and with the Annual Conferences. I suppose you must also recollect that the word refer was substituted for that of refer because it was thought that the conference had not power to refer any subject to the people, they being the fountain of power. Still I suppose it was clearly the intention of the conference that the people should declare their sentiments, on that subject before the sitting of the next General Conference. This being the case I think that there is an obligation on the churches to express their wishes in order that the next General Conference may be prepared to act understandingly, and with their eyes wide open, as regards their constituency.

Some of the churches might desire the conference to refrain from all action on the subject of Slavery. Well, their desire should be received and duly considered. Some might wish the Conference to declare Slavery in the abstract or concrete a 'Moral Evil,' and recommend its abolishment as soon as practicable. Well, these things ought to be patiently heard, and a righteous decision made on their claims. Some, however, might claim of the conference that it should pass resolutions declaring slavery to be not only pleasing to God and harmless among men, but also "patriarchal" and Apostolical. Well, sir, these things should also be candidly, patiently and carefully heard, and their request considered and a judgment dictated by justice, wisdom, and goodness declared in relation to the whole matter, and I am sure these last will ask no more. All I wish now to say, is, that according to my understanding of the action of the last General Conference, the church is expected to speak pro or con, and as this is expected, there is not much time to lose between now and the next General Conference. I think I saw some time since in your paper a discussion as to what constituted a primary assembly. Now, Sir, I apprehend there is not room for a discussion here, and once for all that delegated body can be a primary assembly.—This is too plain to waste words about.

Now, Br. Editor, am I right or wrong in any or all of my positions and notions. Please give me your opinion also, and if we ought to act let us act at once. It is a vain delusion that we can by any possibility stave off this question much longer. Our Southern brethren have felt it so, and the Georgia or the South Carolina conference have declared the morality and christianity of slavery and call upon those of like sentiment to unite which them in establishing a paper for its own defence as an institution, perfectly consistent with the principles of our holy religion.—In this they have a right to do, and nobody has a right to complain, and if the whole church is of their opinion, they ought to say so at once, the sooner the better. PRAYER.

And what is prayer? Does it consist merely in a multiplicitly of unguarded words, or, in an elaborate, or in an ejaculatory discourse thrown out at random, on any, or upon all occasions? Or does it consist in a great harangue of our virtues, of our kindness to the poor and needy, of our great benevolent acts, of our charitable deeds, hospitality, justness or morality, or love of mercy and humility, with a numberless succession of words, serving for no other purpose than a mere relation of our own great doings, and at the same time rejoicing that we are not as other men, that we are so blessed with gifts or talents of which others are deprived; and proud, haughty, regretting, (in sum and substance) if not in exact words, that society had not more such shining and distinguished ornaments, and a hypocritical wish to be delivered from the vices that infest the breast of the publican or SINNER? Or does it consist in a humiliating, lowly, contrite desire, or petition, of a grateful, and thankful heart, on account of past favors received, with an humble acknowledgment of creation, of preservation, and redemption, with a further petition to be delivered from all unbelief and sinfulness; pleading not our own merits but those of Christ, at the same time acknowledging our own unworthiness, and sinfulness, our dependence, and utter incapability to do any thing good of ourselves.

The parable of the pharasee and publican, will solve all this. Seeing then that prayer does not consist in much speaking, to be seen of men, nor in any outward position of the body, or described public place, but rather in secret aspirations, of a contrite heart, with an awful prostration and bowing down of the heart, in the silence, or stillness of all flesh; who, let us ask, are those that pray? Surely the humble, contrite, imitator and follower of Christ. Who hears and answers prayer? Or to whom are we to pray? Christ has said when thou prayest enter into thy closet and when thou hast shut the door pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly. The Revelator was also commanded to worship God, at the time of beholding an innumerable number who came up out of great tribulation, who had washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. God grant that we may be of this happy number. AMICUS.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

JACKSONBURG, O., MAY 27, 1841.

Br. Springer: We are getting along tolerable smoothly on Jacksonsburg circuit, Ohio District,—a goodly number have been received into the Society this conference year—and peace and harmony abounds. There has not to my knowledge, been a church trial on the circuit this year.

We had a two days meeting last Saturday and Sabbath, at Br. E. Stibbin's, near Oxford; and received four or five into the Society. A few months ago there were but three or four members there. Now they number, if I am not mistaken, about twenty-five members, with a fair prospect ahead. A kinder hearted people I have never visited, than they appear to be. Both Episcopal and Protestant Methodists, kindly received us, and were liberal in their exertions to entertain the people. It done my heart good to see them coming forward together and partaking at the table of our common Lord. We had a soul reviving time.

Accept of my best respects and well wishes, for the circulation and support of your paper.

Yours, &c.,
JOHN H. THOMAS.

GREENBRIER, VA., May 10, 1841.

Dear Br. Springer: I reached this charge the 9th of October last; I found 28 members scattered over a territory of 200 miles in circumference, and but one organized class, and have organized one since. I have had great opposition from episcopal prejudice, but blessed be God our prospects begin to brighten, and we are looking forward to better times. Our congregations are continually increasing, and the nails are beginning to be withdrawn from the meeting house latches which were placed there to keep out the Rails. The Lord is reviving His work amongst us. We have had some precious seasons, latterly, in different parts of the circuit. I have been travelling at the rate of 100 miles per week, and preaching from 7 to 9 times. It is a laborous circuit to travel, but blessed be the Lord, He has hitherto been my helper. In Him I desire to trust. Pray for me, my brother, that the Lord may enable me faithfully to discharge the duties of my station.

HELP! HELP!!—We have appointed a camp meeting, to commence, Friday, the 13th of August, two miles from Lewisburgh, the county seat, the same distance from the Great Kanahawa turnpike. The following brethren are earnestly solicited to attend: D. Gibbons, S. Clawson, H. T. Lawson, A. Morrison, H. R. Bonnett, and A. Williams of the Ohio district. Come brethren; come all who can!! Come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Remember our lonely condition; remember our oppressed cause, and aid us on this occasion. We have some hearty friends, and they will go great lengths in support of the meeting, and they unite in calling for help, in this our time of need.

Yours, &c. DANL. R. HELMICK.

MATTHEW, CHAPTER VI.

1. Christ has here forcibly taught the necessity of charity, of prayer, and of all religious duties.

2. We see the necessity of sincerity and honesty in religious duties. They are not done to be seen of men; if they are they cannot be performed acceptably. God looks on the heart, nor is it possible to deceive Him. And of what avail is it to deceive men? how poor and pitiable is the reward of the hypocrite! how contemptable when God is displeased! how awful the condition beyond the grave!

3. Christ has here, in a particular manner, urged the duty of prayer. Nothing can equal this composition in simplicity, beauty and comprehensiveness, At the same time that it is so simple that it can be understood by a child, it contains the expression of all the wants of man at any age, and in every rank.

The duty of prayer is urged by every consideration. None but God can provide for us; none but He can forgive, and guide and support us; none but He can bring us to heaven. He is ever ready to hear us. The humble He sends not empty away. Those who ask, receive, and they that seek, find. How natural and proper, then, is prayer! How strange that any can live and not pour out their desires to God! How strange that any are willing to go to eternity with this sad reflection, "I have gone through this world, spent my probation, wasted my strength, and am dying and have never prayed!" How awful will be the reflection of the soul through all eternity, "I was offered life, eternal life, but I never asked for it. I lived from day to day, from year to year, in God's world; breathed His air, rided in His beneficence, forgot His goodness, and never once asked Him to save my soul!" Who will be to blame if the prayerless soul is lost?

Secret and family prayer should be daily,—we daily have the same necessities, are exposed to the same dangers, tried on the borders of the same heaven or hell. How should the voice of our praise and prayer go up as incense in the morning, and rise as a rich perfume in the shade of every evening! What more lovely object than one in the bloom of health and the dew of youth, bowing with reverence before the king of heaven, seeking forgiveness, peace, guidance and life. And what a strange, misguided and pitious object is a soul that never prays.

Forgiveness is essential in prayer. If we come to God harboring malice and unwilling to forgive, we have His solemn assurance that we shall not be ourselves forgiven.

Religion is a gift of gifts, and by it we are bound to love our enemies. This is a law of christianity, original and peculiar. No system but this has required it, and no act of christian piety is more difficult; none shows more the power of the grace of God; none is more ornamental to the character; none more like God, and none furnishes better evidence of piety. He that can meet a man who is seeking his heart; who can speak well of one that is perpetually slandering and cursing him; that can pray for a man that abuses, injures and wounds him; and that can seek heaven for him that wishes his damnation, is in the way of life. This is religion, beautiful as its native skies; pure like its source; kind like its author; fresh like the dews of the morning; clear and diffusive like the beams of the rising sun; and holy like the feeling and words that came from the bosom of the son of God. He that can do this need not doubt that he is a christian.—He has caught the very spirit of the Saviour and he must inherit eternal life. PHILOM.

ECCLESIASTICAL REBUS ON THE FOUNDER OF METHODISM.

Take the name of the virtue that fools always hated,
The name of the element of which we're created;
Take the light call'd "the greater," a light we much need,
And the cord that constrained the Saviour to bleed;
Take the name of the garden whence mankind was driven,
And the time when all ought to set out for heaven,
The initials of these when collected are such
They make the first name in the Methodist church. B.

OBITUARY.

For the Western Recorder.

Br. Springer: In my late tour in this field of labor I witnessed a continuation of the effects of fading mortality mentioned in my last. Two of our beloved sisters have left the church below in joyful hope of entering the triumphant church above.

On the 14th instant our aged sister McLANE was called to depart, after a long illness. About a month ago a meeting was held in her house, which terminated in much weeping. It being near our class at Unity, invitation was given for members; upon which this aged sister united from her sick bed. Her companion and two of her children followed her example. On visting her a few weeks before her death, I was much comforted at finding her trust fixed on the Lord, her only Saviour. Our conversation and prayer together affected ourselves and those that were present: we wept together for the last time. The funeral was a time of much tenderness. May the Lord keep brother McLane and his children faithful.

ELIZABETH J. TRACEY, consort of W. W. Tracey, departed this life on the 19th instant. She was born in the city of New Brunswick, New Jersey, July 16th, 1803,—married in Fayette county, Pa., January 17th, 1819. Whence she removed to Ohio in 1821, and became the mother of a large family of children, a number of whom she lived to see deposited in the tomb. Her last twenty years were spent in acceptable membership in religious society, and a few of her last months were passed in the Methodist Protestant Church. On frequent visits I conversed with her on experimental Religion; her mind appearing fixed on the Saviour, and her anxious soul waiting for her approaching change. Shortly before her departure, she counselled her companion and children for good, the youngest two holding her hands and earnestly prattling with their mother. A friend sitting by asked her if it did not go hard with her to leave these little ones behind; and she replied that it would, if there were no God. Thus her life was closed trusting in God. Br. W. W. Tracey and his children are invited by her example to trust in the God of love. This brother has been my colleague for some months past, and we have greatly rejoiced together at witnessing the prosperity of Zion; but the President lately transferred him to a neighboring circuit, whither he recently went. Yours, in Christ,

C. WOODRUFF.

MISCELLANEOUS.

We seldom make selections, for our paper, from works of fiction; but we occasionally meet with articles of the kind, containing such fine sentiments, that we cannot, in justice, withhold them from our readers. Of this discription is the following from the Lady's Book for June, on 'Gentility.' It burlesques, in fine style, the notions of gentility that render so many ridiculous in the estimation of good sense.—We could not pass a higher encomium on the Lady's Book than to credit it with such articles as this.—ED. REC.

From the Lady's Book.

GENTILITY.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

'DIDN'T I see you walking up the street with a young lady, yesterday, William?' said Anna Enfield to her brother, who had but a few days before returned from New York, after an absence of some months.

'Perhaps you did; I was in company with a young lady in the afternoon,' replied the brother.

'Well, who was she? I did not see you until after you had passed the store I was in, and then I could not see her face.'

'It was Caroline Murry; you know her, I suppose.'

'Caroline Murry! Why, brother! what were you doing in her company?' and Anna's face expressed unfeigned astonishment.

'Why, really, you surprise me, sister! I hope there is no blemish on her character. But what is the matter? I feel concerned to know.'

'There's nothing much the matter, brother; but, then, Caroline Murry is not genteel. We don't think of keeping her company.'

'Indeed! and you don't associate with her because she is not genteel. Well, if I am any judge of gentility, Anna, Caroline Murry is about as genteel and lady-like as any girl I know—always excepting, of course, my own dear sister.'

'Why, brother, how you talk! You don't certainly pretend to compare her with Ernestine Eberly and Zepherine Fitzwilliams, whom you have seen here several times?'

'No, I do not,' replied the brother, emphatically.

'Well, they're what I call genteel; and Caroline Murry wouldn't be tolerated in the society where they visit.'

'And why not, sister?'

'Havn't I told you? Because she is not considered genteel; that is the reason.'

'But I don't understand what you consider genteel, Anna. If I know what gentility means, Caroline, as far as that is concerned, is in every way superior to Ernestine Eberly and Zepherine Fitzwilliams.'

'Now, William, that is too bad! If any other man had said so to me, I would never have spoken to him again as long as I lived.'

'But seriously, Anna, what do you mean by gentility?' asked the brother.

'That's a question more easily asked than answered; but you know, as well as I do, what is meant by gentility. Every body knows.'

'I know what I mean by it, Anna. But it seems that we don't agree on the subject; for I call Caroline Murry genteel, and you don't: so you see that different things may be called by the same name. Now, what I wish to know is, what precise meaning you attach to the word? or, why you do not think Caroline genteel?'

'Why, in the first place, she don't go into genteel company. People of the first rank won't associate with her.'

Here ensued a pause, and the brother said—

'Well, why won't they associate with her, Anna? I hope she has not been guilty of improper or immoral conduct.'

'O, no! nothing of that. I never heard the slightest reflection on her character,' replied the sister. 'But, then, genteel young ladies don't work in the kitchen, like hired servants; and she does. And besides this, call on her when you will, and she is always doing something. Why, I am told that she has even been seen at the chamber windows, fronting on the public street, with her head tied up, sweeping and making the beds! And Clarissa Spiggler says that she saw her once, with the parlor windows open, sweeping and dusting like a servant! Nobody is going to associate, or be seen in the street with any one who hasn't the spirit to be above the condition of a hireling. And, besides this, whenever she was invited to balls or parties, she never would stay later than ten or eleven o'clock, which every one knows to be vulgar. Somebody had to go home with her, of course; and the choicest beau in the company was almost sure to have his good nature and his politeness taxed for this purpose. Once I heard her say, that she considered the theatre an unfit place for any young lady; she offended the whole company, and has never been invited to a party among genteel people since.'

'And is that all?' said William Enfield, taking a long breath.

'Yes, and I should think that was enough, in all conscience,' replied the sister.

'So should I, Anna—to make me respect her.'

'Why, William?'

'Why, Anna!'

'But seriously, William, you cannot be in earnest?'

'Of course I am.'

'Well, sister, I'm afraid my old fashioned notions, for such I suppose you will call them, and your new fangled notions, for such I must call them, will not chime well together. All that I have heard you allege against Caroline Murry, raises, instead of lowering her in my estimation. So far as a gentle, and truly lady-like deportment is concerned, I think her greatly superior to the two friends you have named as pinks of gentility.'

Anna looked into the face of her brother for some moments, her countenance exhibiting a mingled expression of surprise and disappointment.

'But you are not going to walk with her in the street any more, I hope,' she at length said.

'And why not, Anna?'

'Because, as I have said before, she is not gen—'

'Genteel, you were going to say. But that allegation, you perceive, Anna, has no weight with me; I do not consider it a true one.'

'Well, we won't talk any more about it just now, for it would be no use,' said the sister, changing her voice and manner; 'and so I will change the subject. I want you to make a call or two with me this morning.'

'On whom?'

'On Miss Eberly and Miss Fitzwilliams.'

'It wouldn't be right for me to do so, would it? You know I don't consider them genteel,' said the brother, with affected gravity.

'O nonsense, brother! why will you trifle so?'

'But, seriously, Anna, I do not consider that those young ladies have any very strong claims to gentility; and, like you, I have no wish to associate with those who are not genteel.'

'If you talk in that way, William, I shall get angry with you. I cannot hear my most intimate friends spoken of so lightly; and, at the same time, accused of a want of gentility. You must remember that you are reflecting upon your sister's associates."

'You must not, and I know you will not, get angry with me, sister, for speaking plainly; and you must do me justice to believe that in speaking as I do I am in earnest. And, you must also remember, that, in saying what you did of Caroline Murry, you spoke of one with whom your brother has associated, and with whom he is still willing to associate.'

Anna looked very serious at this, nor could she frame in her own mind a reply that was satisfactory to her. At last she said—

'But, seriously, brother William, won't you call on those young ladies with me?'

'Yes, on one condition.'

'Well, what is that?'

'Why, on condition that you will, afterwards, call with me, and see Caroline Murry.'

'I cannot do that, William,' she replied, in a positive tone.

'And why not, Anna?'

'I have already told you.'

'I cannot perceive the force of that reason, Anna. But, if you will not go with me, I must decline going with you. The society of Miss Murry cannot be more repulsive to you, than is that of the Misses Eberly and Fitzwilliams to me.'

'You don't know what you are talking about, William."

'That is my own impression about you. But come, now, sister, let us both be rational to each other. I am willing to go with you, if you will go with me.'

'Yes, but, William, you don't reflect, that in doing as you desire me, I will be in danger of losing my present position in society. Caroline Murry is not esteemed genteel in the circle in which I move, and if it should be known that I visit her, I will be considered on a level with her. I would do any thing to oblige you, but, indeed, I would be risking too much here.'

'You would only be breaking loose,' replied the brother, 'from the slavery you are now in to false notions of what is truly genteel. If any one esteems you less for being kind, attentive, and courteous, to one against whom suspicion has never dared to breathe a word, and whose whole life is a bright example of the pure and high-toned principles that govern her, that one is unworthy of your regard. True gentility does not exist, my sister, merely in a studied and artificial elegance of behaviour, but in inward purity and taste, and a true sense of what is right, all exhibiting themselves in their natural external expression. The real lady judges of others from what they are, and neglects none but the wilfully depraved. True, there are distinctions in society, and there are lines of social demarcation—and all this is right. But we should be careful into what social sphere we are drawn, and how we suffer ourselves to be influenced by the false notions of real worth which prevail in some circles that profess a high degree of gentility. I hold that every one, no matter what may be his or her condition in life, fails to act a true part if not engaged in doing something that is useful.—Let me put it to your natural good sense, which do you think the most deserving of praise, Caroline Murry, who spends her time in 'doing something' useful to her whole family; or your friends the Misses Eberly and Fitzwilliams, and those constituting their particular circle, who expect service from others, but never think of rendering any, and who carry their prejudices so far as to despise those who work?'

Anna did not reply, and her brother said—

'I am in earnest, sister, when I say, that you cannot confer a greater favour upon your brother, than to go with him to see Caroline Murry. Cannot I induce you to comply with my wishes?'

'I will go,' she replied to this appeal, and then hurried away, evidently no little disturbed in her feelings.

In half an hour she was ready, and, taking her brother's arm, was soon on the way to Miss Ernestine Eberly's residence. That young lady received them with all the graces and fashionable airs she could assume, and entertained them with the idol gossip of the day, interspersed with an occasional spice of envious and ill natured remark. Knowing that her brother was a close discriminator, and that he was by no means prepossessed in her friend's favor, Anna herself observed her more narrowly, and, as it were, with his eyes. It seemed to her that Miss Eberly never was so uninteresting, or so mal-apropos in what she said. The call on Zepherine Fitzwilliams came next in turn. Scanning her also with other eyes than her own, Anna was disappointed in her very dear friend. She looked through her, and was pained to see that there was a hollowness and want of any thing like true strength or excellence of character about her. Particularly was she displeased at a gratuitous sneer thrown out at the expense of Caroline Murry.

And now, with a reluctance which she could not overcome, Anna turned with her brother, towards the residence of the young lady who had lost caste, because she had good sense and was industrious.

'I know my sister's lady-like character will prompt her to right action, in our next call,' said the brother, looking into Anna's face with an encouraging smile.

She did not reply, yet she felt somehow or other pleased with the remark. A few minutes' walk brought them to the door, and they were presently ushered into a neat parlour in which was the young lady they were seeking. She sat near a window, and was sewing. She was plainly dressed in comparison with the young ladies just called upon; but in neatness, and in all that constitutes the lady in air and appearance, in every way superior.

'I believe you know my sister,' said Enfield, on presenting Anna.

'We have met a few times,' she replied, with a pleasant, unembarrassed smile, extending at the same time her hand.

Miss Enfield took the offered hand with less reluctance than she had imagined she could, but a few hours before. Somehow or other, Caroline seemed to her to be very much changed for the better in manner and appearance. And she could not help, during all the visit, drawing contrasts between her and the two friends she had just called upon; and the contrast was in no way favourable to the latter. The conversation was on topics of ordinary interest, but did not once degenerate into frivolity or censoriousness. Good sense manifested itself in almost every sentence that Caroline uttered, and this was so apparent to Anna, that she could not help frequently noticing and involuntarily approving it.

'What a pity,' Anna once or twice remarked to herself, 'that she will be so singular.'

The call was but a brief one. Anna parted with Caroline under a different impression of her character that she had ever before entertained. After her return with her brother, he asked her this abrupt question.

'Which of the young ladies, Anna, of the three we called upon this morning, would you prefer to call your sister?'

Anna looked up, bewildered and surprised, into the face of her brother, for a few moments, and then said:

'I don't understand you, brother William.'

'Why, I thought I asked a very plain question. But I will make it plainer. Which one of the three young ladies we called upon this morning, would you advise me to marry?'

'Neither,' replied Anna, promptly.

'That is only jumping the question,' he said, smiling. 'But, to corner you so that there can be no escape, I will confess that I have made up my mind to marry one of the three. Now tell me which you would rather it would be.'

'Caroline Murry,' said Anna, emphatically, while her cheek burned, and her eyes became slightly suffused.

William Enfield did not reply to the hoped for, though rather unexpected admission, but stopping down, he kissed her glowing cheek, and whispered in her ear,

'Then she shall be your sister, and I know you will love one another.'

He said truly. In a few months he claimed Caroline Murry as his bride, and her good sense, and winning gentleness of character, influenced Anna, and effectually counteracted the false notions which were beginning to corrupt a good heart and to overshadow a sound judgment. It was not long before she was fully sensible of the real difference which there was between the characters of her two friends, and that of her brother's wife; and also between true and false gentility. Although Caroline Murry had been proscribed by a certain circle in which false pride, instead of principle, was the governing motives, she had still been esteemed among those who knew how to look beyond the surface. As the wife of Enfield, she at once took a position in circles where those who had passed her by as unworthy would have sought in vain for admission, and in those circles she shone as a bright particular star.

MESSAGE
Of the President of the U. S.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

FELLOW-CITIZENS:—You have been assembled in your respective halls of legislation under a proclamation bearing the signature of the illustrious citizen, who was so lately called by the direct suffrages of the people, to the discharge of the important functions of their chief Executive office—upon the expiration of a single month from the day of his installation he has paid the great debt of nature, leaving behind him a name associated with the recollection of numerous benefits conferred upon the country, during a long life of patriotic devotion. With this public bereavement are connected other considerations which will not escape the attention of Congress. The preparations necessary for his removal to the seat of Government, in view of a residence of four years, must have devolved upon the late President heavy expenditures, which, if permitted to burthen the limited resources of his private fortune, may tend to the serious embarrassment of his surviving family; and it is therefore respectfully submitted to Congress whether the ordinary principles of justice would not dictate the propriety of its legislative interposition. By the provisions of the fundamental law, the powers and duties of the high station to which he was elected have devolved upon me; and in the dispositions of the representatives of the States and of the people, will be found, to a great extent, a solution of the problem to which our institutions are, for the first time, subjected.

In entering upon the duties of this office, I did not feel that it would be becoming in me to disturb what had been ordered by my lamented predecessor. Whatever, therefore, may have been my opinion originally as to the propriety of convening Congress at so early a day from that of its late adjournment, I found a new and controlling inducement not to interfere with the patriotic desires of the late President, in the novelty of the situation in which I was so unexpectedly placed. My first wish, under such circumstances, would necessarily have been to have called to my aid, in the administration of public affairs, the combined wisdom of the two Houses of Congress, in order to take their counsel and advice as to the best mode of extricating the Government and the country from the embarrassments weighing heavily on both. I am then most happy in finding myself so soon, after my accession to the Presidency, surrounded by the immediate representatives of the States and people.

No important changes have taken place in our foreign relations since the last session of Congress: it is not deemed necessary, on this occasion, to go into a detailed statement in regard to them. I am happy to say that I see nothing to destroy the hope of being able to preserve peace.

The ratification of a treaty with Portugal has been duly exchanged between the two Governments. This Government has not been inattentive to the interest of those of our citizens who have claims on the Government of Spain, founded on express treaty stipulations; and a hope is indulged that the representations which have been made to that government on this subject, may lead, ere long, to beneficial results.

A correspondence has taken place between the Secretary of State and the Minister of Her Britannic Majesty accreditted to this Government on the subject of Alexander McLeod's indictment and imprisonment, copies of which are herewith communicated to Congress.

In addition to what appears from these papers, it may be proper to state, that Alexander McLeod has been heard, by the Supreme Court of the State of New York, on his motion to be discharged from imprisonment, and that the decision of that court has not as yet been pronounced.

The Secretary of State has addressed to me a paper upon two subjects, interesting to the commerce of the country, which will receive my consideration, and which I have the honor to communicate to Congress.

So far as it depends on the course of this Government, our relations of good will and friendship will be seduously cultivated with all nations.—The true American police will be founded to consist in the exercise of a spirit of justice to be manifested in the discharge of all our international obligations to the weakest of the family of nations, as well as to the most powerful. Occasional conflicts of opinion may arise, but when the discussions incident to them are conducted in the language of truth, and with a strict regard to justice, the scourge of war will for the most part be avoided. The time ought to be regarded as having gone by, when a resort to arms is to be esteemed as the only proper arbiter of national differences.

The census recently taken shows a regularly progressive increase in our population. Upon the breaking out of the war of the revolution our numbers scarcely equalled 3,000,000 of souls, they already exceed 17,000,000, and will continue to progress in a ratio which duplicates in a period of about 23 years. The old States contain a territory sufficient in itself to maintain a population of additional millions, and the most populous of the new States may even yet be regarded as but partially settled, while of the new lands on this side of the rockey mountains, to say nothing of the immense region which stretches from the base of those mountains to the mouth of the Columbia river, about 270,000,000 of acres, ceded and unceded, still remain to be brought into market.—We hold out to the people of other countries an invitation to come and settle among us as members of our rapidly growing family, and for the blessings which we offer them, we require of them to look upon our country as their country, and to unite with us in the great task of preserving our institutions and thereby perpetuation our liberties. No motive exists for foreign conquests—we desire but to reclaim our almost illimitable wilderness, and to introduce into their depth the lights of civilization. While we shall at all times, be prepared to vindicate the national honor, our most earnest desire will be to maintain an unbroken peace.

In presenting the foregoing views, I cannot withold the expression of the opinion, that there exist nothing in the extension of our empire, over our acknowledged possessions, to excite the alarm of the patriot for the safety of our institutions. The Federative system, leaving to each State the care of its domestic concerns, and devolving on the Federal Government those of general import admits in safety of the greatest expansion; but, at the same time, I deem it proper to add, that there will be found to exist, at all times, an imperious necessity for restraining all the functionaries of this Government within the range of their respective powers, thereby preserving a just balance between the powers granted to this Government and those reserved to the States and to the People.

From the report of the Secretary of the Treasury you will perceive that the fiscal means, present and accruing, are insufficient to supply the wants of the Government for the current year.—The balance in the Treasury on the 4th day of March last, not covered by outstanding drafts, and exclusive of trust funds, is estimated at $860,000. This includes the sum of $215,000 deposited in the mint and its branches to procure metal for coining and in the process of coinage, and which could not be withdrawn without inconvenience—thus leaving subject to draft, in the various depositories, the sum of $645,000. By virtue of two several acts of Congress, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to issue, on and after the fourth day of March last, Treasury notes to the amount of $5,413,000, making an aggregate available fund on hand of $6,058,000.

But this fund was chargeable with outstanding Treasury notes redeemable in the current year, and interest thereon, to the estimated amount of $5,280,000.—There are also thrown upon the Treasury the payment of a large amount of demands accrued in whole, or in part, in former years, which will exhaust the available means of the Treasury and leave the accruing revenue, reduced as it is in amount, burthened with debt, and charged with the current expenses of the Government.

The aggregate amount of outstanding appropriations, on the 4th day of March last, was $33.429,616 50, of which $24,-210,000, will be required during the current year, and there will also be required, for the use of the War Department additional appropriations to the amount of $2,511,132 98, the special objects of which will be seen by reference to the report of the Secretary of War. The anticipated means of the Treasury are greatly inadequate to this demand. The receipts from Customs for the last three quarters of a year and the first quarter of the present year, amounted to $12,-100,000. The receipts for lands for the same time to $2,742,450, showing an average revenue from both sources of $1,236,870 per month. A gradual expansion of trade, growing out of a restoration of confidence, together with a reduction in the expenses of collecting and punctuality on the part of collecting officers, may cause an addition to the monthly receipts from the customs. They are estimated for the residue of the year from the 4th of March, at $12,000,000; the receipts form the public lands, for the same time, are estimated at $2,500,000; and from miscellaneous sources at 170,-000 dollars; making an aggregate of available funds within the year of $14,-670,000 which will leave a probable deficit of $11,406,132 98. To meet this some temporary provision is necessary until the amount can be absorbed by the excess of revenues which are anticipated to accrue at no distant day. There will fall due within the next 3 months, Treasury notes of the issues of 1840 including interest, about $2,850,000. There is chargeable in the same period, for arrearages for taking the 6th census, $294,-000, and the estimated expenditures for the current service are about $8,100,000 making the aggregate demand upon the Treasury, prior to the 5th of September next, about $11,340,000.

The ways and means in the Treasury and estimated to accrue within the above named period, consists of about $694,000 of funds available on the 28th ult., an unissued balance of Treasury notes authorized by the act of 1841, amounting to $1,-955,000, and estimated receipts from all sources, of 3,800,000, making an aggregate of about $6,450,000, and leaving a profitable deficit on the first of September next, of $4,845.000.

In order to supply the wants of the Government, an intelligent constituency in view of their best interests, will without hesitation, submit to all necessary burthens. But it is, nevertheless, important so to impose them as to avoid defeating the just expectations of the country, growing out of pre-existing laws. The act of the second March, 1833, commonly called the Compromise act, should not be altered, except under urgent necessities, which are not believed at this time to exist. One year only remains to complete the series of reductions provided for by that law, at which time provisions made by the same law, and which then will be brought actively in aid of the manufacturing interests of the Union, will not fail to produce the most beneficial results.—Under a system of discriminating duties, imposed for purposes of revenue, in union with the provisions of existing laws, it is to be hoped that our policy will in the future be fixed and permanent—so as to avoid those constant fluctations which defeat the very objects they have in view. We shall thus best maintain a position, while it will enable us the more readily to meet the advances of other countries calculated to promote our trade and commerce, will at the same time leave in our own hands the means of retaliating, with greater effect, unjust regulations.

In intimate connexion with the question of revenue, is that which makes provision for a suitable fiscal agent, capable of adding increasing facilities in the collection and disbursement of the public revenues, rendering more secure their custody, and consulting true economy in the great multiplied and delicate operations of the Treasury Department. Upon such an agent depends, in an eminent degree, the establishment of a currency of uniform value, which is of so great importance to all the essential interests of society, and on the wisdom to be manifested in its creation much depends. So intimately interwoven are its operations, not only with the interests of individuals but of States, that it may be regarded, to a great degree, as controlling both. If paper be used as the chief medium of circulation, and the power be vested in the Government of issuing it at pleasure, either in the form of Treasury drafts or any other; or if Banks be used as the public depositories, with liberty to regard all surplusses from day to day, as so much added to their capital, prices are exposed to constant fluctations, and industry to severe suffering.

In the one case political considerations directed to party purposes may control, while excessive cupidity may prevail in the other. The public is then constantly liable to imposition. Expansions and contractions may follow each other in rapid succession—the one engendering a reckless spirit of adventure and speculation, which embraces States as well as individuals—the other causing a fall in prices, and accomplishing an entire change in the aspect of affairs.—Stocks of all sorts rapidly decline, individuals are ruined, and States are embarrassed—even in their efforts to meet with punctuality the interest of their debts. Such unhappily is the condition of things now existing in the United States. These efforts may readily be traced to the causes above referred to.—The public revenues being removed from the then Bank of the United States, under an order of a late President, were placed in selected State Banks, which actuated by the double motive of conciliating the Government and augmenting their profits to the greatest possible extent, enlarged extravagantly their discounts, thus enabling all other existing banks to do the same. Like dividends were declared which stimulating the cupidity of capitalists, caused a rush to be made to the Legislatures of the respective States for similar acts of incorporation, by which many of the States, under a temporary infatuation, were readily granted—and thus the augmentation of the circulating medium, consisting almost exclusively of paper, produced a most fatal delusion.—An illustration derived from the land sales of the period alluded to, will serve best to show the effect of the whole system. The average sales of the public lands for a period of ten years prior to 1834, had not much exceeded $2,000,000 per annum.—In 1834, they attained in round numbers to the amount of $6,000,000, in the succeeding year of 1835, they reached $16.000,-000, and the next year, of 1836, they amounted to the enormous sum of $25,000,-000—thus crowding into the short space of three years upwards of seventy-three years' purchase of the public domain.

So apparent had become the necessity of arresting this course of things, that the Executive Department assumed the highly questionable power of discriminating in the funds to be used in payment, by different classes of public debtors. A discrimination which was doubtlessly designed to correct this most ruinous state of things, by the exaction of specie in all payments for the public lands, but which could not at once arrest the tide which had so strongly set in. Hence the demands for specie became unceasing, and corresponding prostration rapidly ensued under the necessities created with the banks, to curtail their discounts, and thereby to reduce their circulation. I recur to these things with no disposition to censure pre-existing administrations of the Government, but simply in exemplification of the truth of the position which I have assumed. If, then, any fiscal agent which may be created, shall be placed without due restrictions, either in the hands of the administrators of the Government, or those of private individuals, the temptation to abuse will be resistless. Objects of political aggrandisement may seduce the first, and the promptings of a boundless cupidity will assail the last. Aided by the experience of the past, it will be the pleasure of Congress so to guard and fortify the public interests, in the creation of any new agent, as to place them, so far as human wisdom can accomplish it, on a footing of perfect security. Within a few years past, three different schemes have been before the country. The charter of the Bank of the United States expired by its own limitations in 1836; an effort was made to renew it which received the sanction of the two Houses of Congress, but the then President of the United States, exercised his veto power, and the measure was defeated. A regard to truth requires me to say, that the President was fully sustained in the course he had taken by the popular voice. His successor to the Chair of State unqualifiedly pronounced his opposition to any new charter of a simlilar institution; and not only the popular elections which brought him into power, but the elections through much of his term seemed clearly to indicate a concurrence with him in sentiment on the part of the people.

After the public moneys were withdrawn from the United States Bank, they were placed in deposite with the State Banks, and the result of that policy has been before the country. To say nothing as to the question whether that experiment was made under propitious or adverse circumstances, it may safely be asserted that it did receive the unqualified condemnation of most of its early advocates, and it is believed was also condemned by the popular sentiment. The existing Sub-Treasury system does not seem to stand in higher favor with the people, but has recently been condemned in a manner too plainly indicated to admit of a doubt. Thus, in the short period of eight years, the popular voice may be regarded as having successively condemned each of the three schemes of finance to which I have adverted. As to the first, it was introduced at a time (1816) when the State Banks, then comparatively few in number, had been forced to suspend specie payments by reason of the war which had previously prevailed with Great Britain. Whether, if the United States Bank charter which expired in 1811, had been renewed in due season, it would have been enabled to continue specie payments, during the war, and the disasterous period to the commerce of the country which immediately succeeded, is, to say the least, problematical; and whether the U. States Bank of 1816 produced a restoration of specie payments, or the same was accomplished through the instrumentality of other means, was a matter of some difficulty at that time to determine,—certain it is, that for the first years of the operation of that bank, its course was as disasterous as for the greater part of its subsequent career, it became eminently successful. As to the second, the experiment was tried with a redundant Treasury, which continued to increase until it seemed to be the part of wisdom to distribute the surplus revenue among the States—which, operating at the same time with the specie circular, and the causes before adverted to, caused them to suspend specie payments, and involved the country in the greatest embarrassment. And as to the third, if carried through all the stages of its transmutation, from paper and specie, to nothing but the precious metals, to say nothing of the insecurity of the public moneys, its injurious effects have been anticipated by the country, in its unqualified condemnation.

What is now to be regarded as the judgment of the American people on this whole subject, I have no accurate means of determining but by appealing to their more immediate representatives. The late contest, which terminated in the election of General Harrison to the Presidency, was decided on principles well known and openly declared; and while the Sub-Treasury received in the result the most decided condemnation, yet no other scheme of finance seemed to be concurred in. To you, then, who have come more directly from the body of our common constituents, I submit the entire question, as best qualified to give a full exposition of their wishes and opinions. I shall be ready to concur with you in the adoption of such system as you may propose, reserving to myself the ultimate power of rejecting any measure which may, in my view of it, conflict with the Constitution, or otherwise jeopardize the power of the country—a power which I could not part with even if I would—but which I will not believe any act of yours will call into requisition.

I cannot avoid recurring, in connection with this subject, to the necessity which exists for adopting some suitable measure whereby the unlimited creation of Banks by the States may be corrected in future. Such result can be most readily achieved by the consent of the States, to be expressed in the form of a compact among themselves, which they can only enter into with the consent and approbation of this Government. A consent which might in the present emergency of the public demands, justifiably be given by Congress in advance of any action by the States as an inducement to such action upon terms well defined by the act of tender. Such a measure, addressing itself to the calm reflection of the States would find in the experience of the past, and the condition of the present, much to sustain it—and it is greatly to be doubted whether any scheme of finance can prove for any length of time successful, while the States shall continue in unrestrained power of creating banking corporation. This power can only be limited by their consent.

With the adoption of a financial agency of a satisfactory character, the hope may be indulged that the country may once more return to a state of prosperity—measures auxiliary thereto, and in some measures inseparable, connected with its success will doubtless claim the attention of Congress. Among such a distribution of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, provided such distribution does not force upon Congress the necessity of imposing upon commerce heavier burthens than those contemplated by the act of 1833, would act as an efficient remedial measures by being brought directly in aid of the States. As one sincerely devoted to the task of preserving a just balance in our system of our government by the maintenance of the States in condition the most frec and respectable, and in the full possession of all their power, I can no otherwise than feel desirous for their emancipation from the situation to which the pressure on their finances now subject them. And while I must repudiate, as a measure founded in error, and wanting constitutional sanction, the slightest approach to an assumption by this Government of the debts of the States, yet I can see in the distribution adverted to, much to recommend it.

The compacts between the proprietor States and this Government expressly guarantee to the States all the benefits which may arise from the sales.—The mode by which this is to be effected addresses itself to the discretion of Congress as the trustees for the States; and its exercise, after the most beneficial manner is restrained by nothing in the grants or in the Constitution so long as Congress shall consult that equality in this distribution which the compacts require. In the present condition of some of the States the question of distribution may be regarded as substantially a question between direct and indirect taxation. If this distribution be not made in some form or other, the necessity will daily become more urgent with the debtor States for a resort to an oppressive system of direct taxation, or their credit and necessarily their power & influence will be greatly diminished. The payment of taxes after the most inconvenient and oppressive mode, will be exacted in place of contributions for the most part voluntarily made, and therefore comparatively unoppressive. The States are emphatically the constituents of this Government, and we should be entirely regardless of the objects held in view by them in the creation of this Government, if we could be indifferent to their good. The happy effects of such a measure upon all the States, would immediately be manifested. With the debtor States, it would effect the relief, to a great extent, of the citizens from a heavy burthen of direct taxation, which presses with severity on the laboring classes, and eminently assist in restoring the general prosperity.

An immediate advance would take place in the price of the State securities, and the attitude of the States would become once more, as they should be, lofty and erect. With States laboring under no extreme pressure from debt, the fund which they would derive from this source would enable them to improve their condition in an eminent degree. So far as this Government is concerned, appropriations to domestic objects, approaching in amount the revenue derived from the land sales, might be abandoned, and thus a system of unequal and therefore unjust legislation would be substituted by one dispensing equality to all the members of this confederacy.—Whether such distributions should be made directly to the States in the proceeds of the sales, or in the form of profits by virtue of the operations of any fiscal agency having those proceeds as its basis, should such measure be contemplated by Congress, would well deserve its consideration. Nor would such disposition of the proceeds of the sales, in any manner, prevent Congress from time to time from passing all necessary pre-emption laws for the benefit of the actual settlers, or from making any new arrangement as to the price af the public lands which might in future be esteemed desirable.

I beg leave particularly to call your attention to the accompanying report from the Secretary of War. Besides the present state of the war which has so long afflicted the Territory of Florida, and the various other matters of interest therein referred to, you will learn from it that the Secretary has instituted an inquiry into abuses, which promises to develop gross enormities in connection with Indian treaties which have been negotiated, as well as in the expenditures for the removal and subsistence of the Indians. He represents also other irregularities of a serious nature that have grown up in the practice of the Indian Department, which will require the appropriation of upwards of $200,000 to correct, and which claim the immediate attention of Congress.

In reflecting on the proper means of defending the country, we cannot shut our eyes to the consequences, which the introduction and use of the power of steam upon the ocean are likely to produce in wars between maritime states. We cannot yet see the extent to which this power may be applied in belligerent operations, connecting itself as it does with recent improvements in science of gunnery and projectiles; but we need have no fear of being left, in regard to those things, behind the most active and skilful of other nations, if the genius and enterprise of our fellow-citizens receive proper encouragement and direction from Government.

True wisdom would nevertheless, seem to dictate the necessity of placing in perfect condition those fortifications which are designed for the protection of our principal cities and roadsteads. For the defence of our extensive maritime coast, our chief reliance should be placed on our Navy, aided by those inventions which are destined to recommend themselves to public adoption—but no time should be lost in placing our principal cities on the sea-board, and the lakes, in a state of entire security from foreign assault. Separated as we are, from the countries of the Old World, and in much unaffected by their policy, we are happily relieved from the necessity of maintaining large standing armies in times of peace. The policy which was adopted by Mr. Monroe, shortly after the conclusion of the late war with Great Britain, of preserving a regularly organized staff, sufficient for the command of a large military force, should the necessity of one arise, is founded as well in economy as in true wisdom. Provision is thus made, upon filling up the rank and file, which can readily be done on an emergency, for the introduction of a system of discipline, both promptly and efficiently. All that is required in time of peace is to maintain a sufficent number of men to guard our fortifications, to meet any sudden contingency, and to encounter the first shock of war. Our chief reliance must be placed on the militia; they constitute the great body of national guards, and, inspired by an ardent love of country, will be ready at all times, and at all seasons to repair with alacrity to its defence. It will be regarded by Congress, I doubt not, at a suitable time, as one of its highest duties to attend to their complete organization and discipline.

The state of the Navy pension fund requires the immediate attention of Congress. By the operation of the act of the 3d of March, 1837, entitled an act for the more equitable administration of the Navy Pension fund—that fund has been exhausted. It will be seen, from the accompanying report of the Commissioner of pensions, that there will be required for the payment of Navy pensions, on the first of July next, $84,006 06¼, and on the first of January 1842, the sum of $60.000. In addition to these sums, about $6.000 will be required to pay arrears of pensions which will probably be allowed between the first of July and the first of January, 1842, making in the whole, $150,000,06¼. To meet these payments there is, within the control of the Department, the sum of $28,040 leaving a deficiency of $121,966,06¼. The public faith requires that immediate provision should be made for the payment of these sums.

In order to introduce into the Navy a desirable efficiency, a new system of accountability may be found to be indispensably necessary. To mature a plan having for its object the accomplishment of an end so important, and to meet the just expectations of the country, require more time, than has yet been allowed to the Secretary of the head of that Department. The hope is indulged, that by the time of your next regular session, measures of importance in connexion with this branch of the public service may be matured for your consideration.

Although the laws regulating the Post Office Department only require from the Officer charged with its direction to report at the usual annual session of Congress, the Postmaster General has presented to me some facts connected with the financial condition of the Department which are deemed worthy the attention of Congress. By the accompanying report of that officer, it appears the existing liabilities of that department, beyond the means of payment at its command cannot be less than $500,000. As the laws authorizing that branch of the public service, confine the expenditure to its own revenues; deficiencies therein cannot be presented under the usual estimates for the expenses of Government. It must therefore, be left to Congress to determine whether the moneys now due the contractors shall be paid from the public Treasury, or whether that Department shall continue under its present embarrassment.

It will be seen, by the report of the Postmaster General, that the recent lettings of contracts, in several of the States, have been at such reduced rates of compensation, as to encourage the belief that if the Department was relieved from existing difficulties, its future operations might be conducted without any further call upon the general Treasury.

The power of appointing to office is one of a character the most delicate and responsible. The appointing power is evermore exposed to be led into error; with anxious solicitude to select the most trustworthy for official station, I cannot be supposed to possess a personal knowledge of the qualification of every applicant. I deem it, therefore, proper in this public manner, to invite on the part of the Senate, a just scrutiny into the character and pretentions of every person I may bring to their notice in the regular form of nomination for office. Unless persons every way trustworthy are employed in the public service corruption and irregularity will inevitably follow. I shall, with the greatest cheerfulness, acquiesce in the decision of that body; and regarding it as wisely constituted to aid the Executive Department in the performance of this delicate duty, shall look to its "consent and advice" as given only in furtherance of the best interests of the country. I shall also at the earliest proper occasion, invite the attention of Congress to such measures as, in my judgment, will be best calculated to regulate and control the executive power, in reference to this vitally important subject.

I shall also at the proper season, invite your attention to the statutary enactments for the suppression of the slave trade, which may require to be rendered more efficient in their provisions. There is reason to believe that the traffic is on the increase. Whether such increase is to be ascribed to the abolition of slave labor in the British possessions in our vicinity, and an attendant diminution in the supply of those articles which enter into the general consumption of the world, thereby augmenting the demand from other quarters, and thus calling for additional labor, it were needless to inquire. The highest considerations of public honor, as well as the strongest promptings of humanity, require a resort to the most vigorous efforts to suppress the trade.

In conclusion, I beg to invite your particular attention to the interest of this District; nor do I doubt but that, in a liberal spirit of legislation, you will seek to advance its commercial as well as its local interests. Should Congress deem it to be its duty to repeal the existing Sub-Treasury law, the necessity of providing a suitable place of deposit for the public moneys, which may be required within the District, must be apparent to all.

I have felt it due to the country to present the foregoing topics to your consideration and reflection. Others, with which it might not seem proper to trouble you at an extraordinary session will be laid, before you at a future day. I am happy in committing the important affairs of the country into your hands. The tendency of public sentiment, I am pleased to believe, is towards the adoption, in a spirit of union and harmony, of such measures as will fortify the public interests. To cherish such a tendency of public opinion, is the task of an elevated patriotism. That differences of opinion, as to the means of accomplishing these desireable objects, should exist, is reasonably to be expected. Nor can all be made satisfied with any system of measures; but I flatter myself with the hope that the great body of the people will readily unite in support of those whose efforts spring from a disinterested desire to promote their happiness—to preserve the Federal and State Governments within their respective orbits—to cultivate peace with all the nations of the earth on just and honorable grounds—to exact obedience to the laws—to entrench liberty and property in full security—and, consulting the most rigid economy, to abolish all useless expenses.

WASHINGTON, June 1, 1841.

AWFUL MURDER.—The Rockingham Register contains an account of a horrid murder, recently committed in Rockingham—a father was murdered by his own son. This fearful crime, says the Register, was the result of a drunken frolic, in which father, mother, and son were all engaged. The murderer has been brought before an examining court and discharged, it appearing that the father made the attack, in in repelling which the fatal wound was inflicted. The son defended himself with a hoe, a blow with which stove in the parent's skull, and laid him dead at his feet.

SHIN-PLASTERS.—The corporation of Putnam issued a considerable lot of shin-plasters.— y have this merit, they are very decent look- and, for the want of something better, pass e current.

ZANESVILLE.—Wheat on Saturday was 65 cts; have not inquired since. This advance is ng in part to a strife among the millers. The es of flour, at the east, are somewhat advan- and reported to be a little brisker. Beef; Philadelphia, 1st inst. 6,50 a 8,00; Baltimore, ult. 7,00 a 7,50.

FRUIT.—Our fruit prospect is now settled. The le crop will be light in most places; peach rable—even the flat lands will give a mod- e yield, which makes two crops in succession the low levels of the country—a thing rather ommon. There will not be quite enough ries for the birds.

WESTERN FARMER.—The May number is re- ed; and it is one of much interest.

☞John W. Bear, the political lecturer, it is , is appointed Indian Agent at Upper San- ky, with a salary of 750 dollars,—Purdy Mc'- ain removed.

☞A verdict of 1600 dollars was recently ren- d in the court of Mason county, Ky., against Rev. John B. Mahan, for aiding, as alleged, slaves to escape to Canada, in 1836. TWENTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS—EXTRA-SESSION.

Washington, May 31, 1841.

The two houses of the twenty-seventh Congress nvened yesterday at the Capitol, and a quorum both being present, concluded their organiza- n, and adjourned. We were happy to observe emarkably full attendance, and good health nerally prevailing among the members.

In the House of Representatives, Hon. John hite, of Kentucky, was elected Speaker on first voting, and Matthew St. Clair Clarke, this city, Clerk, on the 4th trial.

Washington, June 1.

IN SENATE.—At eleven o'clock the Senate met rsuant to adjournment. Messrs. Calhoun, Buch- an and Henderson appeared and took their ats.

A message was received from the House of Rep- sentatives by the Clerk, informing the Senate at the body was organised and ready to proceed business.

Mr. Huntington moved a concurrence in the solution of the House for the appointment of a mmittee to wait upon the President.

Mr. Allen moved to strike out the word Presi- nt and insert Vice President. He supported s argument by constitutional authority, show- g the impropriety of designating the present ief Magistrate as President.

Mr. Tappan followed on the same side, sustain- g the views of Mr. Allen, and illustrating his sition by reference to practice in the Court of ing's Bench and the Army.

Mr. Huntingdon was opposed to the amend- ent; he thought no good could arise from the scussion, and he hoped Congress would go to rk.

Mr. Walker differed with the Senator from nio. He thought that the Constitution in- nded that the Vice President in such a contin- ncy as had now arisen should succeed to the fice of President.

Mr. Calhoun agreed with Mr. Walker. He ought it was not a proper time to go into the scussion of the question. Perhaps it might be cessary hereafter.

The Ayes and Noes were taken on the mo- on of Mr. Allen, and it was rejected 38 to 8.

The resolution of the House was then adopted.

A committee of two were appointed to wait on the President.

Messrs. Huntington and Archer were appoint- d by the Chair.

At 12½ o'clock his message was received by his ivate Secretary.

After the reading of the message,

Mr. Mangum moved that ten thousand copies e printed—but subsequently modified it to five motion of Mr. Clay.

Some remarks were made by Messrs. Clay, alhoun and Preston on the subject of reform— l concurring in the view that great reforms ere necessary.

Mr. Clay moved that the Senate proceed to- orrow to the appointment of the Standing Com- ittees, and gave notice that he should to-mor- w move for the appointment of a select commit- ee on the subject of the currency.

On motion of Mr. Preston the Senate adjourn- d till twelve o'clock to morrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—The journal hav- ng been read, Mr. Wise moved to waive, for the resent, the consideration of his motion to adopt he Standing-rules and orders of the last Con- ress, &c., for the purpose of receiving the Presi- ent's Message.

This motion, with the amendment of Mr. Ad- ms, was under consideration when the House ad- ourned.

Mr Pickens inquired whether the gentleman from Virginia desired the immediate reception of the Message.

Mr. Wise said he did, as soon as practicable.

Mr. Adams took strong ground in favor of his amendment, the effect of which would be to res- cind the rule of the House excluding Abolition petitions. He said the rule was a violation of the Constitution. A rule might as well be adopt- ed forbidding the reception of nine-tenths of the petitions from the north of Mason and Dixon's line and permitting the reception of all the peti- tions south of that line. Mr. Adams spoke at con- siderable length, with his accustomed animation and ability.

On motion of Mr. Wise, the whole matter was laid on the table.

Mr Pickens moved that the seats in the hall be assigned to members in alphabetical order.

Mr. Slade moved to amend the motion so as to provide that the members should cast lots for the seats.

Mr. King, of Georgia, moved further to amend the resolution, so as to direct the Clerk to re- move the desks from the hall. Mr. King, spoke at some length and with much earnestness in sup- port of his motion. He said the house present- ed the appearance of an irregular, badly ordered counting room, rather than a deliberative assem- bly.

Mr. Bidlack, of Pennsylvania, spoke briefly in opposition to the motion of Mr. King, and in fa- of Mr. Pickens' motion.

Mr. Cost Johnson moved to lay the whole mat- on the table.

On this, the ayes and nays were called, and the motion was lost.

The Message of the President was then receiv- ed and read by the Clerk.

On motion of Mr. Slade, 10,000 copies of the Message were ordered to be printed.

Mr. Barnard moved the usual reference of the topics of the Message.

Mr. Graham, of North Carolina, gave notice of a resolution to repeal the Sub-Treasury.

And the house adjourned to 12 o'clock to-mor- row.

"IMPORTANT DECISION ON SLAVERY."—A para- graph, under this caption is now "going the rounds of the papers," to the effect that the Su- preme court of Ohio have decided, "that if the owner of a slave voluntarily bring him into this State, or permit him to come, although it should only be for the purpose of visiting or passing through from one slave State to another, the slave in such cases becomes a free man the mo- ment he touches the soil of Ohio."

But this seems not to have been exactly cor- rect, there having been some misapprehension as to what the court did decide. The editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, having made inquiries up- on the subject, states the following as the facts:

"The Court did not decide the question wheth- er a servant could be taken through the State with his master, or whether the master moving from one state to another, could pass through Ohio with his slaves, retaining his property in them. These questions were not presented, or decided. But the judge in giving the decision, made some remarks indicating his opinion that in such case the slave would be free. Yet as those points were not involved in the decision, the remarks can only be regarded as extra judicial, and the questions remain open ones in this State."— Cab. & Vis.

ANOTHER LOSS BY ICE.—Ship Isabella, Mere- dith, from London, for Quebec, was struck by an iceberg on the 9th May, in lat. 42 2, lon. 33 45. The iceberg broke through the bows, and caused the ship to fill with water so fast, that the crew had barely time to take to the boats, without wa- ter, provisions, or clothing; the ship immediately went down or disappeared in the fog. The crew continued in the boat, at the mercy of the waves. until the afternoon of the 11th, when they were picked up by the Kingston, of Hull, bound to Pictou, and kindly treated. They arrived at Pictou on Thursday last. One man (George Moore) died in the boat.

BANK ROBBERY.—The Frederick county Bank, Md., was entered by means of false keys, some- time between Saturday evening and Monday morning of last week, and robbed of 185,976 dol- lars, in specie, notes, &c. A reward of 10,000 dollars is offered for the apprehension of the rob- ber and recovery of the money, or 5,000 dollars for the recovery of the money alone.

The amount stolen exceeds the capital some 10,000 dollars. The bank has closed for the pres- ent.

R. V. Curry, who was recently arrested in Virginia, on a charge of having forged a check for 2,500 dolls., and received the money, on the Merchants' and Farmers' Bank of Ithica, New York, and whose delivery, on the demand of Gov. Seward, was refused by Gov. Gilmer, of Virginia, but was afterwards granted by Mr. Patton who succeeded to the gubernatorial chair of Virginia on the resignation of Gov. Gilmer—has been tried in Ithica, convicted and sent to the Peni- tentiary for five years.

THE GREAT FORGER NOT ARRESTED.—Late ad- vices from St. Louis, informs us that on the 20th, a young man named Scott, alias Williams, alias Sutton, and who was arrested as Draper the for- ger, had a hearing before Judge Bowlin; but the evidence was not sufficient to authorise his com- mittal. While at St. Louis, he has passed un- der several different names, and had behaved in a very suspicious manner. One of the papers describes him as named Sutton, and the natural son, of Mr. Sutton, late Speaker of the British House of Parliament. He was at large on the 21st.

STEAM-SHIP PRESIDENT.—The N. York Com- mercial Advertiser says there were two persons on board this unfortunate vessel whose names have not reached the public. In the published list, "Mr Howell and friend" are named.— That friend was Mrs. Howell, who was married to Mr. Howell a few hours before the steamer left the port. The other was Mr. Robert Hamilton Dundas, of the British Navy, a promising young officer.

MELANCHOLY SHIPWRECK—148 Lives lost.— The ship Minstrel left Limerick, Ireland, 21st of April bound to Quebec, with emigrants for Can- ada. On Tuesday week she struck on Red Is- land Reef, and 148 human beings found a wat- ery grave. Eight only were saved in the gig of the vessel.

FALL OF A MOUNTAIN.—A part of the moun- tain called Cape Diamond, situated near the city of Quebec, fell on the 17th ult., covering more than thirty persons; of whom 26 were killed.— The precise number buried has not been ascer- tained.

The Dayton (O.) Transcript says that the Bank at that place has decided to issue one hun- dred and seventy four thousand dollars of paper redeemable in current Bank notes. This Bank contrived to pay specie until a few months since, by contradicting its circulation to the smallest limit.

THE GREAT CANAL.—A bill appropriating $2,150,000 for the Erie Canal enlargement, $300, 000 for the Black River Canal, and $550,000 for the Genessee Valley Canal, has passed the New York legislature.

SPECIE IN ENGLAND.—Her Brit. Majesty's ship Electra, left Valpariso, Chili, in February last, for England, with over a million of dollars in spe- cie, 700,000 of which she got on the Coast of Mex- ico, the balance at Valpariso.

CROPS AND CORN LAWS.—The partial failure which attended the last crop of grain in the harvesting countries of Eu- rope, with the present prospects of the forthcoming one, are topics that are en- grossing the attention of a large portion of the world, and from the commotion which they are at this moment occasion- ing in England, are not without some degree of interest to the people of the United States. While our country, amid all her difficulties, has been blest with abundant harvests, yielding about seven times as much grain as the absolute wants of her own population calls for, the wheat growing countries in Europe, with but little exception, have been suffering a dearth, so that those who were heretofore looked to to supply whatever deficiencies there might have been in other countries, have scarcely been able to supply their own people with the staff of life without having any surplus to export elsewhere. In Russia the three last crops have been so deficient that an edict is issued, pro- hibiting the exportation of corn. The great depots upon the Baltic, from which England has been used to draw large supplies in times of domestic dearth, have experienced a scarcity and an advance of prices, while the entire north of the continent has suffered to a still greater extent, so much so in several parts as scarcely to produce sufficient for the wants of its own population.

These facts are by no means uninter- esting to the raisers of, and the dealers in, bread-stuffs in the United States. A slight failure in English crops would at once open a way for large importations of wheat and flour, and with the present prospects of a modification of their own corn laws, it is evident that an extensive market may be opened for American pro- duce. The necessary quantity of grain required to find an individual in bread, young and old together, is, according to the most recent and accredited statistics, is about five bushels. The same statistics have shown that the late crops of bread- stuffs in the United States, after deduct- ing all that had been used in fattening cattle, distilling, brewing, &c., have aver- aged twenty-two bushels to each inhabi- tant, from which deduct the five bushels necessary to furnish sufficient for con- sumption, and there is a surplus of seven- teen bushels to each individual, or an ag- gregate of two hundred and eighty-nine millions of bushels, that might readily be spared for exportation. The following is the calculated proportion of each kind of bread-stuffs raised in the several states and territories of the Union, after ma- king the aforementioned deductions:

Wheat	66,089,947
Buckwheat	6,930,929
Potatoes	102,499,926
Corn	148,000,000
Rye	12,500,000
For Kentucky, N. Carolina, Wis- consin territory, &c. say	30,000,000
Bushels	366,020,802

With these immense resources, and in view of the fact that large additional tracts of fertile land in the great West, are annually laid under tribute to the plough and sickle, who does not see that our country possesses the means of draw- ing to herself a vast revenue from this source, in supplying foreign demands when an opportunity is afforded! Should England consent to a modification of her tariff, so as to place our trade upon a fairer basis, and to such a reduction of duty, upon bread-stuffs as will warrant our merchants in making shipments of it for remittances and consignments for sale a market will be at once opened for our surplus produce in which a fair compe- tition may be had that cannot but prove of advantage to producers here and the population there. The policy of Eng- land has been so to protect her agricultu- ral industry as that the producers of the West have been obliged to pay a hea- vy bonus tor the privilege of trade. Un- der the existing state of the corn laws, the duty upon imported flour is just enough to amount to a prohibition, seve- ral late shipments were sold at less per barrel than cost, consequently exports to England have been far short of what they otherwise would.

There is evidently a strong disposition manifested, in England, however, to mod- ify the duty upon flour and grain; and, indeed when we take into consideration the fact of her annual increase of popula- tion, and subsequent decrease of the means of supplying them with bread- stuffs, it is apparent, that it will yet be the policy of Britain, and that perhaps, at no far distant day, to admit flour and grain duty free. Unlike most other coun- tries, she has no unappropriated or half- populated territory to fall back upon, but just sufficient to supply the wants of the present population; her dependencies are unable to make up any deficiency in the crops of the mother earth, as most of them are, at this time, in a great measure dependent upon the United States for supplies. To the West Indies alone, 500,000 barrels of flour are annually ex- ported, besides more than as much again to South America, Canada, &c.

These considerations lead us to look forward to a greatly extended trade in grain and flour, between the United States and England, with her dependen- cies; and, perhaps, to the Continent it- self; the immensely increased production on the one hand, and an increased de- mand with a removal of obstructions to free trade upon the other, are fore run- ners of the era in our commercial histo- ry, and all that we ask to complete it is, a fair chance for a free trade, and the fertile fields of our land may be made to feed millions besides our own population. Phil. Chron.

DISTRESSING SCENE IN FLORIDA.—A most distressing scene took place about 35 miles from Jacksonville, East Florida, on the 13th ult. It appears that a party of In- dians who had been lurking in the vicini- ty, attacked the house of William Bar- ber, on the Brandy Branch, and after kil- ling Mr. Barber, by shooting him twice through the body, scalped him, and then stabbing him a number of times, stripped him of his clothes, and left him dead.— His wife was at a little distance from the house, at the cow-pen, about to milk her cows, when the report of the rifles star- tled her, and looking up, she saw a young Indian within the distance of 20 feet of her standing on a log, with his gun trail- ing in his hand. She sprang towards her husband, and the young Indian did not molest her, though he could have kill- ed her on the spot. Her husband, seeing her come into danger, begged of her for God's sake to save herself by flight, for said he, "I am done; save yourself and your children." She did fly, and as she turned away from the partner of her joys and sorrows on earth, he fell back on the ground, his hand grasped convulsively some pine straws on the ground, and his spirit sped to God that gave it.

By this time the Indians were in the house, and were plundering it of whatever they could carry off, when a little daugh- ter of Mr. Barber rushed in among them, and seizing her infant brother that was left by his mother when she went out, she hurried off in triumph with the innocent in her arms. The Indians did not see her nor the infant till she had it already out- side the door; one of them gave a horrid yell and commanded her to stop, but fear only lent her wings to fly for safety, and the savage was too greedy for plun- der to follow. Mrs. Barber, with her children hastened away from the scene of danger, and soon met four men who were going to Jacksonville, and who returned to the house, which the Indians had just left. They found the body of Mr. Barber, in the situation as before related, and af- ter assisting in its burial, they went on to Jacksonville. Day after day the same sad tales are repeated, but there are none to help the inhabitants in distress.— All the volunteers are disbanded and sent home (if they can be said to have homes) without their pay, and without a morsel of bread to feed their starving families.

THE GREAT FORGERY.—The N. O. Bul- letin says:—"As we have observed in the northern papers many contradictory state- ments in relation to the recent forgeries of the letters and certificates of some of our banking institutions, accompanied by improper comments and reflections, we have obtained the following particulars from a source which may be implicitly re- lied upon:

The indidviual known here as R. D. Mackey kept accounts, in the City, Mer- chants', Commercial, Atchafalaya, and Union banks. In order to effect his ob- ject, he went over to Mobile, and from that place addressed letters to the differ- ent cashiers, enclosing checks on the res- pective banks, with the request that Cer- tificates of Deposite be sent him by return of mail. Letters were of couase written in answer, and these served as models for handwriting, style, description of paper color of ink, seal, &c. He afterwards purchased several certificates for small amounts, the writing of which he extrac- ted by some chemical process, and then filled them up for the sums they now rep- resent, and transmitted the halves to the correspondents of the banks, the names of whom he easily ascertained by inquiry. He has, as far as is known, counterfeited the letter and certificates of deposit of the Commercial Bank, Atchafalaya Bank, and Merchants' Bank. Strange to say, this adroit villain succeeded in swindling the tellers of the Commercial Bank out of the sum of $885, in the following manner; he obtained first a certificate for $1000 and subsequently one of $115, the latter he altered to agree in number, date, amount, &c. with the former, and had the effron- tery to present it himself at the counter of the Bank for payment. The paying tel- ler observing something in the appear- ance of the certificate inquired of the clerk who fills up the certificates, whether it was really his writing, and was an- swered that he thought not. Mackey who was standing at the counter, laughingly remarked that the teller surely ought to know his own writing, and begged that reference be made to the books, which be- ing done and finding it to agree, the a- mount was paid. The genuine certificate for $1000 he had retained and is the one he afterwards negotiated in Cincinnatti for $13,000

The only companion he was known to have while in our city, was a man who passed by the name of Chambers, and who is supposed to have been the princi- pal in this nefarious business.

In addition, we learn that the Cashier of the City Bank received by Friday's mail, from his correspondent in New York, a forged letter purporting to be from that bank, which had enclosed a certificate sold here to the same individual (Mac- key) for a small amount altered to $17,- 000.

MAIL ROBBERS.—Three stage drivers were recently arrested in Detroit, Mich., for robbing the mail. Subsequently, one of the fellows confessed his guilt, and impli- cated the assistant P. M. Cambridge. The latter has also been nabbed, and is now in durance vile.

It is stated that A. C. Farrington, Ex-Presi- dent of the Gallipolis Bank, who was indicted for mal-practice, and whose bail bonds were $100,000 has succeeded in having the same reduced to fif- teen thousand, being five thousand for each indict- ment.

ICE IN THE ATLANTIC.—The Commer- cial Advertiser, of New York, published a chart on Saturday, showing the masses of ice encountered by the Great Western; on her last passage from England, their extent, position, &c. It was engraved from the original draft, furnished by Captain Hosken, and, aside, from its gen- eral interest, has one more particular from the light it throws apon the probable fate of the steam-ship President.

In the chart it is stated that the field of ice was fifty miles in extent. In a con- versation with Captain Hosken, about one hour previous to his departure, he gave it as his opinion, after mature re- flection, and a conversation with Capt. Bailey, of the South America, who was also in the ice, that the field which he saw extended to a distance of more than one hundred miles.

The English papers discredit and al- most ridicule the idea of ice being met with in certain latitudes—about 45—so early in the season. This chart shows that ice was met by the Great Western so low as 42, at a date much earlier than that assigned as the usual time for the appear- ance of ice in the Atlantic, May and June is the usual time; the ice encounter- ed by the Great Western was there in the middle of April.

We may add farther, that the Quebec paper of the 18th, report the loss of a ship—the Stadacona—by running upon ice off Cape Tay, Newfoundland; and the following paragraph is taken from the St. John's [N. B.] Herald of the 12th ult.

On the 20th April, in lat. 44 15. long. 48 2, the ship Alexander Edmond, arriv- ed at this port, was beset with ice all around, and the weather being very thick at the time, was in the midst of it for three days; but, by getting out spare sails and spars and fenders, and using the utmost vigilance and precaution, succeeded in forcing through it to the westward, and getting clear on the third day, the ship's bows and sides much chafed and cut. Saw large numbers of seals on the ice, which covered the sea to great distance.

We know—or at least we have strong reasons to believe—that the President took what is called the Northern passage. Captain Roberts declared his intention to do so, relying upon the fatal belief, that it was too early in the season for ice. But it seems that the ice, this year is unwon- tedly early, and in unusually large quan- tities: and there is too much reason to fear that the President fell in with ice, to the destruction of the vessel if not all on board.

DREADFUL COLLISION.—The packet ship Susquehannah, as she lies near Walnut street wharf, is a curiosity. She has lit- terally been rescued from the jaws of the great deep. She came in collision with a ship off the Banks of Newfoundland, on the 8th ult. at four o'clock in the morn- ing. The night was not dark, but the sea was running high, and they did not discover each other until the fearful col- lision. The Susquehannah's bowsprit is taken off clean, and the cut-water torn and wrenched from the ship in a way which shows the encounter must have been tremendous. She was running at the rate of nine knots, and shipping seas constantly at the time. The impression on board the Susquehannah is, that the blow was so hard and so near the centre of the other ship, that she must have been totally disabled, if not stove in, causing her to sink immediately. After the collision, she slewed round, and grated past the Sus- quehannah, with such rapidity, that no op- portunity was given to discover who she was or the extent of her injuries. The impression on board is, that she was an East Indianman, or some ship of the larg- est class, and as the cut-water of the Sus- quehannah is taken off low down, she was upon a sea at the moment of the col- lision. Consequently the other ship must have suffered the more severely. No cries were heard, and in the confusion of the crash, and anxiety for self-preservation, no distinct knowledge of the other ship could be learned. The opinion on board is, that the man at the wheel of the ill-fa- ted ship must have been killed instantly. The whole of the painful encounter is on- ly another evidence of the unavoidable hazards of navigation. Perhaps the ship instantly foundered, and at one fell swoop all on board were ushered into eternity together. If so, her fate will never satis- factorily be known, and the history of those engulphed with her must continue to be involved in doubt and obscurity forev- er.

THEATRE STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.—Dur- ing the thunder storm on Tuesday after- noon, about five o'clock, the conductor at- tached to the Front Street Theatre, Bal- timore, says the Clipper, was struck by lightning. The fluid passed down the spout, shattered a number of windows and shook the whole building to its foundation. Several of the actors, musicians, and those engaged otherwise, were in and about the house at the time, three or four of whom were very seriously stunned, and knock- ed down by the shock. The cupalo was somewhat injured. A little child which had been playing in Low street, was so affected by the concussion of the elements as to drop down upon the pavement. Ma- ny of the neighbors, in the immediate vicinity of the establishment, we learn, felt the shock very sensible. We are happy in stating, however, that no serious injury was sustained by any one. This was certainly a miraculous escape, and adds another proof of the benefits result- ing from the use of lightning conductors.

A SUCCESSFUL FAIR.—At a recent fair at the Cathedral in Baltimore, the profits amounted to 7,500 dollars.

Young Semmes, charged with the murder of Professor Davis, is sinking into a consumption, and it is doubted whether he will be brought to trial—in this world.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

MEADOW FARM, JUNE 3, 1841.

Br. Springer: As the discipline of the church makes it the duty of Superintendents of circuits and stations, to give information quarterly to the President of the Conference, when practical, respecting the spiritual state of their respective charges, it is to be inferred that it is the duty of the latter to publish quarterly the condition of the district. I, therefore, proceed to the dis- charge of this duty.

In consequence of many of the superinten- dents having neglected the observance of the dis- ciplinary requirement, our information is some- what limited. When I wrote you in February last, a meeting was in progress in Belmont, which resulted favorably. There appears to be a state of general prosperity on the Georgetown circuit. On the Mt. Pleasant circuit the churches have been much revived this year. The society in Mt. Pleasant, has suffered loss, the two past years for want of a house of worship. Their new church will be completed in a short time. Here I would say, in consequence of the embarrassments and removal of several of those who subscribed two years ago, for it was then the house was put under contract, the society will be about $700 in debt. The members are in very moderate circumstances. It appears to me if there be a case within the range of my entire acquaintance, which calls for the sympathy, and liberality of the friends of the church at a distance, it is the embarrassed state of that society. Brethren of Pittsburgh, Alle- gheny and Steubenville, I beg of you to be liber- al when waited on in view of that object; par- don my appeal. I know your generosity.

But to return. Allegheny station prospers under the superintendence of Br. Burns. Deers- ville circuit is in a good state. Brs. Warren, and Burgess are faithful laborers in the vineyard of the Lord. Woodsfield is a weak circuit. Br. Waddle has succeeded as well on it as any of us us would have done. There has been some inter- esting revivals on Pisgah circuit, this year. We had a profitable meeting in Pennsville. Br. Ostrom is relieved from his charge in view of his removal to the Ohio Conference, and Br. Tracy is appointed in his stead. My appointment for Cambridge circuit was at Ragan's Chapel. Ta- king into consideration the very disagreeable state of the weather, &c, the meeting was as profitable, as in the ordinary course of events could have been expected. Cambridge circuit has improved under the administration of Br. Marshall, and is one of the most pleasant ap- pointments in the conference.

The sickness of one of my children prevented my meeting my appointment, on Coshocton cir- cuit. I intend to be there on the 5th and 6th inst. Br. Foster is faithful and much beloved on Adamsville circuit. He labors for a kind peo- ple. We had a pleasant meeting in Brownsville on Zanesville circuit. There are many mem- bers of sterling worth on this circuit. They are well pleased with their preaching. In Lancaster I still find the same spirit of hospitality which was manifested during the conference of 1838. The state of religion is low, in all the churches. Under the judicious management of Br. Maynard good has been done in this station. Last Sab- bath I was at Br. Thrap's quarterly meeting on Newark circuit. It was held at Hanover church. The official members were principally in attend- ance. Their quarterly conference is composed principally of aged, intelligent and deeply pious men. Br. Thrap is pleasantly situated, among very hospitable people. The intelligence is very cheering from Union, Youngstown, Wayne, Mt. Vernon and Sandusky circuits.

With sentiments of gratitude to God for tem- poral health, and spiritual enjoyments, I sub- scribe myself your brother and fellow laborer in the Gospel. ZACH. RAGAN.

C. Springer, V. D. M.

P. S. The next session of our Annual Con- ference, being the time to elect the delegates to the General Conference, in this district, it is hoped, that the brethren of the district circuits and stations, will bear in mind the disciplinary provision "THAT all the delegates must be lay- men." See discipline Page 48.

Our unstationed brethren in the ministry will remember their privileges. See Discipline, pages 23, 57. Z. R.

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED—On the 2d of June, by the Rev. Zachariah Ragan, President of the Pittsburgh District, Rev. JOHN BEATTY, of the Pittsburgh Conference, to Miss ELIZABETH C., daughter of Rev. Jacob Myers, of Lancaster, Ohio.

Business Department.

Br. Springer: You will confer a favor by pub- lishing the following plan of appointments, viz:

Wayne ct.	July 4	Clearfield ct.	Aug. 1
Granger	" 11	Ligonier	" 8
Cleveland	" 18

Yours, &c. Z. RAGAN.

Mr. Editor: Will you be so kind as to give no- tice for me of the following additional appoint- ments;

Union circuit, June	13	Lima circuit, July	4
Findley "	" 27	Miami "	" 11

The above named appointment for Findley is in accordance with my engagement with Brother Guest. If it would suit as well for his meeting to occupy the third Sunday in June, I will en- deavor to attend. This would enable us to meet the invitation of Br. Ragan. But if Br. G.'s meeting is to be on the 27th, I am agreed, and in that case think of meeting Br. R. in Bucyrus circuit the week previous. Will Br. Guest please et us know through the Recorder? If Br. Flood would do a like favor, I should be glad.

A. H. BASSETT.

Xenia, Ohio, May 8, 1841.

The above being on a different page from the balance of the letter was unintentionally over- looked. Br. Ragan insists on Br. Bassett's at- tending his meeting, if possible, on the Sandus- ky circuit.

POETRY.

THE RAINBOW.

BY AMELIA.

I sometimes have thought, in my loneliest hours,
That lie on my heart like the dew on the flowers,
Of a ramble I took one bright afternoon,
When my heart was as light as a blossom in June;
The green earth was moist with the late-fallen showers,
The breeze flutter'd down and blew upon the flow'rs,
While a single white cloud, to its haven of rest,
On the white wing of peace, floated off in the west.

As I threw back my tresses to catch the cool breeze,
That scattered the rain-drops and dimpled the seas,
Far up the blue sky a fair rainbow unroll'd
Its soft-tinted pinions of purple and gold;
'Twas born in a moment, yet quick at its birth
It had stretched to the uttermost ends of the earth,
And, fair as an angel, it floated all free,
With a wing on the earth, and a wing on the sea.

How calm was the ocean! how gentle its swell!
Like a woman's soft bosom it rose and it fell,
While its light sparkling waves, stealing laughingly o'er,
When they saw the fair rainbow knelt down on the shore;
No sweet hymn ascended, no murmer of prayer,
Yet I felt that the spirit of worship was there,
And bent my young head in devotion and love,
'Neath the form of the angel that floated above.

How wide was the sweep of its beautiful wings!
How boundless its circle! how radiant its rings!
If I looked on the sky, 'twas suspended in air,
If I looked on the ocean, the rainbow was there;
Thus forming a girdle as brilliant and whole
As the thoughts of the rainbow that circled my soul,
Like the wing of the Deity, calmly unfurled,
It bent from a cloud and encircled the world.

There are moments, I think, when the spirit receives
Whole volumes of thought on its unwritten leaves,
When the folds of the heart in a moment unclose
Like the innermost leaves from the heart of a rose:
And thus when the rainbow has passed from the sky,
The thoughts it awoke were too deep to pass by;
It left my full soul like the wing of a dove,
All fluttering with pleasure, and fluttering with love.

I know that each moment of rapture or pain,
But shortens the link in life's mystical chain;
I know that my form, like that bow from the wave,
Must pass from the earth and lie cold in the grave;
Yet oh! when death's shadows my bosom encloud,
When I shrink from the thought of the coffin and shroud,
May Hope, like the rainbow, my spiri unfold,
In her beautiful pinions of purple and gold.

NATURAL AND REVEALED RELIGION.

The Christian Revelation ought not to be considered as superseding the Religion of Nature, but as carrying it forward to perfection. It introduces the Deity to us under new relations, corresponding to the degraded state into which we have fallen. It is superadded to our natural relations of God, and takes it for granted, that these natural relations must forever subsist. It is true, indeed, that the essential attributes of God, and the principles of Natural Religion, cannot be fully discovered without the light of Revelation, as appears from the past experience of mankind in every generation; but it is equally true, that, when discovered by the aid of this celestial light, they are of the utmost importance in the Christian system, and are as essentially connected with it, as the foundation of a building is with the superstructure.—Many professed Christians, however, seem to think, and to act, as if the Christian Revelation had annulled the natural relations which subsist between man and the Deity; and hence the zealous outcry against every discussion from the pulpit, that has not a direct relation to what are termed the doctrines of grace. But nothing, surely, can be more absurd than to carry out such a principle to all its legitimate consequences. Can God ever cease to be Omnipotent, or can man ever cease to be dependent for existence on His infinite power? Can the Divine Being ever cease to be Omnipresent and Omniscient, or can man ever cease to be the object of His knowledge and superintendence? Can Infinite Wisdom ever be detached from the Almighty, or can man ever be in a situation where he will not experience the effects of His wise arrangement? Can goodness ever fail of being an attribute of Jehovah, or can any sentient or intelligent beings exist that do not experience the effects of His bounty? In short, can the relation of Creature and of Creator ever cease between the human race, in whatever moral or physical situation they may be placed, and that Almighty Being, "who giveth to all, life and breath, and all things?" If none of these things can possibly happen, then the relations to which we refer must be eternal and unchangeable, and must form the basis of all the other relations in which we can possibly stand to the Divine Being either as apostate or as redeemed creatures; and, therefore, they ought to be exhibited as subjects for our frequent and serious contemplation, as religious and moral agents. But, unless we make such topics a distinct subject of attention, and endeavor to acquire clear and comprehensive conceptions of our natural relation to God, we can never form a clear conception of those new and interesting relations into which we have been brought by meditation of Jesus Christ.

If man had continued in his primitive state of integrity, he would have been forever exercised in tracing the power, the beneficence, and other attributes of Deity in the visible creation alone. Now that his fallen state has rendered additional revelations necessary, in order to secure his happiness—is he completely to throw aside those contemplations and exercises which constituted his chief employment, while he remained a pure moral intelligence? Surely not. One great end of his moral renovation, by means of the gospel must be, to enable him to resume his primitive exercises, and to qualify him for more enlarged views and contemplations of a similar nature, in that future world, where the physical and moral impediments which now obstruct his progress will be completely removed.

It appears highly unreasonable, and indicates a selfish disposition of mind, to magnify one class of the Divine attributes at the expense of another; to extol, for example, the Mercy of God, and neglect to celebrate his Power and Wisdom; those glorious perfections, the display of which, at the formation of our globe, excited the rapture and admiration of angels, and of innocent man. All the attributes of God are equal, because all of them are infinite; and therefore to talk of darling attributes in the Divine Nature, as some have done is inconsistent with reason, unwarranted by Scripture, and tends to exhibit a distorted view of the Divine character. The Divine mercy ought to be celebrated with rapture by every individual of our fallen race; but with no less rapture should we extol the Divine Omnipotence; for the designs of mercy cannot be accomplished without the intervention of Infinite Power. All that we hope for, in consequence of the promises of God, and of the redemption accomplished by Jesus Christ must be founded on the conception we form of the operations of Omnipotence. An example or two may not be unnecessary for illustrating this position.

We are warranted, by the sacred oracles, to entertain the hope, that these mortal bodies of ours, after they have moulddered in the dust, been dissolved into their primary elementary parts, and become the prey of devouring reptiles, during a lapse of generations or of centuries—shall spring forth from the tomb to new life and beauty, and be arrayed in more glorious forms than they now wear; yea, that all the inhabitants of our globe, from Adam to the end of time, though the bodies of thousands of them have been devoured by cannibals, have become the food of fishes and of beasts of prey, and have been burnt to cinders, and their ashes scattered by the winds over the different regions of sea and land—shall be re-animated by the voice of the Son of God, and shall appear, each in his proper person and identical body, before God, the Judge of all. Now, the firmness of our hope of so astonishing an event, which seems to contradict all experience, and appears involved in such a mass of difficulties and apparent contradictions, must be in proportion to the sentiments we entertain of the Divine Intelligence, Wisdom, and Omnipotence. And where are we to find the most striking visible displays of these perfections, except in the actual operations of the Creator, within the range of our view in the material world?

Again, we are informed in the same Divine records, that, at some future period, the earth on which we now dwell shall be wrapt up in devouring flames, and its present form and constitution forever destroyed; that its redeemed inhabitants, after being released from the grave, shall be transported to a more glorious reign; and that "new heavens and a new earth shall appear, wherein dwelleth righteousness." The Divine mercy having given to the faithful the promise of these astonishing revolutions, and most magnificent events, our hopes of their being fully realized, must rest on the Infinite Wisdom and Omnipotence of Jehovah; and consequently, if our views of these perfections be limited and obscure, our hope, in relation to our future destiny, will be proportionably feeble and languid; and will scarcely perform its office "as an anchor to the soul both sure and steadfast." It is not merely by telling a person that God is All-wise and All-power, that a full conviction of the accomplishment of such grand events will be produced. He must be made to see with his own eyes what the Almighty has already done, and what he is now doing in all the regions of universal nature which lie open to our inspection; and this cannot be effected without directing his contemplation to those displays of intelligence and power which are exhibited in the structure, the economy, and the revolutions of the material world.—Dick.

The hundreds of idle young men scattered through the country, and lounging about our towns furnish indisputable evidence that many of the rising generation are forming habits, which in after life, must cause large amount of sorrow and wretchedness. Labor is not respected as it should be, and the consequence is, that idleness takes place of industry, and poverty, ghastly and wretched, that of cheerfulness and content.—Baltimore American.

BROKEN UP.—"Well, mother, the foundations of the great deep have broken up at last."

"What do you mean, Timothy?"

"My trowsers have got a hole in 'em, that's what I mean."

PULPIT ELOQUENCE.

If I were compelled to give a brief definition of the principal characteristics of the truest style of eloquence, we should say it was a "practical reasoning animated by strong emotion," or, if we might be indulged in what is rather a description than a definition of it, we should say that it consisted in reasoning on topics calculated to inspire a common interest, expressed in the language of ordinary life, and in that brief, rapid, familiar style, which natural emotion ever assumes. The former half of this description would condemn no small portion of the compositions called "sermons," and the latter half a still larger portion.

* * * * * *

What can be more hopeless than the attempt to engage the attention, or interest the feelings of a common audience in metaphysical subtilties? And yet abstruse speculations, on the 'origin of evil,' on 'moral necessity,' on 'self-determining power,' on the 'ultimate principles of ethics,' on the 'immortality of the soul,' as proved from its indiscerptibility, and we know not what on the 'eternal fitness of things,' on the 'moral sense,' with other still more recondite speculations on themes which it is almost impious and perfectly useless to touch, were of common concurrence in our older pulpit literature; and they are not unfrequent, though not pursued to the same extent even now. For our own parts, we believe that the discussion of such subjects is is about as profitable in a popular assembly as would be that of the well known questions, as to whether angels can pass from one point of space to another, without passing through the intermediate points, and whether they can visually discern objects in the dark?

We gladly admit that the moral pulpit is fast outgrowing these extravagances; that such discussions are both less frequent, and pursued to a much more limited extent, then they used to be. Yet it is no uncommon thing to find the young preacher, fresh from his metaphysics or his philosophy, touching upon them just to a sufficient extent to exhaust and dissipate the attention of his audience before he comes to more important and more welcome matter; or indulging in allusions, and employing phraseology with reference to them wholly unintelligible to the mass. Others, and they form a much larger class, are fond of subjects only one degree less useful, and which though they ought not to be excluded from the pulpit, need to be very rarely entered upon. We allude is the discussions connected with 'Natural Theology,' and the first 'Principles of Morals.' Such preachers are continually proving that there is a God, to those who readily admit there is a Divine revelation; that the marks of design in the universe prove that there is an intelligent cause, to those who never had a single doubt on the subject; that death is not an eternal sleep, to those who find no difficulty in admitting that there is a heaven and a hell; that a man is a moral agent, to those who cannot conceive that he be otherwise; and those first principles of ethics are certainly true, which even savages themselves would be ashamed to disavow. We say not that such topics should be excluded from the pulpit, but only that they should form a very inferior element in its ordinary prelections. * * *

Even where the topics are not such as are not fairly open to censure, a large class of preachers, especially amongst the young, grievously err by investigating them with the technicalities of science and philosophy;—either because they foolishly suppose they thereby give their compositions a more philosophical air, or because they disdain the homely and the vulgar. We remember hearing of a worthy man of this class, who having occasion to tell his audience the simple truth, that there was not one Gospel for the rich and another for the poor, informed them, that "if they would not be saved on 'general principles,' they could not be saved at all!" With such men it is not sufficient to say, that such and a thing must be but there is always a 'moral or physical necessity' for it. The will is too old-fashioned a thing to be mentioned, and everything is done by violation; duty is expanded into moral obligation; men not only ought to do this, that, or the other, it is always by 'some principle of their moral nature:' but they are 'impelled by some natural propensity;' men not only think and do, but they are never represented as thinking and doing without some parade of their 'intellectual processes and active powers.' Such discourses are full of 'moral beauty,' and 'necessary relations,' and philosophical 'demonstrations,' and 'laws of nature,' and 'a priori and a posteriori arguments.' If some simple fact of physical science is referred to in the way of argument or illustration, it can not be presented in common language, but must be exhibited in the pomp of the most approved scientific technicalities. If there be a common and scientfic name for the same object, ten to one that the latter is adopted. Heat straightway becomes 'caloric,' lightning, the 'electric fluid;' instead of plants and animals, we are surrounded by 'organized substances;' life is nothing half so good as the 'vital principle;' phenomena of all kinds are very plentiful; these phenomena are 'developed,' and 'combined,' and 'analyzed,' and, in short, done every thing with, except being made intelligible. Not only is such language as this obscurely understood, or if understood at all, but even if perfectly understood, must necessarily be far less effective than those simple terms of common life, which for the most part may be substituted for them.

Equally at variance with common sense are the topics which some few preachers, much addicted to Biblical criticism, but strangely ignorant of its practical uses, and the limits within which alone it can be properly applied, sometimes think proper to introduce into sermons. Their talk is much of 'collations of manuscripts,' of 'various readings,' of the 'Vulgate,' of 'Coptic and Syriac versions,' of 'interpolations,' of the 'original languages,' of 'Hebrew points,' &c. &c. &c. They totally forget, if they ever knew, that all these things are the mere instruments with which they work; and that the results, expressed in simple langugae, and without any ostentatious technicalities, are all with which the people have to do. If such a man were building a house, he would doubtless suffer the scaffolding to stand about it as a notable embellishment; or if he were employed to lay down a carpet, he would leave the hammer and nails upon the floor as memorials of his labor and ingenuity.

Well would it be if in this respect, as well as in others, the preacher would make the Bible the object of his sedulous imitation. It is every where a practical book; it contains no over-curious speculations, no superfluous subtilties. On the contrary, it has often been remarked that there is a singular silence maintained in that volume on all that tends merely to gratify our curiosity. The very mysteries it discloses, it discloses only so far as is necessary for some practical purpose; whilst it every where views man just as in common life man views himself and his fellows—recognizing at once, without discussion, all those facts connected with our intellectual and moral constitution, the true theory of which has occasioned such endless differences and inquiries in the schools.

THE MARINER'S COMPASS.—Who invented the Mariner's Compass? This is a question not often put, but less frequently answered.

A shepherd of Italy by the name of Magnes, was the first to discover the properties of the loadstone—a mineral which gives polarity to iron, from the circumstance of his walking over a quarry, and small particles of this stone adhering to the iron nails in his sandals.

In the year 1322, John de Gioja, a handicraftsman of Naples, first discovered that a piece of iron rubbed with the loadstone, and suspended on its centre of gravity, had the property of pointing to the north star, and he was the first to apply needles on centres for the purpose of navigation. John tried his needles at different places in Italy, and moored a vessel in the Mediterranean, to ascertain whether this magnetic power was the same on water as on land. The name of magnet was given to the loadstone and to the needle. The division of the shipman's card was first made into four quarters, then into 16 and 32 points, and ultimately into 360.—This gradation was progressive, and marked out upon a movable disk. It was not until the middle of the last century that the needle and card were combined and hung on a common centre.

In the time of Columbus, nearly 200 years after the discovery of the magnetic needle by John de Gioja, the card was placed under the needle. It is worthy of remark, that this highly useful instrument, discovered, not invented through any scientific or theoretical deductions, should continue to puzzle and baffle the philosopher, in his attempts to discover the cause of its variation in the different parts of the earth. To the Italians we are indebted for the compass and early enterprise in navigation, and to a Philadelphian for the discovery of the quadrant by Godfrey.—U. S. Gaz.

ORIGIN OF YANKEE DOODLE.—This tune has so long been considered as national property, that most persons have supposed it purely American in its origin. Yet so far as we can learn, this is not the fact. It appears that previous to the time of Charles I. an air somewhat similar to the one in question, was common among the peasantry in England.

The air during the time of Cromwell was set to various ditties in ridicule of the Protector. One of these began with words, "The Roundheads and the Cavaliers." Another set of words was called "Nankee Doodle," and has throughout a striking resemblance to some of the popular stanzas, which were common in the American Colonies from the time of their origin to the Revolution, and in some sections of the country, even to the present day. The song, "Lydia Locket," or "Lucy Locket," has been sung to the same tune from time immemorial. This air seems to have been the foundation of Yankee Doodle.

During the French war of 1755, the provincial army, sent against Niagara and Frontenac, was commanded by Gov. Shirley, of Massachusetts, and Gen. Johnston, of New York. Through the early part of the season the army lay encamped on the Hudson a little below Albany. While the troops were in this position they were continually receiving recruits from the New England states in the form of drafts and volunteers. They came in, company after company, just as they had issued from their farms and firesides, and their appearance is said to have equalled any specimen of the ludicrous ever exhibited, save and except the famous company of Sir John Falstaff. Some of them had long hair, some short, and some wore enormous wigs. Some had black suits, some had blue, and some had grey. Some had long coats, some had short ones and some no coats at all. Their accoutrements were equally varied, and all together furnished the most grotesque and amusing spectacle, that can well be imagined, and abundance of sport for the British Regulars.

The music played by the volunteers was such as had been out of date in the British army for centuries, and assisted finely to add point to the amusement afforded by the whole scene. In the British army at that time, was one Dr. Shackburg a surgeon, who was a skilful musician and a great wag. The Dr. immediately turned his attention to the Yankee volunteers and determined to pass off a joke by composing a tune for their particular use. He accordingly remodeled the old air of "Nankee Doodle," and called it "Yankee Doodle," and with all the gravity imaginable recommended it to the new comers as one of the most celebrated airs, that his country had ever produced.

The volunteers admired the tune; and notwithstanding the hearty laugh and noisy ridicule of the Regulars, it soon became a general favorite through the whole American camp.

Thus originated an air in pure levity and ridicule, which many a British soldier in a few years had cause to consider the knell of all his glory. The same soul-stirring strains were heard at a subsequent period on Bunker's hill; the same on the plains of Yorktown; and the same strains will continue to warm the American heart so long as music hath charms to inspire the breast and rouse the soul to action.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

NO. III.

NATURE, AND ACQUISITION, AND BOUNDS OF KNOWLEDGE; AND THE COMPETENCY OF KNOWLEDGE IN HUMAN BEINGS.

Knowledge is a conscious perception, acquired in an intelligent being, of any positive or relative existence, either in himself or in the person of any other being. Human knowledge is not perfect in its nature, neither is it immediate in its modes of acquirement. The human mind is only able to take cognizance of the properties of things, from whence it infers the fact of their existence; and we are obliged to acquire that knowledge, by means which are extraneous to the objects of our knowledge, or which have but a relative existence in the objects of our perception. The knowledge which the human mind acquires of both material and immaterial existence, is obtained by acquaintance with their respective properties, and it is by that means alone, we are enabled to acquire a knowledge of the fact of their existence. Since, therefore, all human knowledge is only indirect in its notices, and mediate in its acquirements, and is limited in its observation of facts and properties, the hypostasis of things, is at present an impenetrable mystery to the human mind, and will remain such, in all probability, world without end. On the contrary, all knowledge in the Deity, is direct in its nature, and immediate in its mode of acquirement. The physical hypostasis of all things, is under His immediate cognizance, and therefore, the knowledge of Deity can not be limited by the properties of the facts of things, but must extend to every thing that is knowable, both in actual existence and in abstract possibility. But although all knowledge in the Deity be direct in its nature, and immediate in its mode of acquirement, yet the knowledge in God must be a personal acquisition; because it is demonstratively clear, that nothing but the Deity himself can be unoriginated; and because it is equally clear that although an infinite intellect is God himself, yet as a part of the garniture of that intellect, can be forcibly eternal. And as to the limits of knowledge in the Deity, it has no bounds to the power of its comprehension, nor any limits in the means of its acquirement except those of an abstract and infinite possibility.

There is another point of dissimilarity between the acquisition of knowledge in the Deity, and the acquirement of knowledge by human beings; which is, that all knowledge in the Deity is necessarily, and is not voluntarily acquired; whereas knowledge in human beings, is for the most part not only voluntary in its acquirement, but is obtained by very much labor. I say for the most part, because I am inclined to believe that some of that knowledge is passively, on our part, communicated to us by that Infinite Spirit, who is the author of our being, and the giver of all good.—And I do think that if the distinction of innate and acquired ideas, where but exchanged for that of ideas voluntarily acquired and ideas passively communicated to the human mind, it might contribute something towards settling that very interesting and important question. But even human knowledge, although it is neither direct in its nature nor immediate in the mode of its acquirement, and although it is confined in the range of its observation to the properties and the facts of things, yet all its legitimate notices must of necessity be correct, and its decision must uniformly possess the authority and stamp of truth. For if we are not to believe the information of our senses, and the rational conclusions of our understanding, we can have no conceivable standard of either physical or moral truth, and our senses and intellect must have been bestowed upon us in vain. Revelation could never have been given to supersede the use of our senses or the employment of our understanding, but must have been intended to assist and direct them in the discovery of truth; and revelation itself must of necessity owe all its authority to the convictions which it is adopted to produce on the human mind: and therefore, it is because that no man can resist the evidence of revelation, but by the moral obliquity of his heart, that unbelief becomes a deadly and damnable sin.

Every hypothesis which would deny the competency of the human understanding, to judge of truth and error, when presented to the senses, and brought fairly before the mind, must involve in its consequences, all the horrors of a universal scepticism, or subject the human understanding to all the vassalage of an implicit credulity: we must in such a case, either give credit to everything, or else we must not believe any thing at all. If a man will not permit me to give credit to my senses, or allow me to rely on my own convictions, and if he be as intolerant to himself as he is towards me, how is he to convince me of error, and how will he prove himself to be in the right. Assertions and denials on such an hypothesis, must be all of equal value; nor would there be any possibility of identifying truth or of detecting falsehood. I am not contending for the infallibility of the human understanding. I do not see how any created being, however elevated, can be absolutely infallible, unless it be by a uniform and plenary superintendence of the Holy Ghost; and whether that infallible superintendence will be one of the privileges of our glorified state, and whether it may possibly constitute the eternal security of the saints in heaven, is perhaps, one of those things which do not yet appear.—But I must maintain the competency of the human mind, in every case, where it actually comprehends the meaning of any proposition, to decide and determine whether such a proposition is true or false.

Speculative error, when the intellect of man is in a sane condition, usually arises, either from his not fully comprehending the proposition which is to be the datum of his reasoning, or from his want of mental or moral integrity in deducing his consequences. The competency of the human understanding in relation to truth and falsehood, and especially in relation to right and wrong, is the only solid foundation upon which the doctrine of human responsibility can be made to rest. Divine revelation confirms the truth of this argument: a revelation was given to us because we were competent to judge of its truth; and it unites an investigation of its inspired contents, and builds its authority on the rational convictions which it is adopted to produce in the human mind. Even the faculties of brutes, and much more the intellect of man, must always be adequate to answer the purpose for which they were originally bestowed; and within the limits prescribed to them by the great Author of all created existence, both the suggestions of absolute instinct, and the dictates of human reason, must be always of paramount authority. The instinct of an oyster, and the intellect of a cherub, must be equally perfect in their kind, and equally adequate to the purposes for which they were given; and within the sphere of their respective operations, the notices of one must be a complete a standard of truth, as the conviction of the other. In the exercise of faith there is no exclusion of reason; no man believes every report, no man receives every testimony; and every man feels that he has a right to receive some and to reject others. And even in the momentous subjects of personal religion, and eternal salvation, we are not called upon to receive any proposition for truth, which may be in direct hostility to the same conviction of the human understanding.

Unbelief does not consist in using our reason for the examination of what is proposed to our faith, nor in refusing to receive any proposition for truth, in spite of our own convictions; but in refusing to be convinced by a legitimate and adequate evidence, or in striving against the convictions of truth in our own minds. Neither does christian faith imply any renunciation of our reason; but it implies a rigorous and decisive exercise of our mental and moral faculties, in the investigation and reception of truth: it implies the conviction of the intellect and the conscience, illuminated by the light of revelation, and strengthened and confirmed by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. We may, indeed, be called upon to receive many propositions, the fact of which we should not have otherwise discovered, and should never have know without a revelation from heaven, and we may be required to receive practically, many other propositions, the truth of which had been previously apparent, but which we should not have had resolution to carry into our practice, without the Divine authority of a miraculous confirmation; but we can never be obliged to receive any proposition for truth, except on the ground of a rational conviction. And although the contents of the Bible, and the verities of practical Godliness, may not be accompanied by that kind and degree of evidence which the impiety of wicked men may profanely and ignorantly demand, yet they must be always accredited by an evidence, which in both nature and quantity, would be abundantly sufficient for conviction and salvation, if the moral feelings of the inquirer were but in a state of honesty and rectitude in the sight of God. And hence it is, that in the holy scriptures, the sin of unbelief is never represented as being the effect of a mental imbecility, but as being solely the consequence of a moral obliquity: and hence it is that unbelievers are charged, not with the imaginary fault of refusing to prostrate their mental faculties under the authority of the scriptures, but they are charged with the real crime of setting their wills and their passions in a state of direct hostility, as much against their own convictions, both mental and moral, as against the authority of the living and true God. Christian faith is not an invidious and implicit evidence, but it is a rational and honest conviction; and although it should demand the exercise of an unlimited reliance on the veracity, and the mercy, and the agency of God, yet that veracity, and that mercy, and that agency, are accredited to us, by an evidence the most irrefragable and infallible: and therefore, christian faith can never require an implicit and obsequious credulity, or a renunciation of our own reason; and it must be as utterly incompatable with what some theologians have been pleased to denominate an implicit faith, as it is with the dogmas of popery, or the dreams of Mahomedan delusions.

It must be obvious to every one, on a moment's reflection, that the perfection of all knowledge, whether human or divine, must consist in an exact correspondence between the notice of the mind and the nature and properties of those things which are the objects of its perception; and to attribute to knowledge the predication of any properties that do not actually exist in the objects of its cognization, would be only to impute to knowledge the real properties of ignorance; and to suppose that the Divine knowledge might recognize properties in any object, or predicate any thing of an object, which does not in reality and in truth belong to that object in re, would be to confound knowledge with ignorance, and would involve a libel on the Divine character, and would be as gross an absurdity as ever was palmed on the intellect of man. Any proposition is certain in re, may be certain in evidence, and conviction to every mind that has either immediate or mediate access to the native evidence of its being; and the knowledge of a contingency, in like manner, as far as a contingency may be an object of knowledge, may predicate of a contingency, all such properties as belong in reality to the contingency itself. But to suppose, that the limits of evidence, even to the perceptions of an infinite mind, may exceed the bounds of actual existence, would be to contradict the plainest and strongest dictates of the human understanding, and to confound all right and wrong, and truth and falsehood. Every discrepency between the predications of a pretended knowledge, and the real nature and properties of the objects of its predications must fully demonstrate their incompetency or falsity; for if the knowledge should predicate any property, which is not to be found in the object itself, I have all the certainty which the human intellect can admit, that the predications of such a pretended knowledge are absolutely false.

If all knowledge, whether human or Divine, may not be brought to the foregoing test, we have no means of distinguishing between knowledge and ignorance, or between the dictates of truth and the dictates of error. It is, I presume, agreed on by all parties, that in the order of nature, the knowledge of any fact or event, must always be subsequent to its occurrence; because, the fact on the event itself, must support the knowledge of its existence. It is true, indeed, that knowledge must always imply the actual existence of an intelligent being, who is the possessor of that knowledge, and it is equally true that the existence of knowledge must always determine the actual existence of the object of that knowledge. But we read of foreknowledge, and we believe in the existence of foreknowledge; and especially we believe that the Deity has a prescience of future events. How then is the subject of foreknowledge to be understood, so as to be in unison with the sentiment at the beginning of this paragraph? The purpose of bringing about a future event, and the causation that is to secure the issue, are now in actual existence, and are the real objects of the Divine cognizance; but the future event, which is in reality the object of His purpose, and therefore the object of His anticipation, is expressed as though it were purely an object of perception. And for this reason, altho' foreknowledge, in strict philosophical propriety, would be absolutely inadmissable, yet its application to an anticipated issue, is perfectly admissible, and quite intelligible. Causation implies issue; and therefore the knowledge of a cause, implies the anticipation of its effects. For the will and the purpose of the Deity must imply an anticipation of the consequent issue, and are a sufficient security for its future transpiration; and even if the knowledge of a principle or habit in any being, must imply an anticipation of a consequent issue, and if such a knowledge be a sufficient warrant to expect that the issue will afterwards actually transpire, then there can be no impropriety in designating such anticipations by the name of foreknowledged. And this I conceive to be the legitimate and the only sense in which the term prescience can be applicable to any actual knowledge, whether it be human or Divine. It is also agreed, that the knowledge of an event, cannot possibly possess any influence whatever, in giving either existence or character to the event which it perceives; and that the existence of the knowledge must always demonstrate the existence of the event which is the object of the knowledge, predication of the knowledge, if competent and true, must demonstrate the properties of the event which is thereby presumed to be known. That which such a knowledge does formally predicate of the event, must actually belong to the event itself; otherwise the knowledge must be incompetent and false. And therefore if the knowledge predicate necessity, the event must be necessary; if it predicate certainty, the event must be certain; if it predicate possibility, the event must be possible; and if it predicate contingency, the event must be contingent.

Now, if the foregoing chain of reasoning be not legitimate, let the objector have the goodness to detect its fallacy. Lest my reader should misapprehend what I have said above on the difference between the competency and the infallibility of human knowledge, it may be well to add a few remarks, which may render my meaning a little more intelligible. I mean by competency, something that may possibly be adequate and successful, but at the same time, may possibly fail. I mean by infallibility, that which must of necessity be successful, and cannot fail.—The competency of human knowledge stands on precisely the same ground, as does the competency of human integrity; and they are both of them so indispensible to the righteous probation of human beings that without them there can be no moral agency in man, nor any rational or adequate testation of the human character.

It may not be improper to notice, in this place, the equivocal use which is sometimes made of that apostolical phrase, I speak after the manner of men. Rom. vi. 19. Dr. Macknight says, He means that his reasoning was taken from the customs of men, and was accommodated to their apprehension; and that he used metaphors and allegories which were well known. It may signify. I speak of a thing well understood. And in 1 Cor. xv. 32, he shews that eikata anqrwtor means the barbarous customs of the men of that age. But in the popular use of this phrase, it is commonly employed quite invidiously, and without any definite or conceivable meaning; and is used either for the purpose of raising a theological mist, and escaping in the cloud, or for the implicit inculcation of any thing which can neither be explained or understood. If any thing be advanced which is opposed to the popular and vulgar notion of the subject, it must be immediately rejected, because it is only spoken, we are told, after the manner of men; but if any thing, on the contrary, be inculcated, which would imply an obvious contradiction to the sober dictates of the human mind, then we are immediately and confidently informed, that the thing must be implicitly believed, because it is spoken only after the manner of men. But why one thing must be believed, because it is only spoken after the manner of men, and another thing must not be believed, for the very same reason, is what I never had the discernment fully to comprehend. It must be evident to every person on a faithful examination of Rom. vi. 19, 1 Cor. xv. 32, and Gal. iii. 15, which are the only places where the phrase alluded to is used in the Sacred writings, at all events, where it is so translated, that the Apostle actually employed the phrase, not because the subjects on which he was speaking were confessedly mysterious, but, on the contrary, because they were notorious, and well understood.

Necessity and certainty, will be examined next.

JOHN.

For the Western Recorder.

"EXEMPLARY, (i. e.) in such a manner as deserves imitation: in such a manner as may warn others."

The third epistle of John furnishes a striking illustration of this definition, and is full of instruction. 1st. The inscription is plain and simple—"the elder"—no high sounding titles, showing the spirit of true charity, which vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up. 2d. The commendation of Gaius is artless and frank, illustrative of that saying "we use great plainness of speech"—"thou walkest in the truth"—"thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest to the brethren, and to strangers." Walking in the truth and being faithful was a commendation, infinitely more valuable than all the modern puffs of "fine talents"—"splendid talents"—"talented minister," &c., &c. These examples, so worthy of imitation, have had their weight with great and good men. Wesley was "opposed to all display," and being a "man of one book," preferred being called by hard names to having the dignified title of Bishop applied to him. Walking in the truth and being faithful were with him, as with St. John, of more value than all the tinsel, titles and eulogies which flatter men's vanity, and "swell a haughty worm."

3d. The caution against, and reprehension of Diotrephes, as a warning to others, is fraught with importance. "I wrote to the church (said St. John,) but Diotrephes ("perhaps the pastor of it," says Wesley,) loveth the pre-eminence,"—"casteth them out of the church"—"prating malicious words," or uttering "false speeches (or slander) to excuse his conduct," or to justify his assumptions of power, and his arbitrary measures. This constituted, in the estimation of the Apostle, "the wicked deeds which he doeth," and in the estimation of Wesley, "the mystery of iniquity," as he observes in his notes, "so did the mystery of iniquity already work." And so has the mystery of iniquity worked ever since, when the clergy were invested with, or could assume power. "Already," before the beloved John had finished his course, the mystery of iniquity, wicked deeds, love of pre-eminence, "to govern according to their own will," casting out of the church, reckless of justice, mercy or truth, and pursuing the objects of their jealousy, envy or ambition, by 'malicious words,' began to work under a priestly garb! A solemn warning to others to beware how they entrust or countenance power in the hands of any class of men, whatever their claims or pretentions to sanctity may be. But how often has such warning failed to place men upon their guard against the insidious encroachments of destructive power? What scenes of horror, what acts of cruel butchery have been produced by the love of pre-eminence and rule. A shrewd observer of the nineteenth century said of a church where priests of a particular class bear rule, that it had been the slaughter pen for some of the best of men. And it is not wonderful that such men as Diotrephes, after slaughtering their doomed victims, should become fastidious, and affect to be horror stricken at personalities, harsh epithets, and the exposure of their acts of cruel despotism. It is rather a wonder they do not arraign the old Apostle for the severe exposure of Diotrephes' personal "deeds of wickedness." They would fain make "the church," office in the church, dignified titles, and the memory of the deceased, a sanctuary, to shield from exposure their unhallowed tyranny, not to say their "wicked deeds," or their "mystery of inquity." Being expelled from the church, such men imagine, is sufficient to discredit their victim, whether for a worthy or unworthy, just or unjust cause, and can sneer with self-complacency at a branch of the church, composed, in part, of such martyred victims. So probably did the Jewish hierarchy when they cast out of the synagogue, for confessing that Jesus was the Christ, and so Diotrephes when he cast out of the church, those whom St. John recommended! So thought the Pope and his clergy, inflated with a conceit of their sanctity and importance, when they hurled their anathemas at Luther and his compatriots. So thought and acted the Synod of Dort, when they expelled the thirteen remonstrants for an honest difference of opinion, driving them into prison and exile, and so, no doubt, thought the lordly aristocracy of the court of Star-Chamber when they condemned worthy men for pleading for reform—and last, but not least, so, perhaps, thought a privileged hierarchy when then they expelled worthy men for an honest difference of opinion on the mere form of church government. And although personal matters are not interesting to general readers only so far as they go to illustrate general principles, the nature and tendency of governments, and may serve as a warning to others, I will add, that so doubtless thought a modern Diotrephes, who pronounced, "on his own responsibility," the expulsion of an old minister who had labored to clear the fields which he now occupies, before he was born, and whom he subsequently acknowledged over his own signature, had been actuated by "purity of intention!"—And so perhaps thought the Bishop and conference who sanctioned this "mystery of iniquity," by adopting, recording and publishing a resolution false in fact, lawless in itself, and slanderous in its character! If such is the genius of the government, and such the irresponsible exercise of arbitrary power, the "wicked deeds" of Diotrephes, and "the mystery of iniquity," which began to work in the first century, was not more a warning to others, or more fearful in results than the lordly and domineering tyranny in the nineteenth century, and in a boasted land of liberty. This may be the genius of government of men, and not of fixed laws, based on elementary principles framed by the sovereign people—but it is as diverse from the genius of christianity, as is Popery from the mild and lenient doctrines of the New Testament.

FRIENDSHIP.

Friendship is a theme, upon which every intelligent, rational mind should meditate. "'Tis that which sweetens all the cares and sorrows of life: and tis a shield in the hour of Adversity.—When our hearts are overwhelmed with grief, and sorrow, how then do we need a friend. I think there is no person living, who would wish all the affluence this world can bestow unless he could enjoy it with his real friends. If a person find a true friend, one whom they can rely, in whom they can place implicit confidence; that person (so favoured) hath found a treasure surpassing that or gold, or silver. Friendship is generally formed in youth, and often in childhood. Seeing then that caution is the parent of safety, and first impressions often lasting, all should be cautious with whom they form their friendship. Never rely on outward appearances. All is no gold that glitters." A faint idea of a person's character may be had upon the first introduction. But we are not to make up our minds, entirely in relation to a person's character, until intimately acquainted with the person with whom we form our acquaintance. If any are disposed to flatter, be reserved towards such. And if you reply at all to their pretensions of sincerity, repay them with compliments but not with confidence. "Ye may know them by their fruits." Some may say there are no real, substantial friends. That though they may smile on you while in prosperity, yet when adverse fate appears, they will frown scornfully upon you. Believe it not. True, there may be some who will only smile when hope is high. Yet there are true hearts, that closer twine in grief and wo. Yes, though the number be small, there are some who will stand the test of dark Adversity.

AMICUS.

Springfield tp., Musk., O., May, 1841.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: Until since the impertinence of the "official organ" rendered it necessary for you to rebuke it, I was ignorant of the cause why Br. Stockton did not edit the Methodist Protestant and Family Visitor, as I had learned he was elected by the General Conference to that office. But now think, I understand it pretty well, and highly approve his resigning the editorial chair.

At the time of our late General Conference I was an advance paying subscriber to the Protestant, and diligent agent in procuring subscribers and forwarding the cash at my own expense, with the design of continuing so to do. But on the reception of the committee's resolution of instruction to correspondents, which, to my apprehension, virtually said to me, to all that communicated for the columns of the Visitor, be careful never to quote such passages of holy writ as "therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," &c.—"Break every yoke, let the oppressed go free." For such strike at the root of both the principle and practice of slavery in Church or State, and nothing on the subject of slavery can be admitted into the columns of the "official" and "general organ of the church." I carefully envoloped the paper containing their dictatorial resolution, with instructions to "discontinue," determined never to pay subscription, again, or postage for a paper issued from a muzzled press, sailing under the flag of "mutual rights."

If, sir, the ministry and membership of the M. P. Church were in sentiment and feeling with myself, the church would not be under the necessity of carrying into effect a suggestion made by yourself, of "knocking the thing on the brain," for it would die off for want of sustenance before the setting of the next General Conference.

I once heard an aged and respectable minister, then of the M. E. Church, give a description of the origin and tendency of episcopacy in the following words;—"Episcopacy is the daughter of pride; the mother of Popery; the curse of church and the dread of nations." For one I am exceedingly fearful of such a thing as "pride" being covered up under the robe of "official organ," "general church paper," &c. And it strikes me that there has been a considerable development of "episcopacy" in the management of the aforesaid "official organ;" for, if I mistake not, the doings of some of our Annual Conferences, as ordered for publication, have been mutilated, especially that part which went to say "slavery is inconsistent with the morality of the holy scriptures." While on the other hand, all and singular the doings of an Annual Conference resolving that colored persons could have no place within the pale of the Methodist P. Church without the consent of their "official organ," that is, their master or overseer, could find a place in the columns of the "general church paper." Again, it has shown itself in withholding the right of a member and minister of the church, to defend himself, after having assailed him in its columns. Can such be "mutual rights?" If so, what have we "Radicals" gained over what we enjoyed under the reign of professed episcopacy, when we were hewers of wood and drawers of water? Is it not high time to wake up to the doing of our work over and better, that we may have mutual rights or well defined liberty?

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Br. Springer: After a silence of three or 4 months, we feel constrained by a sense of duty and the good of our Zion, to say that the Lord has not forgotten to be gracious to Deersville circuit. Our former letter closed with an account of the Westchester quarterly and protracted meeting; that glorious meeting was followed by one near the village of Magnolia; 20 were converted and 24 joined the church; another at Moorefield, another at Freeport, which resulted in the organization of a M. P. society in each of the last two places.—The following week, one at Deersville; 14 joined the church and a number were converted to God; one near Carrollton which was truly a memorable meeting. Then came on our quarterly meeting, with Brs. Ross and Baldwin to our assistance. Here again we had reason to rejoice in the earthly courts of our Heavenly Father. The society was much revived, though before at ease in Zion,—six joined.

Now we are in the midst of another protracted meeting and a revival too; (at Liberty meeting house;) it came on while many of the church was most earnestly engaged. Some prayed day and night for God to begin a revival among an interesting class of youth, some 30 or more in number. Monday the work began at the sacrament. The first intimation of Divine favor were made at 5 o'clock P. M. After preaching 7 young persons came forward to the anxious-seat with the most pungent conviction. Since that time, to the present, more or less have came forward every night. The work is deepening and widening; convictions are more general; 12 have joined, and we are praying for greater displays of Divine power.

Br. Richardson preached with zeal and acceptance. Near 100 have been added to the church since I last wrote you. We are at peace among ourselves and have reason to expect that the work will go on. To God be all the praise.

Yours, in the kingdom of Christ,

MORE ELLSLER NONSENSE.—The divine Fanny has gone over the lake. On her passage down the Ponchartrian Railroad she had two cushions under her made of elder down—though one stuffed with the heads of her parasites would have been softer—and two beds on board the steamboat. She has been to Carrollton several times lately, on which occasions she was lifted in and out of the cars in a chair, like a tub of soap. Language does not furnish us with terms sufficient to express our disgust at this horrid and beastly worship. Virtue seems no longer of any earthly account.—N. O. Crescent City.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

THE LITTLE BOY THAT LOVED THE SABBATH.

OR, THE SABBATH-BREAKER REPROVED.

"I live," said a tract visitor, "in a house near one occupied by a sailor and his family, the yard being common to both dwellings. On a certain Sabbath, last month, my little son, a lad about nine years of age, was left at home in charge of the house, while the rest of the family went to church. During their absence the sailor came into the yard, and began to split his wood. The little boy felt it was wrong, and began to think of some plan to induce him to desist without exciting his anger. He thought of his father's bundle of tracts, which lay in sight. He took out one entitled, "Don't break the Sabbath;" and darting down the steps leading into the yard where the sailor was at work, handed him the tract, saying, "Oh, Mr. L———, you are working on the Sabbath! The Bible says it is very wicked to work on the Sabbath! Here is a tract that will tell you more about it than I can; won't you please to read it sir?"

The sailor dropped his axe, took the tract, saying, "Why, John, I can't find time to split my wood except on Sundays."

"My father says," said the lad, "that we ought to take time to do all our work during the week, and not do any work on the Lord's day."

The sailor took the tract, went into the house, and read it through, but split no more wood that Sabbath, nor the Sabbath following. In the mean time the sailor was seen to attend church in the evening then he was seen in tears among those who professed a concern for the salvation of their souls!—very soon he was accompanied by his wife, who had been a very thoughtless and wicked woman; then by his wife's sister; now they might all three be seen at the close of the meeting bowing down together, around the altar of God, seeking the forgiveness of their sins, through the atoning blood of Christ.

The sailor is now constant in his attendance upon Church,—has erected the family altar, and there appears at present quite a reformation in the habits of the family.

"But this is not all," said the visiter,—"my little boy, who, at this time, gave no external evidence of unusual seriousness, now expresses some hope that he loves that God, whose law he was endeavoring to commend to the Sabbath breaker who was trampling upon his authority." What direct agency the reproof thus given may have had, either in the conviction or conversion of any of these persons, it may be difficult for us to say, in this world; but may we not hope that in "the world to come," it will in truth be said, "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength, O Lord because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and avenger." Ps. 8: 2.

FATHER MATTHEW'S PUBLIC ROOM.—We may perhaps, interest our readers by giving them some details of our visit to Mr. Matthew. The room in which members are received is large, and furnished with a desk and wooden benches. When we entered it, "the President" was not there; but there were men and women of all ages, waiting to take the pledge. Among them was a sturdy mountaineer from Kerry, a fine athletic fellow, who had led his "faction" for a quarter of a century, whose head was scared, at least, in a dozen places, and who had been renowned throughout the country for his prowess at every fair within twenty miles of his home. He had long been a member of the society, and had brought a few of his "friends" to follow his example. He described to us with natural and forcible eloquence, the effect of temperance in producing peace between man and man, in his own immediate neighborhood; in terminating the brutal fights between two notorious factions, the Cooleens and Dawlors, whose names had figured in every criminal calendar for a century back.—"No matter what was doing, it was left undone," he said, "if any one of either party chose to call up the rest. They'd leave the hay half cut, or the oats to be shelled by the four winds of heaven, and taking the hay fork, the reaping-hook, and the scythe in their hand, they'd rush out to massacre each other. Tubs of potheen would be drunk hot from the mountains sills; and then, whooping and hollooing like wild Indians, they'd mingle in the unnatural war of Irishman against Irishman. I've known them to fight so on the sea shore that the sea has come in and drowned those that had fallen drunk in the fray. How is it now? At the last fair at Tralee, there wasn't a stick lifted. There was peace between the factions; and the Cooleens and the Dawlors met, for the first time in the memory of man, without leaving a dead boy to be carried home to a widow's cabin."—Mr. and Mrs. Hall's Ireland.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... JUNE 16, 1841.

SECRETARY WEBSTER AND MINISTER FOX—THE M'LEOD CASE—CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Fox, the British Minister, has written a letter to Mr. Webster, our Secretary of State, and the latter has replied to it, and enclosed a copy of his instructions to the Attorney General of the United States.

We were about entering on the work of condensing, when we happened with the N. Y. Herald, where the letters are judiciously adverted to.

The strong points of the two letters may be briefly told. Mr. Fox's letter comprises but two points. He says that the British have fully approved of the burning of the Caroline, and justified all the acts of their minister here consequent thereon; and have, secondly, instructed him to demand the immediate and unconditional release of McLeod. Mr. Fox's letter also contains some remarks relative to the internal relations between the State and the Federal Governments, which Mr. Webster evidently considered beneath his notice.

Mr. Webster's letters are, in every respect, able and eloquent productions. He says, and says justly, that the peculiar nature of the assertions of justification, by the British Government, is not understood either by the President or himself, and we may add that we do not believe Mr. Fox himself understands upon what grounds the British Government intends to justify the attack upon the Caroline.

And here, Mr. Webster, in the most manly manner, states what are the real feelings of the General Government on this point. He says:

"The undersigned has now to signify to Mr. Fox that the Government of the United States has not changed the opinion which it has heretofore expressed to Her Majesty's Government, of the character of the act of destroying the 'Caroline.' "

This is by no means abandoning any honorable point that the Government of this country ought to contend for. He also adds that the General Government still thinks that there is no provisions extant in the law of nations, connected with the the right defensive by which the attack on the Caroline, taken in the details, could possibly be justified; and that is the position which has been uniformly maintained.

Mr. Webster nobly vindicates the neutral position of this country since the Revolution, and fearlessly appeals to her past and spotless history for justification in that particular. At the same time, gives Mr. Fox to understand, that Great Britain is not quite so free from reproach on that point as she would have it appear to the world. The errors and temptations came from British subjects, and were palsied as soon as possible by the General Government.

We come now to the whole pith of Mr. Webster's letter, which is contained in the concluding paragraphs; and as they contain so much force, and eloquence, place an almost new feature upon this affair of the Caroline, and are so remarkably well put, we give them in his own words, without farther comments. Mr. Webster thus concludes his admirable document:

"The undersigned trusts that when Her Britannic Majesty's government shall present the grounds, at length, on which they justify the local authorities of Canada in attacking and destroying the "Caroline," they will consider that the laws of the United States are such as the undersigned has now represented them, and that the government of the United States has always manifested a sincere disposition to see these laws effctually and impartially administered. If there have been cases in which individuals, justly obnoxious to punishment, have escaped, this is no more than happens in regard to other laws.

"Under these circumstances, and under those immediately connected with the transaction itself, it will be for Her Majesty's government to show upon what state of facts and what rules of national law the destruction of the "Caroline" is to be defended. It will be for that government to show a necessity of self-defence, instant, overwhelming, leaving no choice of means and no moment for deliberation. It will be for it to show, also, that the local authorities of Canada, even supposing the necessity of the moment authorized them to enter the territories of the United States at all, did nothing unreasonable or excessive; since the act justified by the necessity of self-defence, must be limited by that necessity, and kept clearly within it. It must be shown that admonition or remonstrance to the persons on board the 'Caroline' was impracticable, or would have been unavailing: it must be shown that daylight could not be waited for; that there could be no attempt at discrimination between the innocent and the guilty, that it would not have been enough to seize and detain the vessel; but that there was a necessity, present and inevitable, for attacking her, in the darkness of the night, while moored to the shore, and while unarmed men were asleep on board, killing some and wounding others, and then drawing her into the current, above the cataract, setting her on fire, and, careless to know whether there might not be in her the innocent with the guilty, or living with the dead committing her to a fate which fills the imagination with horror. A necessity for all this the government of the United States cannot believe to have existed.

"All will see that if such things be allowed to occur, they might lead to bloody and exasperated war; and when an individual comes into the United States from Canada, and to the very place on which this drama was performed, and there chooses to make public and vain glorious boasts of the part he acted in it, it is hardly wonderful that great excitement should be created and some degree of commotion arise.

"This Republic does not wish to disturb the tranquility of the world. Its object is peace, its policy peace. It seeks no aggrandizement by foreign conquests, because it knows that no foreign acquisition could augment its power and importance so rapidly as they are already advancing by its own natural growth, under the propitious circumstances of its situation. But it cannot admit that its government has not both the will and the power to preserve its own neutrality, and to enforce the observance of its own laws upon its own citizens. It is jealous of its rights, and among others, and most especially, of the absolute immunity of its territory against aggression from abroad; and these rights it is the duty and the determination of this Government fully and at all times to maintain; while it will at the same time, as scrupulously refrain from infringing on the rights of others.

"The President instructs the undersigned to say, in conclusion, that he confidently trusts that this and all other questions of difference between the two governments will be treated by both in the full exercise of such a spirit of candor, justice, and mutual respect as shall give assurance of the long continuance of peace between the two countries.

"The undersigned avails himself of this opportunity to assure Mr. Fox of his high consideration. DANIEL WEBSTER.

"HENRY S. FOX, Esq., &c. &c. &c."

THE SUSQUEHANNA.—The vessel with which the Susquehanna came in contact, proves to be the Paragon, from Liverpool bound for Halifax. The following statement is derived from the Miramichi Gleanor of the 25th ult., for which paper it was furnished by the mates:

On the 8th May, at 3 o'clock, A. M., the weather stormy and the ship being under three close reefed topsails, and very thick at the time, saw a large ship running for our midships, and we not having time to keep our vessel away, gave all the alarm we possibly could, but it was of no avail, the ship struck the Paragon amidships, and cut her down as far as we could see. We then hailed the ship and requested them not to leave us, as we were making water very fast, but we received no answer, and she bore away from us. She had bright sides with white mouldings, and from her appearance we supposed her to be one of the New York Liners. We were then a total wreck, our main and mizen masts being carried away, and all the boats stove in. We then commenced to lighten the ship by throwing the cargo overboard, and to nail canvass on her sides; all the hands that could be spared were placed at the pumps, but all our efforts were in vain, the ship rapidly made water and was sinking fast. At 7 o'clock, P. M. we saw a bark bearing down for us, which proved to be the London of Yarmouth bound to Liverpool.—We requested the captain to lay by us till the following morning, which he humanly did, and at 7 o'clock we abandoned the Paragon, she at the time having from 7 to 9 feet water in the hold. On the 11th of May, after being three days on board the London, we spoke the ship Bellona, bound to Miramichi, the captain of which kindly received 13 of the crew and four of the passengers.

The accident occurred in lat. 43 20, lon. 36 30. Mr. Knowlan, of Halifax, a cabin passenger, returned to Liverpool in the London.

THE COLLISION BETWEEN THE PARAGON AND THE SUSQUEHANNA.

Captain Miercken's Statement.—We have been favored with the following statement from captain Miercken, in relation to the recent dreadful collision at sea. It furnishes a detailed account of the catastrophe, and gives many particulars not heretofore published:

To the Editor of the Inquirer.—Observing a paragraph in the newspapers purporting to come from the mate of the ship Paragon, which appears to cast censure on me for not heaving too after the collision of the ships, I am induced to offer the following statement, believing I could not have done otherwsie under the circumstances:

On the 8th May, sea account, at a quarter before 2 o'clock, A. M. lat. 43 degrees 25 miles north, longitude 56 degrees 5 miles west, blowing a gale from N. W. standing west by south and west south west, our ship under three double reefed topsails and whole courses, (the jib and spanker taken in about 10 or 15 minutes before the concussion) very dark and thick weather, going at the rate of eight and a half miles per hour. I was sitting in the cabin when I heard my second officer cry out in a very loud tone, 'hard up! hard up! hard up!' five or six times; I sprang on deck immediately, and asked the officer what was the matter, his reply was that a sail was close under the bow from the leeward, close to us on the larboard tack, standing to the northward and eastward. Our helm was put up instantly, and our ship was paying off, but we were too near to clear her, and struck her on the starboard quarter. The blow we gave the ship caused her to pay off instantly, and we passed each other side and side. I sprang up on the weather rail and looked down on the ship's deck and hailed "ship ahoy," but received no answer, nor could I see any one in motion about the ship's deck; at the moment I thought they were all asleep on board. All the damage I could see in passing we had done the ship was a large hole in the mizen topsail. I thought also at the moment that neither of us received much injury, as I felt very little jar at the time; but on going forward to ascertain what injury was done, the second mate and the man who had the lookout on the top gallant forecastle met me in the waist, and to my surprise told me our bowsprit was carried way under the bows. I immediately looked up at the foremast, saw it swinging about considerably, ordered the helm to be kept hard up, and let the ship be kept before the wind, as we were pitching bows under at the time, and the sea was coming chock aft. I expected to see the foremast go over the side every instant, and it would have been utterly impossible to have hove the ship too, in the critical situation that we were in and the press of canvass that was on the ship, without losing my masts and endangering the loss of our own ship, and the lives of the passengers and crew.—I ran to the forecastle and ordered the watch below to jump up instantly, as our ship was a wreck. I then called the chief mate, stating to him the same, also the carpenter, to bring his sounding rod immediately, to try the pumps, as I found the ship was making water. As soon as the men came on deck I hauled the main sail up, clued the mizen topsail up, and then went forward and hauled the foresail up, as the weather head gearing was carried away, the sail torn away from the head rope, and the lee fore braces were also carried away. The fore-topsail I did not take in as it pressed the mast forward until we got the stays set down, when I also clued it up, and sent the men up to furl it; whilst they were on the yard I was apprehensive lest I should see the mast and all the men go overboard, as the ship tossed about very much in consequence of the high sea on; however before I took any of the canvass in, I could not see anything of the other ship, it being very dark, and we going at the rate of ten knots, as our velocity was increased by the ship's going free. The men were sent up to furl the main sail, but it being wet and heavy, they could not furl it without great loss of time; I ordered them down, and let it take its chance of blowing away. The mizen topsail was handed, while part of the men were getting a tackle on one of the fore topmast stays, that was carried away in the bees, to secure the fore-topmast and foremast from falling. The other stays we could not get cleared away until daylight, and we were under the necessity of running the ship off south by west for fourteen hours, before we got the foremast secured and able to bring the ship by the wind. In fact, until daylight made, I conceived our ship was the most injured vessel; and it was not until I discovered our cut-water was broken off, the gripe all twisted off, and the main stem all broken, and broomed close to the rabbit, and split down as far as the eye could see under water, that I expressed the opinion to my mate, that I feared the other vessel was more injured than ourselves. He then mentioned to me, that one of the crew said he saw one of the masts fall after she passed us.

In passing the ship I observed she had black and white sides, painted ports—could not see any thing like a broken part in the hull; however, the night was dark, and we were passing each other with great speed. Neither I, nor the watch on deck, or the look-out forward, saw a soul on board, or heaad any alarm given from the vessel before or after the concussion; and we passed each other so close after we struck her, and slew'd her round, that I do not think there was one foot distance between the two ships' wales.

A PLEASURE EXCURSION OF FOUR THOUSAND MILES.—The Cincinnati papers announce two expeditions to start about the first of June, for the Falls of St. Anthony, on the Upper Mississippi, and all intermediate landing places. One notice states that "the new, elegant and fast-runing steamboat Nonpareil, Richard A. Mermon, master, will leave the port of Cincinnati, on a pleasure excursion for the above places," &c. The public are likewise informed that "the fast-running and light draught steamer Brazil, Capt. Smith, will leave Cincinnati for the Falls of St. Anthony, stopping at all intermediate places long enough for passengers to view the curiosities of the country." The Brazil starts some ten days later than the other. Both boats are provided with bands of music and other appliances for amusement. There are not many countries in the world where a pleasure trip of nearly four thousand miles could be thus got up through the interior.

☞NEW CHURCH.—The Germantown Telegraph says that a new and very large Methodist church is about to be erected in the borough of Manayunk.—The lot has already been purchased, at the corner of Main street and Green lane, and it is expected that the edifice will be put in course of erection, with the least possible delay. There is already one church of that pursuasion in that borough; but such has been the increase of members during the last year, as urgently to demand an additional place of worship. This speaks well for the cause of religion.

GOOD EXAMPLE.—The Legislature of Rhode Island adjourned on Friday the 7th ult., after a session of two and half days, having transacted a great amount of public and private business.

FREDERICK COUNTY BANK, MARYLAND.—Last week we gave an account of the robbery of this institution:—loss $185,000, 10,000 more than its whole capital. The Directors are energetically busied in calling in all the notes of the Bank. The notes of the Bank are received in payment of debts due the Bank, but the holders must make it appear on oath that they were in possession of the said notes at the time of the robbery. By this arrangement, the stolen notes of the Frederick County Bank can avail the robbers nothing, as it is formally announced they will never be redeemed. So let all persons to whom these notes are offered, beware, and "touch not, handle not."

It is declared that the loss of the Frederick County Bank will fall heavily upon the people of that county. The universal confidence which was wont to be reposed in this institution—the security with which it had been guarded; the high character of its officers—and the caution with which it had always acted, had given it a high character in the public estimation, and its notes and its stocks were sought for with avidity. It is now said, that of $175,000 capital, $134,000 were owned in Fredericktown and county. This must all prove an entire and a dead loss. It is a great calamity.

FIRE IN THE MOUNTAINS.—We learn from the Hollidaysburgh Standard, that on Monday week, the sparks from the locomotive set fire to the fences and woods, and on Tuesday Brush Mountain caught fire, and Messrs. Hammond & Hileman, of the Frankstown Furnace, lost from one thousand to fifteen hundred cords of wood, Mr. Royer, of Springfield Furnace, also lost a quantity. At night the ranges of fire in various directions presented a beautiful appearance. On Monday, the Warehouse attached to the rolling mill of McBride, Bingham & Co. caught fire from the sparks of the locomotive, and the wind blowing tremendously hard, was consumed with all its contents. About five hundred kegs of nails were destroyed, or nearly so. The warehouse also contained several hogsheads of bacon, some barrels of tar, and twenty barrels of whiskey; all combined made the heat so intense that many of the nails are run together, and even in some cases have melted down and run like cast iron. At the time the fire occurred, all the persons employed about the establishment, except four or five, were absent, at the funeral of Mrs. McBride.—Sat. Ev. Post.

LETTER OF MCLEOD.—Alexander McLeod has published a letter in the Scottish Journal, explaining his connexion with the destruction of the Caroline and detailing some of the proceedings had on this trial at Lockport. He denies ever having boasted that he was at the burning of the Caroline, and was the murderer of Durfee—says that when he was first arrested at Lockport, and discharged through a mistake in the indictment, he offered voluntarily to attend the court with his witnesses whenever the Prosecuting Attorney might choose, and prove his innocence; and declares that, as Under Sheriff of the Niagara District, it was his duty and interest to prevent an invasion of Canada. He says further, that it is long since he incurred the dislike of the patriots, and they have punished him far more severely than the public are aware. He promises hereafter to make known sundry other matters which have provoked patriotic virulence against him.

DR. ELDRIDGE.—The Eldridge jury came into court yesterday morning, and stated through their foreman that they stood the same as they did six days ago, and that there was neither a probability or a possibility of their agreeing upon a verdict; they, therefore, asked the court to discharge them. The jurors were then severally sworn and affirmed, and the following question proposed to them by Judge Barton—"Are you of opinion that there is any probability or possibility of your agreeing upon a verdict by continuing for any length of time, however remote, in your jury room?" They all answered in the negative. The jury were then discharged. They stood, at the time of their discharge, eight for conviction, and four for acquittal. Thus has ended the third trial of this individual.

Upon the first trial the Doctor was acquitted, upon the second the jury were not able to agree, and the present trial resulted the same as the second. Dr. Eldridge has now been more than a year in prison, the county has been put to a most enormous expense, and what the end will be, no one can say. We believe that it is the intention of the counsel for Dr. Eldridge to bring him before the court to-morrow by writ of habeas corpus, and demand his discharge.—Phil. Chron. 4th inst.

REV. ALFRED BRUNSON.—It will be gratifying to many of the numerous friends of this minister, once a member of our conference, but now residing in Wiskonsan, to learn, that though he is not engaged in so honorable a work as itinerating and preaching the gospel, he is nevertheless doing well. A friend of ours who has just returned from Prairie Duchien informs us that Brother Brunson is a member of the Wiskonsan Legislature, and withal is admitted to the bar as an Attorney at Law. It is true that there are many privations to be submitted to by a travelling preacher who gives his whole time to the work of the ministry, but it is the happiest and most useful life, an editor's not excepted. We cannot even accept a lawyer's or legislator's.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

THE STEAMER PRESIDENT.—By Harden's Express we received at an early hour, yesterday, the Boston Transcript of Thursday evening, from which we clip the following:

"We received this morning, by mail, the following slip, by which it appears that, if there is no mistake, the long missing steamer President has at last been heard from.

'Sentinel Office, Eastport, May 31st, 1841. Capt. Heney, who left St. John N. B., on Saturday evening, reports, that the Collector of St. John received information on Saturday that Capt. Roberts and sixteen men, of the steamer President had arrived at the eastward, but at what place Capt Heney did not ascertain. One account stated Newfoundland, and another Prince Edward's Island. It is stated that the steamer struck an iceberg and immediately went down, carrying down every one on board but the watch on deck. It is farther stated that Capt. Roberts and the persons saved were among the ice 3 or 4 days, and were picked up by a vessel and carried in. Capt. Heney says the news is implicitly believed in St. John. Knowing the extreme anxiety of the public regarding this ill-fated vessel, we deem it proper to impart the above report by the earliest opportunity.'

"We think that but very little reliance can be placed upon the correctness of this story. Letters have been recently received in this city from Prince Edward's Island, which make no mention of the circumstance. We have also intelligence from St. Peters to the 5th of May, and from Newfoundland, but no accounts of the President had been received at either of those places."—Phil. Chron.

The green color in the leaves of plants is produced by the mixture of carbon, which is probably of a deep blue, with the cellular texture, which is of whitish yellow. The carbon is obtained partly from the earth, partly from the air; but light is necessary for plants to decompose the carbonic gas, of which they retain the carbon only, without the oxygen, and therefore, plants growing in darkness are not green, but white or yellow; as those are which are earthed up, celery, endive, &c. This also accounts for the bending of plants towards the light.

No fewer than 62,994 persons have signed the Manchester petition for the abolition of the corn laws.

FOREIGN NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP ACADIA.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Acadia arrived at Boston, on Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock, having made her passage in thirteen days and a half. She left Liverpool on the 19th ult. and had good weather most of the time; having seen only one iceberg.

The Great Western arrived at King's road on the 14th, thus completing her home voyage in 13 days, and fairly beating the Columbia.

The steamship Columbia arrived at Liverpool on the 15th, having made the passage in thirteen days. She had good weather most of the way.

The Steamer President had not arrived, and no certain intelligence had been obtained from her. Every breeze from the broad Atlantic, to the anxious watchers, gave signs of woe that all was lost. Every hope was abandoned to despair.

THE STEAMER PRESIDENT.

The Schooner Corsair, Capt. Morisey, has arrived at Halifax, from Fortune Bay, N. F., in seven days. The Corsair reports that six days before sailing, a boat belonging to Fortune Bay, arrived there from St. Pierre, the skipper of which reported that a vessel from France arrived at that Island, which had picked up the captain and sixteen seamen of an American Steamer, and had reported that fif y-six other persons, who had been in the Steamer, were lost; the said vessel had foundered in consequence of running foul of an iceberg; the skipper stated that he had seen the captain of the steamer at Pierre.

London, May 18.

THE PRESIDENT STEAMER.

Up to yesterday, (Sunday) afternoon, no tidings of the steamer President, Lieut. Roberts, R. N. commander, had been received by the British and American Steam Navigation Company, at their office in Billiter-square, Billiter street.

The following reports have been received:

"Cove of Cork, May 12.

"The Columbia packet, Capt. Garrett, from Monte Video, which place she left on the 27th of January, for Antwerp, has come in here, and Capt. Garrett reports that 10 days since, (2d ultimo,) in long. 18, he saw at a distance, a large steamer, bound for the eastward, and which appeared to him to be disabled, as she was going very slowly and could hardly keep way with his vessel. As night came on he lost sight of her, and two days afterwards experienced a heavy gale to the eastward. The apparently disabled ship was so far from him that he cannot describe her appearance further than she was a large steamer."

Captain Garrett had not heard that the President was missing until asked by the gentlemen (George Wright, esq., surveyor to Lloyd's) who was good enough to furnish us with these particulars.

EXTRAORDINARY FIELDS OF ICE IN THE ATLANTIC.

The following is an extract of a letter written by Capt. James Hosken, commander of the Great Western:

"GREAT WESTERN STEAMSHIP,
British Channel, May 14, 1841.

"SIR—Under the impression that ice, to the extent it has been seen this year, has never before been heard of, in these latitudes, I give you the following particulars for the information of your readers: On Sunday, April 18, the ship steering west, at 5 P. M. first saw one iceberg on the starboard bows, at 7 30 passed it; and at that time saw four or five others in sight; at 9 15 passed several small pieces of ice—blowed the engine.

In a few minutes after, the ship was surrounded with light field ice, which appeared similar to a field I ran through on the 11th February, 1839—this induced me to go slowly, with the hope of getting through as I had done on that occasion, but by 9 30 finding it become closely packed, and much thicker, prudence dictated our escape by the same channel we had entered. I then stopped, and attempting to get the ship's head to the eastward by turning a-head and astern until there was room for her to come round; in the course of this operation the ship had occasionally (at least) two strokes heel given by either wheel passing over large masses of ice.

At 10 15 succeeded in getting the ship's head to the eastward, and 11 entirely clear; from that time went slowly, passing several icebergs; the night at times very clear; the aurora borealis very bright. At 3 30 s. m. of the 19th, again embayed in the ice, stopped, hauled short round on our keel, and steered E. S. coasting the ice for five or six miles; 4 20, kept her to the westward running through innumerable icebergs.

When the sun arose the ice was visible as far as the eye could reach in unbroken line from N. E. by E. by the northward to N. W. by W. at the same time icebergs innumerable in every direction, forming one of the most magnificent sights I ever beheld.

The first iceberg was in lat. 45, long. 48,30 and this last in lat. 42.20, long. 50.00. I am quite certain there was an unbroken field of that extent, and from what I heard from Captain Baily, of the American Packet Ship United States, I have no doubt the field of ice extended with very little break, to lat. 40.30, where Captain Baily fell in with it on the morning of the 18th ultimo.

Several other ships fell in with it in the same longitude, and was completely stopped, giving them an opportunity of killing seals, which were on it in great numbers.

Some of the icebergs I estimate a little less than a mile long, and from 150 to 200 feet high: this field of ice was in large masses, some of them not less than 20 feet square, by six feet thick or more."

CORN LAWS.

The principal subject of excitement was the proposed repeal of the corn laws, but no definite action was had on the subject in Parliament.

Lord John Russell has announced his scale of corn duties to be submitted for the present protecting law. It is as follows:

On Wheat 8s per quarter.
On Rye 5s.
On Barley 4s 6d.
On Oats 3s 4d.

Great as is the enthusiasm against the corn laws in England, it is much surpassed by the feeling which exists in Scotland. There is scarcely a town or district of the least importance, that has not petitioned, prepared to petition, or taken some other measure to accomplish the overthrow of the landlord's monopoly. In addition to the immense number of petitions already presented to the Legislature from Scotland, many, very many have been forwarded within the past week. From Edinburgh, petitions follow each other by dozens and half-dozens at a time.—The demonstration which "Auld Reekie" has made against the hateful bread tax, by public meetings and by petitioning, is highly to the honor of the inhabitants of that great city, and is an example to the rest of the kingdom. Public meetings have been held at Greenock, Selkirk, Sterling, Kelso, Earlstoun, and many other places.

LOSS OF THE WILLIAM BROWN.

Dreadful Shipwreck.—Havre, May 10.—The Louis Phillippe, New York packet ship, has this moment arrived. Information having reached the town that some shipwrecked seamen were on board, the report being general that they belonged to the President, and the excitement was beyond all description. On the arrival in dock, however, a strong body of the gendarmerie were in waiting, and immediatety took into custody the mate and eight of the crew of the ship William Brown, bound from Liverpool to Philadelphia, which was sunk by an iceberg in the latter part of last month. It appears, when the vessel struck, thirty-three passengers, the mate and eight of the crew took to the long boat; the captain, three of the crew and eleven passengers, took to the jolly-boat; all the rest sunk with the vessel. The boats parted in the night. Some days after the mate and crew determined, in order to lighten the boat to throw seventeen of the passengers overboard, which was accomplished and some of the most horrid and revolting scenes took place.—Some clung to the sides of the boat, praying for mercy; but their hands were cut off, and they were pushed into the deep. Fifteen ladies and two men remained in the boat. One hour after the massacre the Cresent fell in with the boat, and saved the survivors of this horrid deed. The passengers remained on board the Cresent; the crew arrived in the Ville de Lyon: they are now under examination before the American consul. The result I will not fail to communicate to you; but you may rely on what I have already stated. The jolly-boat has not been heard of. The dates of the Ville de Lyon have been anticipated by the Acadia.—Morning Post.

THE WRECK OF THE WILLIAM BROWN.—A very long and interesting letter has been received by the Atlantic Insurance Company, in this city, giving an account of the melancholy loss of the above named vessel. The jolly-boat succeeded in reaching Newfoundland, with nine persons on board.

The letter also says, too much praise cannot be bestowed to Captains Bell and Stoddard, who picked them up. The merchants of Havre have made a subscription for the passengers and crew. Messrs. Lewis, Rogers & Co. have offered a passage gratis to the United States.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The business in the manufacturing towns still continue dull, and a great many workmen were out of employ.

FRANCE.

The Court of Peers closed on Tuesday its secret deliberation on the affair relative to the attempt against the King's life on the 15th of October. Darmes, as the principal author of the attempt, and Duclos and Considere, as his accomplices, are to be tried by the Court of Peers. The eight other accused were acquitted of the charge of having been accomplices, but seven are to be tried by the Court of Correctional Police, for being affiliated to illegal associations, and having in their possession warlike stores and arms. One only, Borel, who became an informer, was set at liberty. The decree was signed by 146 peers, and last of all by the son of Marshal Ney. The debates are to commence on the 24th ult.

CHINA.

An express in anticipation of the overland mail, arrived in London, on the 6th ult. from which we learn that the China difficulty is yet unsettled. Elliott is severely censured by the English opposition papers for his diliatory conduct. The following epitome of the contents of the mail, we cut from the London Post of the 6th ult:

The trade had not been re-opened on the 2d of February, as agreed upon, and every thing was still in uncertainty. Keshen and Captain Elliott were humbugging one another, but it is said the Canton authorities were not pleased with the arrangement, and there was a rumor of Keshen being to be superceded. Some think that a final settlement will not be obtained without further hostilities. It has been an ill-fated, ill directed expedition, attended with the most unnecessary waste of British life, and nothing is yet really settled so as to admit of the English venturing up to Canton.

Hong Kong has been proclaimed an English settlement. The smuggling of teas was active and easy, the article was bad and dear. Two ships for London were nearly laden with them. On the other hand, gentlemen from China say there is plenty of tea in Canton, and they are confident in their opinion that tea will be exported this year as usual, the probability being that Captain Elliott will make no sacrifice to obtain that object. The troops in Chusan were still sickly.

A letter from China states in confirmation of the above that nothing was settled up to the 11th of February last.

DROUGHT—THE CROPS.—On Saturday last we d a smart shower, which is all the rain we have d for three weeks, save a slight shower. We ve not, to our recollection, ever seen the effects the drought, on vegetation, so great before in is vicinity. It has been doubly severe from the rtered state of the ground, owing to the con- ued and excessive rains before it sat in. From esent prospects there will not be more than e third of a crop of grass, and even less of eat, the drought and the fly both operating to rtail the latter. We have, within a few days, nversed with persons who have visited several the surrounding counties, who give about the me representation of the crops where they have en. We hope, however, that this complaint not general. Bicknell of the 8th inst., says:

The intelligence in relation to the crops is ighly favourable from almost every section of he country. In the vicinity of Philadelphia, he prospect was never more cheering. A gen- leman remarked to us a day or two ago, that ith regard to some descriptions, the only fear as, lest the growth should be too rapid. The in- elligence from the west and south is also favour- ble. The Cahawaba (Alabama) Democrat of he 22d ult. says—"The corn crops in this sec- ion look finely, and we have fair prospects of aving a good crop year. The cotton, in conse- uence of the cool weather, does not do so well, ut, we think, so soon as warm weather returns, otton will commence to flourish, and will grow ff fine."

THE PROTESTANT.—We publish the strictures of our esteemed friend on the first page, relating to the Protestant, rather reluctantly, because it is both in accordance with our feelings, and our duty, to cultivate peace with that paper; so far, at least, as it can be done consistently with our essential rights. We think the editor was greatly in error in making such invidious allu- sions to us as he did, and still worse estray in not permitting us to reply in his paper to the mis- representations which he made of us. For the whole, we have reproved him as we adjudged the case required, but as has ceased to criminate us further we feel disposed to forgive and be at peace.

It affords us pleasure to be informed from sour- ces to be relied on, that in this region, we have been almost universally sustained by public opinion, in our controversy with the "official or- gan." And it is gratifying to know that our old friend, above alluded to, thinks with us in this matter. But still we ask it as a favor of him, and other of our correspondents, hereafter, to make no reference to this subject. But, as we have taken the liberty to stricture the church paper, as we thought proper, we must accord the same right to others, and if they insist on this right it shall not be withheld from them, only we will af- fix their proper names to their communications. This is necessary to save ourself from censure, for it may easily be imagined by those disposed to think evil, that it is us keeping up the war under ficticious signatures.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE, June 16.—Flour 3,25; wheat 65 cents.

BALTIMORE, June 5.—Flour—The price of Howard street Flour, from store, for good com- mon brands, has been regular through the week at 5,00 per bbl., and although the receipts con- tinue light, 1000 bbls. have probably been sold; towards the close, the market became rather flat and sales were made at 5,00 on short time, with interest added. Choice brands have sold at 5,12½. The car price has been uniform at 4,87½. The Baltimore and Ohio railroad Company hav- ing reduced the rates of freight to 34 cts. per bbl. from the junction of that road to the Winchester railroad, will tend hereafter, probably, to increase the receipts of this description of flour.

Provisions—Aside from the filling of special orders for Beef, Pork and Bacon, on terms which do not govern ordinary transactions, we quote sales of Mess Beef at 12,50; and Mess and Clear Pork, 12 a 12,50 per bbl. Prime Western ba- con, in assorted lots of 5000 to 10,000 lbs. have been sold at 6cts. per lb. 4 mos.: 1500 hams from cts, for large size, to 8¼ a 8½, city smoked; and sides and shoulders upon various terms, par- ticularly the latter, holders are disposed to re- alize as soon convenient. No transactions in Lard, which is held at 7a7½ cents in bbls. and kegs.

Western Transportation—The wagon rates remain unchanged: to Pittsburgh, 1,00; to Wheeling, 1,25 per 100 lbs.

The Home Market—The sales of Beef Cattle have not exceeded 100 head, during the week, and prices average about 8,00 per 100 lbs.—Ly- ford.

PHILADELPHIA, June 8.—Flour—The advance in the price of Flour noticed early in the week has not been sustained, the receipts nevertheless continue only moderate; sales for export were made to-day at 6,12½ which may be considered the present quotation for good Penn- sylvania brands.

Cattle Market—The offerings comprised 422 Beeves, of which 150 were from Ohio, 327 Cows and Calves, 760 swine, and 970 sheep and lambs. Beef Cattle were in demand, and the offering was entirely disposed of at 7a8 per 100 lbs. for good to prime quality, and common at 6,00a6,50.

MASSILLON, O., June 3.—Wheat, per bush. 78 cents; Flour, per bbl. 3,25; Pork, per bbl. 10,00; Pork, per cwt. 3,00.—Gazette.

TWENTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS—EXTRA-SESSION.

Washington, June 3, 1841.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—The House met at eleven o'clock agreeably to adjournment.

Mr. Baynard moved to take up his resolution for the appointment of two select committees, one on the subject of currency and a fiscal agent, and the other on the Distribution of the Public Lands.

After some remarks from Mr. Pickens and Mr. Clifford the House refused, by a large majority, to consider the resolutions.

The resolution offered by Mr. Wise relative to the House, with Mr. Adams' amendment to rescind the rule excluding abolition petitions, was then taken up, and discussed at great length, by Mr. Wise, Mr. Johnston, of Md., and Mr. Slade.

Mr. Wise moved to lay the subject on the ta- ble.

Mr. Hopkins moved the previous question.

The call was not sustained, and under the parliamentary law by which the House is govern- ed, the whole matter is postponed until to-mor- row.

U. S. SENATE.—This morning Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, offered a resolution for repealing the Sub-Treasury Law. He supported his motion at some length and entered into a detail of his objections to the existing law.

When he had concluded, Mr. Calhoun rose in defence of the present system, and in reply to the objections of Mr. Clay.

The question was not taken when the Senate adjourned. The debate will, no doubt, be resu- med to-morrow.

Washington, June 7, 1841.

SENATE.—Mr. Bayard, of Del., from the select committee appointed to take into consideration the respect due to General Harrison, the late President, reported joint resolutions, providing that the chair of the President of the Senate, and the seats of the members be shrouded in black during the session, and that the members wear the usual badge of mourning during that time. The resolutions also appropriate a sum for the remuneration of the expenses incurred by the late President. These resolutions were subsequently ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. Clay then introduced a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury to communic- cate to the Senate, with as little delay as possi- ble, the plan of such a bank as will, in his opin- ion, produce the happiest results, and lasting and important benefits to the country.

Mr. Clay, in offering the resolution, said he was induced so to do by the suggestion in the Treasury Report, that a bank might be created which would reconcile the conflicting opinions of all parties. Mr. Clay doubted the possibility of effecting so desirable a result, but was anxious to nevertheless, to see what plan the Secretary had.

Mr. Woodbury read a portion of the Report to show that the Secretary had doubts in his mind as to whether a bank was constitutional.

Mr. Wright had two exceptions to the resolu- tion: 1st. That it required the Secretary, re- port the plan of a bank: and 2nd, that it must be an incorporated Bank.

Mr. Calhoun wanted the resolution to take a wider scope, not to be confined to a Bank, but a report in extenso from the Secretary giving his views.

Mr. Buchanan was very anxious to see this 'fiscal agent,' that was to work wonders, and to bring about a millenium at once. The Constitu- tion, he added, would trouble them as much whether the bank was located in Wall street or the District of Columbia.

After some modifications suggested by Mr. Rives, calling upon the Secretary for his plan of a fiscal agent or a Bank, the resolution was adopt- ed.

Mr. Clay submitted the following resolutions:

Resolved, In the opinion of the Senate, at the present session of Congress, no business ought to be transacted but such as being of an important and urgent nature, may be supposed to have in- fluenced the extraordinary convention of Con- gress, or such as that the postponement of it might be materially detrimental to the public in- terests.

Resolved, Therefore in the opinion of the Senate, that the following subjects ought first, if not exclusively, to engage the deliberations of Congress at the present session, viz:

1st. The repeal of the Sub-Treasury.

2d. The incorporation of a Bank adapted to the wants of the people and the Government.

3d. The provision of an adequate revenue for the Government by the imposition of duties, and including an authority to contract temporate loan, to lessen the public debt created by the last administration.

4th. The prospective distribution of the pro- ceeds of the public lands.

5th. The passage of necessary appropriation bills.

6th. Some modification of the banking system of the District of Columbia, for the benefit of the people of the district.

Resolved, That it is expedient to distribute the business proper to be done at this session, between the Senate and House of Representa- tives, so as to allow of both Houses acting on the same subject at the same time.

The Senate then went into Committee of the Whole upon Mr. Clay's Bill to repeal the Sub- Treasury.

Some explanation upon the effect of the repeal of the act of 1837, took place between Mr. Clay and Mr. Calhoun, when Mr. Berrien expressing a wish for time to examine the subject, the Senate near 5 o'clock adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—After the House was called to order this morning, the Speaker rose and stated the difficult position in which he was placed and requested the House to decide what Rules the Speaker should be governed by; either the Rules of the last Congress, or the Par- liamentary Rules of Great Britain.

Mr. Chapman, of Alabama, and Mr. Beeson, of Pennsylvania, appeared, were qualified, and took their seats.

The discussion on the question of Mr. Wise, to adopt the rules of the last House of Represen- tatives for the government of this House, with the amendment of Mr. Adams, to reject so much of the 21st Rule as refuses to entertain abolition petitions, was resumed by Mr. Wise, and con- tinued by Mr. Adams, Mr. W. C. Johnson, and Mr. T. B. King, of Ga.

Mr. Fillmore gained the floor, and in a few re- marks, in which he alluded to the important busi- ness for which the session was called, and after appreciating the tone of defiance and threat which had been indulged in by the gentleman from Georgia, moved the previous question, which, after a remark from Mr. W. C. Johnson, was de- cided to be out of order.

Mr. Mallory moved that the House adjourn, when the ayes and noes were ordered, which stood ayes 56, noes 149, so the House refused to adjourn.

The main question on the adoption of the a- mendment of Mr. Adams was then called for, and the question 'shall the main question be now put,' was decided by ayes and noes as follows—ayes 122 noes 89.

Mr. Dawson contended that the main question was Mr. Wise's resolutions to adopt the Rules of the last House, and that the vote just taken cut off the amendments.

Mr. Gilmer hoped no advantage would be ta- ken of an erroneous impression, and he believed that the Speaker had decided right, in making the amendment of Mr. Adams the main question.

The question as so understood was then put and decided by ayes and noes, as follows—ayes 112 noes 104; so the amendment of Mr. Adams was adopted.

The question then came up on Mr. Wise's mo- tion, who then rose and after protesting against the adoption of the amendment moved to lay his motion on the table.

Mr. Floyd then moved that the House adjourn, which was decided by ayes and noes: ayes 85, noes 126.

Mr. Fillmore moved the previous question on the original motion of the gentleman from Vir- ginia, Mr. Wise, which was decided to have pre- cedence of the motion to lay on the table, when

Mr. Chapman moved an adjournment, which was taken by ayes and noes, as follows; noes 91, noes 102; so the House refused to adjourn.

ITEMS.

THE GREAT MAIL ROBBER CONVICTED.—We are indebted to John G. Miller, Esq., P. M. of this city, for the information, received by him in a letter from Dr. Kennedy, that Dr. Braddee, the great Mail Robber, was convicted on the 4th inst. of three distinct offences; and that Carman and Strayer, accomplices, immediately plead guilty. One more remained to be tried. Every possible exertion was made to save Braddee; but the proof was too clear. We saw it stated in a Pitts- burgh paper, at the commencement of the trial, that the Doctor had two hundred witnesses in attendance.—State Journal.

ST. LOUIS TRAGEDY.—In our last we stated the conviction of Madison. The St. Louis Re- publican of May 26th states that Brown, one of the principal actors, has also been found guilty of murder in the first degree. He was tried on the 25th.

Seward, alias Sewell, was tried and convicted on the 26th, and Warrick on the 27th. Thus the whole of those engaged in this inhuman transaction, have, speedily indeed, been traced out, taken, tried, and convicted. We have not, as yet, learned their sentences—we should say, day of execution, for they will doubtless be hung. —ib.

The three commissioners appointed by the Court of Common Pleas, to examine and value the assets made by the U. S. Bank, to secure the Philadelphia City Banks, for 5,000,000 dollars of post notes held by those institutions, have arriv- ed at the conclusion that the assets are worth 108,700 dollars more than that sum.—ib.

The Court House at Tiffin, Ohio, was destroy- ed by fire on Saturday, 22d ult. It was a brick building, and is said to have cost about twelve thousand dollars. It is supposed to have been set on fire by some incendiary.—ib.

Gen. Ried was recently shot dead in the streets of Tallahassee, Florida, by Willis Alston, whose brother the General had killed in a duel. Alston is in confinement.

Dr. W. P. Dewees, of Philadelphia, died in that city on the 18th ult.

The jail of Clermont county, Ohio, was burn- ed down on the night of Tuesday, 25th ult. The building had been erected in 1838, at a cost of about 4000 dollars. A poor old man, who had been confined in the jail for some time previously, had committed suicide within its walls on the Sunday night preceding, by hanging himself with a leather string.

By a law of New York, a bounty of 15 cents per lb. is paid on all cocoons raised in the State, and 50 cents per lb. on the reeled silk: The law continues in force until June 1, 1846. The Agent of the State prison at Auburn, gives no- tice that he will pay three dollars per bushel for cocoons of a good quantity, delivered at the pri- son.

ANOTHER MURDER IN ST. LOUIS.—On Thurs- day of last week, in a dispute between Major E. T. Langham and a Mr. James Adams, in regard to Duncan's Island, the former shot the latter through the head with a common pocket pistol.— Alton Telegraph.

WARM AND DRY.—The thermometer for the last ten days has upon an average ranged at about 90°. in the shade, but frequently rising, during the hotest period of the day, to 96. Under such scorching heat and the prevalence of a pinching drought, crops and pastures begin to suffer severe- ly.—Lebanon, Ohio, Star.

THE WEATHER—CROPS.—A letter from New town, Hamilton county, Ohio, says "the weath- er is warm and dry, corn crops look bad—worse than I ever saw them at this season of the year." —Ohio Statesman.

Nine more persons were baptized on Sunday last by the Rev. Dr. Perry, of the Baptist Church in this city.—Alton Telegraph.

COURSE OF TRADE.—The Buffalo Daily Repub- lican informs us that a good deal of Tobacco is finding its way this season, from the interior of Ohio, to Baltimore, via New York. The price of freight and tolls on the Pennsylvania canals, together with other inconveniences, driving it away from that route.

The business Convention at Harrisburg, Pa., adjourned on the 26th ult. after appointing a Com- mittee to memoralize Congress, and to prepare an Address to the People of the State.

An attempt was made on Monday of last week to rob the Branch Bank of Virginia, at Danville. After getting in the villains became frightened and decamped, leaving their tools behind them. A reward of $500 has been offered for their de- tection.

COFFEE.—The Pittsburgh American says that they are planting coffee upon the Western Prai- ries.

Hon. Bates Cooke, late Comptroller of the State of New York, died in Buffalo on the 30th ult. Mr. Cooke not long since resigned his office on account of his ill health.

DEATH OF KEOKUK.—The Galena (Ill.) Ga- zette of the 14th, says that the Chief of the Sacs and Fox Indians was killed recently by Nash- ieskock, Black Hawk's son. The difficulty orig- inated in a dispute relative to the distribution of the moneys paid the Indians by the General Government.

Commodore Alexander Claxton, Commander of the American squadron in the Pacific, died at Talcahuano on the 7th of March. His remains were conveyed to Valpariso, where the funeral took place on the 12th.

Gen. Thos. Glasscock, formerly member of Con- gress from Georgia, died on the 20th ultimo, in consequence of a fall from a horse.

CANADA.—There is a report that Lord Syden- ham will vacate his office of Governor General early in the fall, and will be succeeded by Lord Morpeth, or Sir C. Metcalfe.

COAL.—The amount of coal shipped at Potts- ville, Pa. during the fortnight ending May 28, was 16,788 tons, and the number of boats em- ployed 262. During the same time last year the amount shipped was 60,902 tons.

The fine steamer Cleveland is running on Lake Erie with coal for fuel. She runs from Buffalo to Detroit and back in 48 hours, at a cost of $132 for fuel.

Mrs. Jane Robinson, a widow, committed sui- cide at Glade Spring, Va. on the 20th.

A man by the name of Brady was killed recent- ly by Mr. Ames, proprietor of the race course near St. Louis. The latter was held to bail in the sum of $20,000.

Michigan City, Indiana, (and the only port of that State on Lake Michigan,) is growing stea- dily to importance. Five vessels have been loa- ding there at one time this Spring: one of them took 1,300 barrels of Pork; another 1,200 bar- rels of Flour; and there are now 3,000 of Pork, and 5,000 of Flour waiting for shipment.

To Exchange Papers and others.

SERMONS ON THE DEATH OF THE LATE PRESIDENT.

The Editor of the Christian World, deeming it desirable to collect the Sermons, published, and to be published, on this occasion of national mourning and humiliation; and supposing that some copies of each publication, will, as is usual with pamphlet and sheet issues, be distributed gratuitously; takes this method of requesting, very respectfully, that Preachers and Publishers will favor him with a single copy, each of such Discourses. Please address:—Christian World, Philadelphia.

Our exchange papers, and Editors and Pub- lishers generally, are requested to give this card an insertion in their columns. The nature of the case precludes the proffer of pecuniary compen- sation. The best acknowledgement that the Ed- itor can make will be made in his own publica- tion: a copy of one number, of which will be sent, if practicable, to each Preacher, Publisher or Ed- itor, who shall forward a Sermon, either in pamphlet or newspaper form, or a copy of this card so marked as to attract attention.

Philadelphia, May 1st, 1841.

NEW SEMINARY.—The Protestant Episcopal Church of Maryland have purchased the late resi- dence of Gen. Rinegold, in Washington Coun- ty, Md., and intend to establish a Seminary there for the instruction of youth. The place is said to be admirably situated for an institution of this kind. The mansion cost originally 10,000 dollars.

A law of New York allowing persons who visit that State to hold the slaves by which they may be attended for nine months, has been repealed, and a slave now becomes free upon being taken into the State by his master.

DISTRESSING CASUALTY.—Lorenzo Dow Woolwine, a mechanic of this place, ad- dicted to excessive intemperance, fell from his feet on last Sunday evening, while in a state of intoxication, and broke his neck in the fall. Such we understand was the verdict of the Coroner's jury.—S. W. Virginian.

TO PRESERVE TIMBER.—It has been as- certained that timber soaked for some days in lime water, will resist dry rot much longer than timber not similarly treated. After it is taken out of lime water, it should be allowed to dry and season.

THE PRESIDENT STEAMER.—The N. Y. Times says—"We have heard this morn- ing of a case of greater difficulty than this of the President. Captain Cazenau sailed from Boston for the West Indies in the month of December, 1811, with a crew of eight persons. The vessel had been out but four days, when she was up- set in a gale of wind, the Captain and crew saving themselves on the bottom.

"They drifted about until the 20th of June following, when the Captain and one man, the only survivors, were taken off by a British vessel, ninety miles from Teneriffe. This is an extraordinary case; we have no room for particulars. It will be seen that this wreck was floundering about the ocean, at its mercy, months, without being seen."

A ROYAL ELOPEMENT.—Files by the Acadia informs us that the Princess Isa- bella, daughter of the Infanta Don Fran- cisco Paulo, eloped from Paris with Count Gerofski, but they were arrested at Namur by the Belgian Police. They were de- tained twenty-four hours here to repair their carriage, which had broken down.— When the police asked for their passport Count Gerofski produced one with a false name, and having been requested to sign this name, he was not able to spell it.— He was detained in prison with the Infan- ta at the hotel, and a notice was immedi- ately sent to the Government of their ar- rest. Orders were directly sent from Brussels to take the Princess back to Pa- ris. Count Gerofski will probably be brought before the tribunals for having used a false passport.

John Powers, the mail robber has been caught at Cincinnati. The river mail was robbed on the 24th ult. below Louis- ville, and on the 29th, Powers sold a half bill in this city, which was taken from that mail. He said he had purchased it at Memphis, but this was impossible, as it was lost on the 24th and sold here on the 29th.

SUGAR CROP.—The New Orleans Ad- vertiser of the 24th ult. states that the sugar fields in the interior have recover- ed from the shock given them by the late cold, and they now present a thrifty ap- pearance. No apprehension of a short crop is felt by any one.

MORE OF THE ICE.—The Boston Patri- ot of Saturday says,—"Capt. Young, from Miquelon, reports that ice has been unu- sually abundant this season. Many French vessels had arrived at St. Peters, which had been confined in it 15 or 20 days, unable to extricate themselves.

THE COTTON CROP.—The southern pa- pers insist that the cotton crop of the present year will vary very little from 1,600,000 bales. And yet, observes the Charleston Mercury, at the very time when this deficiency becomes apparent and admitted to the fullest extent on the other side of the water, cotton undergoes so serious a decline as to threaten great, if not ruinous loss, to the leading houses that deal in it.

A MISTAKE.—A farmer, near Stoystown Pa., named J. G. Clark, has been mistaken by the police, for the great New Orleans forger of drafts on the Northern Banks, and held to bail in $2000! He was in this city, last week, procuring certificates of the Bank officers that he was not the 'in- dividual.'—Phil. Cour.

Farmers, visiting our village to pur- chase goods, are requested to bring with them an extra quantity of fodder, as there are a good many cows running about the streets, who rely mainly upon pickings and stealings from market wagons for their daily subsistence.—Saco Her.

The above is cool, and must be consid- ered as "rayther" in the Pickwickian sense. It's a fair hit, nevertheless: and might an- swer, as the almanac makers say, for oth- er latitudes besides Saco.—Phila. Cour.

THE RELIEF BILL.—The Girard Bank has this week resolved not to accept the provisions of the "Relief Bill." This was without a dissenting voice. The Western Bank has done the same thing, by a large majority of its stockholders, who were de- sired to call or send their pleasures to the Bank, previous to Tuesday last.

This bill is received with the most ad- verse views in various portion of the State. Messrs. C. J. Ingersoll, G. M. Dallas and W. L. Hirst, have published an opinion that it is unconstitutional.—Phil. Cour.

A delicious cheese custard may be made by taking a pint of cottage cheese (smear- case,) and stirring it into about a quart of milk; add eight eggs, beat up thoroughly a light sprinkling of cinnamon, place in paste shells and bake.

A SPLENDID WEDDING.—The monotony of Montreal life was last week agreeably diversified by the public marriage of Mr. Desperats to the beautiful and accomplish- ed Miss Selby. At ten o'clock the Cathe- dral contained no less than five thousand spectators, and the ceremony was perform- ed according to the imposing and sublime ritual of the Roman Catholic form. The bride was attended by 12 filles d'dhonneur, and the happy bridegroom by an equal number of garcons d'honneur. This is the most splendid wedding which ever occur- red in Montreal, or as the Herald thinks, on the continent, and was attended by all the fashionables in the city.

ABOLITION IN SWEDEN.—A movement in favor of abolition has been made in Swe- den. In both houses of the Diet, an ad- dress to the King has been moved and car- ried, soliciting an inquiry into the state of slavery at St. Bartholomew, with a view to its termination. The address was moved in the Upper House by Pro- fessor Gier, a person of distinguished lit- erary rank, and by his brother in the lower.

A Mrs. Stevens died recently in Clear- field county, Pa., at the advanced age of 108 years. She left her third husband a widower—and her posterity extends down to the sixth generation.

THE NEW WORLD.

A New Enlarged Quarto Volume.

COMMENCING THE FIRST WEEK IN JULY.

THE Third Volume of the QUARTO form of the NEW WORLD will commence on the 3d of July, when it will be much enlarged, and four columns given on each page, instead of three, making sixty-four columns of choice reading, without any increase in the price. New Vol- umes will always begin on the 1st of July and 1st of January, making two in each year, of 416 pages each, to which a handsome title page, and a co- pious index will be given.

The NEW WORLD is a Journal of Popular Lit- erature, Criticism, Science and the Arts. It is supplied with articles by the first living writers of the United States and Great Britain. The first number was issued in June, 1840, and its circulation has steadily increased to this day, till it counts more readers than any other news- paper of its kind in the world. This is owing to the fact of its having given to the public, for a sum merely nominal, and always in advance of any other print, the most popular works of the most approved authors.

A novel and striking feature of the New World, is, that it has given besides the great literary productions of the day, the discourses of eminent divines. In future these discourses will be pre- sented even more frequently than heretofore; but not too often to interfere with other inter- esting articles.

In addition to all these new and popular works, these eloquent discourses, this comprehensive journal has given the best poems and periodicals papers which have appeared in the English and American Magazines. What has been done is an earnest of what will be done.

The New World is divided into various depart- ments, viz:—Original Articles; First American Editions; Periodical Literature; The Scrap Book; The Literary World; The Musical World; The Dramatic World; The Political World; The World of Science and Art; Patchwork; Latest Intelligence.

We cannot forbear to add in conclusion, that the New World studiously avoids all party poli- tics; and is conducted on principles of the strict- est morality. No profane or improper jest, no vulgar allusion, no irreligious sentiment, is allow- ed to soil its pages. Reverence of God and res- pect to man govern it always. The rule of the Editor is never to publish a line which he would hesitate to read aloud in the hearing of virtuous and intelligent females. Thus the New World is made an unexceptionable Family Newspaper, and is earnestly recommended to the regard of every friend of a pure literature, as well as of correct morals and the public good.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From Irving's "Sketch Book."

Married Life.

A TALE OF LOVE AND HAPPINESS, DEDICATED TO THE WHOLE BACHELOR TRIBE.

"The treasures of the deep are not so precious,
As are the concealed comforts of man
Lock'd up in woman's love. I scent the air
Of blessing when I come but near the house.
What a delicious breath marriage sends forth—
The violet's not sweeter."

I HAVE often had occasion to remark the fortitude with which women sustain the most overwhelming reverses of fortune. Those disasters which break down the spirit of man, and prostrate him in the dust, seem to call forth all the energies of the softer sex, and give such intrepidity and elevation to their character that at times it approaches to sublimity. Nothing can be more touching than to behold a soft and tender female, who had been all weakness and dependence, and alive to every trivial roughness while treading the prosperous paths of life, suddenly rising in mental force, to be the comforter of her husband, under misfortunes, and abiding with unshrinking firmness the bitterest blasts of adversity.

As the vine which has long twined its graceful foilage about the oak, and been lifted by it into sunshine, will, when the hardy plant is rifted by the thunderbolt cling round it with caressing tendrils, and bind up its shattered boughs, so it is beautifully ordered by Providence, that woman, who is the mere dependent and ornament of man in his happier hours, should be his stay and solace when smitten with sudden calamity, winding herself into the rugged recesses of his nature, tenderly supporting the drooping head and binding up the broken heart.

I was once congratulating a friend who had around him a blooming family, knit together in the strongest affection. "I can wish you no better lot," said he with enthusiasm, "than to have a wife and children. If you are prosperous, they are to share your prosperity; if otherwise there they are to comfort you." And I observed that a married man falling into misfortune, is more apt to retrieve his situation in the world than a single one, partly because he is more stimulated to exertion by the necessities of the helpless and beloved beings who depend upon him for subsistence, because his spirits are soothed and relieved by domestic endearments, and his self-respect kept alive by finding that though all abroad is darkness and humiliation, yet there is still a little world of love at home, of which he is the monarch; whereas a single man is apt to ruin, to waste; and self-neglect, to fancy himself lonely and abandoned, and his heart to fall and ruin like some deserted mansion, for want of an inhabitant.

These observations call to my mind a little domestic story, of which I was once a witness. My intimate friend, Leslie, had married a beautiful and accomplished lady, who had been brought up in the midst of fashionable life. She had, it is true, no fortune, but that of my friend was ample; and he delighted in the anticipation of indulging her in every elegant pursuit, and administering to those delicate tastes and fancies that spread a kind of witchery about the sex. "Her life," he used to say, "shall be like a fairy tale."

The very difference in their characters produced a harmonious combination. He was of a romantic and somewhat serious cast—she was all life and gladness. I have often noticed that mute rapture with which he would gaze upon her in company of which her powers made her the delight: and how, in midst of applause, her eye would still turn to him, as if there alone she sought favor and acceptance. When leaning on his arm, her slender form contrasted finely with his tall manly person. The fond, confiding air with which she looked up to him seemed to call forth a flush of triumphant pride and cherishing tenderness, as if he doted on his lovely burthen for its very helplessness. Never did a couple set forward on the flowery path of early and well suited marriage with a fairer prospect of happiness.

It was the mishap of my friend, however, to have embarked his fortune in large speculations, and he had not been many months, when by a succession of sudden disasters, it was swept from him, and he found himself reduced almost to penury. For a time he kept his situation to himself, and went about with a haggard countenance and a breaking heart. His life was a protracted agony, and what rendered it more insupportable was the necessity of keeping up a smile in the presence of his wife, for he could not bring himself to overwhelm her with the news. She saw, however, with the quick eye of affection, that all was not well with him. She marked his altered looks and stifled sighs, and was not deceived by his sickly and vapid attempts at cheerfulness. She tasked all her sprightly powers and tender blandishments to win him back to happiness; but she only drove the arrow deeper into his soul. The more he saw cause to love her, the more torturing was the thought that he was soon to make her wretched. A little while, thought he, and the smile will vanish from the cheek—the song will die away from those lips—the lustre of those eyes will be quenched with sorrow; and the happy heart which now beats lightly in that bosom will be weighed down like mine, by the cares and miseries of the world.

At length he came to me one day and related his whole situation in the tone of the deepest despair.—When I had heard him through, I inquired, "Does your wife know all this?" At the question he burst into an agony of tears. "For God's sake!" said he "if you have any pity on me, don't mention my wife; it is the thought of her that drives me almost to madness."

"And why not? she must know it sooner or later," said I. "You cannot keep it long from her, and the intelligence may break upon her in a more startling manner than if imparted by yourself; for the accents of those we love soften the harshest tidings. Besides you are depriving yourself of the comforts of her sympathy, and not merely that, but endangering the only bond that can keep hearts together—an unreserved community of thought and feeling. She will soon perceive that something is secretly praying upon your mind, and true love will brook no reserve; it feels undervalued and outraged, when even the sorrows of those it loves are concealed from it."

"O, my friend, but think what a blow I am to give to all her future prospects—how am I to strike her very soul to the earth by telling her that her husband was a beggar—that she is to forego all the elegancies of life—all the pleasures of society—to shrink with me into indigence and obscurity. To tell her that I have dragged her down from the sphere in which she might have moved in constant brightness—the light of every eye—the admiration of every heart. How can she bear poverty? She has been brought up in all the refinement of opulence. How can she bear neglect? She has been the idol of society. O, it will break her heart!"

I saw grief was eloquent, and I let it have its flow, for it relieves itself by words. When his paroxysm had subsided, and he had subsided into moody silence, I resumed the subject gently, and urged him to break his situation to his wife. He shook his head mournfully, but I positively said—

"But how are you to keep it from her? It is necessary she should know it, that you may take the steps necessary to the alteration of living—nay," observing a pang pass across his countenance, "don't let them afflict you. I am sure you never placed your happiness in outward show—you have yet friends who will not think the worse of you for being less splendidly lodged; and surely it does not require such a place to be happy with Mary."

"I could be happy with her in a hovel," cried he convulsively. "I could go down with her to poverty and the dust—I could—God bless her! God bless her!" cried he, bursting into a transport of grief.

"And believe me my friend," said I, stepping up and grasping him warmly by the hand, "she can be the same with you. Aye, more; it will be a source of pride and triumph to her, and it will call forth all the latent energies and fervent sympathies of her nature, for she will rejoice to prove to you that her love is for you alone. There is in every true woman's heart a spark of heavenly fire, which lies dormant in the broad day light of prosperity, but which kindles up and burns in the dark hour of adversity. No man knows what the wife of his bosom is; no man knows what a ministering angel she is, until he has gone with her through the fiery trials of this world."

There was something in the earnestness of my language, that caught the excited imagination of Leslie. I knew the auditor I had to deal with, and following up the impression I had made, I finished by persuading him to go home and unburden his sad heart.

I must confess, notwithstanding all I had said, I felt a little solicitous for the result. Who can calculate on the fortitude of one whose whole life has been a round of pleasures? Her gay spirit might revolt at the dark, downward path of low humility suddenly pointed out before her, and might cling to the sunny regions in which they had hitherto revelled. Besides, ruin in fashionable life is accompanied by so many galling mortifications, to which, in other ranks it is a stranger. In short, I could not meet Leslie the next morning without trepidation. But he had made the disclosure.

"And how did she bear it?"

"Like an angel. It seemed rather to be a relief to her mind, for she threw her arms around my neck and asked if this was all that had lately made me unhappy. But poor girl, she cannot realize the change we must undergo. She has no idea of poverty but in the abstract; she has only read of it in poetry, where it is allied to love. She feels as yet no privation—she suffers no loss of accustomed convenience nor elegance. When we come particularly to experience its sordid cares, its paltry wants, its petty humiliations, then will be the trial."

"But you have now got over the severest task, that of breaking it to her, the sooner you let the world into the secret the better. The disclosure may be mortifying, but then it is a single misery, and soon over—whereas you otherwise suffer it in anticipation every hour in the day. It is not poverty so much as pretence that harrasses a ruined man—the struggle between a proud mind and an empty purse—the keeping up a hollow show that soon must come to an end. Have the courage to appear poor, and you disarm poverty of its sharpest sting."

On this point I found Leslie perfectly prepared.—He had no false pride himself, and as to his wife, she was only anxious to conform to their now altered fortunes.

Some days after he called upon me in the evening. He had disposed of his dwelling house, and taken a small cottage a few miles from town. He was busied all day in sending out furniture The new establishment required but a few articles of the simplest kind. All the splendid furniture of his late residence had been sold except his wife' spiano. That, he said, was too closely connected with herself—it belonged to the little story of their loves—for some of the sweetest moments of their courtship where those when he leaned over that instrument and listened to the melting tones of her voice. I could not but smile at this instance of romantic gallantry, in a doating husband. He was now going out to the cottage, where his wife had been all day superintending its arrangement. My feelings had become so strongly interested in the progress of this family story, and, as it was a fine evening, I made a proposition to accompany him to his new residence.

He was wearied with the severe fatigues of the day, and as we walked along he fell into a fit of gloomy musing.

"Poor Mary!" at length broke with a heavy sigh from his lips.

"And what of her? Has anything happened to her?"

"What," said he darting an impatient glance at me, "is it nothing to be reduced to this paltry situation—to be caged in a miserable cottage—to be obliged to toil almost in the menial concerns of a wretched habitation?"

"Has she, then, repined at the change?"

"Repined! she has been nothing but sweetness and good humor. Indeed, she seems in better spirits than I have ever know her: she has been to me all love, tenderness, and comfort."

"Admirable girl!" exclaimed I. "You call yourself poor, my friend, you never were so rich—you never knew the boundless treasure of excellence you possessed in that woman."

"Oh, but my friend, if this first meeting at the cottage were over, I think I could be comfortable. She has been introduced into a humble dwelling—she has, for the first time, known the fatigues of being obliged to do domestic employments—she has, for the first time, looked around her on a home destitute of every thing convenient, and may now be sitting down, exhausted and spiritless, brooding over a prospect of future poverty."

There was a degree of probability in this picture that I could not gainsay, so we walked on in silence.

After turning from the main road up a narrow lane so thickly shaded with forest trees as to give it a complete air of seclusion, we came in sight of the cottage. It was humble enough in its appearance for the most pastoral poet; and yet it had a pleasing rural look. A wild vine overrun one end with a profusion of foliage; a few trees threw their branches gracefully over it, and I observed several pots of flowers tastefully disposed about the door, and on the grass plat in front. A small wicket gate opened upon a path that wound through some shrubbery to the door. Just as we approached we heard the sound of music. Leslie grasped my arm. We paused and listened. It was Mary's voice singing, in the style of most touching symplicity, a little air of which her husband was particularly fond.

I felt Leslie's hand tremble on my arm. He stepped forward to hear more distinctly. His steps made a noise on the gravelled walk. A bright beautiful face glanced out at the window and vanished, a light footstep was heard, and Mary came tripping forth to meet us; she was in a pretty rural dress of white.—A few wild flowers were twisted in her fine hair. A fresh bloom was on her cheek. Her whole countenance beamed with smiles. I had never seen her look so lovely.

"My dear George," cried she, "I am so glad to see you, and have been running down the lane, and looking out for you.—I have set out a table under a beautiful tree behind the cottage, and I have been gathering some of the most delicious strawberries, for I know you are fond of them—and we have such excellent cream—and every thing is so sweet and still here—Oh," said she, putting her arm within his, and looking up brightly in his face, "O, we shall be so happy."

Poor Leslie was overcome. He caught her to his bosom—he folded his arms around her: he kissed her again and again; he could not speak, but the tears gushed into his eyes; and he has often assured me that though the world has since gone prosperously with him, and his life has indeed been a happy one, yet never has he experienced a moment of such unutterable felicity.

LAWYERS AND THE IRISHMAN.—While a number of lawyers and gentlemen were dining at Wiscasset, a few years since, a jolly soul from the Emerald Isle appeared and called for a dinner. The landlord told him he should dine when the gentlemen were done. "Let him crowd in among us," whispered a limb of the law, (Albert Smith, we believe,) and we will have some fun with him. The Irishman took his seat at the table.

"You were not born in this country, my friend?" "No sir, I was born in Ireland."

"Is your father living?"

"No sir, he is dead."

"What is your occupation?"

"A horse jockey, sir."

"What was your father's occupation?"

"Trading horses, sir."

"Did your father cheat any one while here?"

"I suppose he did cheat many, sir."

"Where do you suppose he went to?"

"To Heaven, sir."

"And what do you suppose he is doing there?" "Trading horses, sir."

"Has he cheated any one there."

"He cheated one, sir."

"Why did they not prosecute him?"

"Because they searched the whole kingdom of Heaven, and could'nt find a lawyer."

BRITISH EAST INDIA COMPANY.—The British East India Company, through the agency of which Great Britain has obtained her ascendency in India, has existed, in various forms, since the year 1600, and is consequently now 240 years old. Its success to the proprietors has been various—its losses as well as its profits having been enormous. It has now about fifty noble ships, of 1200 and upwards tons burden each, officered, manned, and paid in regular man-of-war style—each ship having 130 individuals engaged on board, in various capacities. The service is regularly organized, much as is that of the British Navy. Nearly one half of the entire British army in India, in all 222,476 men, are in the company's service—the whole maintained, in 1830, at a cost of nearly ten million pounds per annum.

The first charter was exclusive, and for fifteen years, with the right of renewal for a like term, if desired; it granted the privilege of trading to all places beyond the Cape of Good Hope, and the straits of Magellan, excepting those granted to other associations, and such as were already occupied by the subjects of powers at peace with England; also the right of exporting $30,000 in gold and silver each voyage, and English goods free of duty for the four first years, and to re-export India goods in English ships, with an exemption of duty for the whole period of the charter.

The first fleet of the East India Company consisted of four or five vessels, procured and equipped at an expense of nearly £40,000; about £30,000 was taken in bullion, and about £7000 in goods, consisting in cloth, lead, tin, cutlery, glass, quicksilver, &c. The commander was Captain Lancaster; he sailed on the 2d of May, 1601, with letters from the Queen. Although the ardor for foreign commerce was fervent as has been described, still there were not wanting those who strenuously opposed the voyage, as injurious to the best interest of the country.

The fleet went in the first instance to Acheen, in Sumatra, where a treaty was made with its chief. Here they took in a lot of pepper, and having captured a Portuguese vessel on their way to the Moluccas, with a cargo sufficient to lade their vessel, they returned to England in September, 1603, Capt. Lancaster having the satisfaction of knowing he had made a large profit for his owners.

From that time to 1613 eight voyages were made, in which were invested sums varying from 72,000 to £82,000 for each voyage, according to the number being three or four. All these voyages, except one in 1607, when both the vessels were unfortunately lost, turned out exceedingly profitable; the nett profits rarely falling below 100 per cent, and in general exceeding two hundred per cent, on the capital invested in each voyage. The earliest voyages were to Sumatra, Java, Amboyna, and other islands in the Indian Ocean, from which were taken raw silk, indigo, cloves, mace, calicoes, &c. In 1601 they obtained permission to establish factories at Surat and other places by paying 3½ per cent. duty on their merchandize, accompanied by an assurance that their factories should not be injured. A firman of the emperor to that effect was received in 1612; thus was the first English establishment in that extensive kingdom consented to and ratified by its monarch.

LOSS OF THE WHALE SHIP SHYLOCK.—Captain Taber, master of this vessel, arrived at Boston last week, and gives the particulars of her loss. She ran upon the breakers, near the Fejee Islands on the 20th of June, 1840. They succeeded in launching two boats, in which all the crew but seven embarked, and made for one of the Friendly Islands, about 200 miles distant. After three nights and two days of extreme suffering—being without water or provisions—they succeeded in reaching the Islands, where they were kindly received by the natives. Of the seven left on the ship three were drowned while preparing a raft, and the others succeeded in reaching Truth Island, where they remained until rescued by a ship visiting that Island.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

ACROSTIC.

Emblem of the flowers of May,
Death has borne from us away,
Who seemed not meant to go so soon,
A flower of morn, escaped at noon.
Releas'd from earth, he takes his flight,
Distrustful of this world's delight,
Redeem'd by grace, in glory he
Mingles in joys of ecstacy,
Crowned with fadeless beauty now,
Glory decks his lovely brow,
United with the Heavenly throng,
In rapturous lays and holy song,
Receives a harp in his right hand,
Encompass'd with the angelic band.

NO. IV.

NECESSITY AND CERTAINTY.

It has commonly been assumed, that there is a real and an important difference, and, by consequence, an external difference between necessity and certainty: that certainties and necessities belong to two distinct classes of ideas, which have no affinity or connection with each other; and therefore that things may be infallibly certain, which are by no means unavoidably necessary. There may, indeed, be a philological difference in the terms, and a philological difference in their application; but the ideas to which they are respectively applied are cognate, and co-existent, and absolutely inseparable: for although certainty, in strict propriety of speech, is not the same thing as necessity, yet they must always meet in the same object; their coincidence must be uniformly inseparable, and the existence of the one, in any given case, must always imply the existence of the other. We apply the term necessity to any thing which cannot be avoided; and we apply the term certainty to any thing that will infallibly take place: we regard necessity as being applicable to causation, and we regard certainty as being applicable to issue: we say of any thing which is necessary, that it must be; and we say of any thing which is certain, that it will be: we regard the one, as implying something that must of necessity take place, and the other, as implying something that will infallibly transpire. The illusion, in this case, arises entirely from the following inadvertency: when we say that we regard the term necessity as being applied to something that must of consequence take place, and the term certainty as being applied to something that will infallibly transpire, we are apt to forget that we are not distinguishing between two different kinds of objects, but only identifying two different properties of the same thing. Different properties, unless they are incompatable, can never demonstrate the existence of different substances; and we might just as well maintain that the two properties of light and heat in the sun would demonstrate the existence of two unconnected solar orbs, as that the two different properties of certainty and necessity belong to two different classes of events. If certainties and necessities were, in reality, two different and unconnected species of things, it would then be possible to distinguish between the one and the other, by identifying their respective and dissimilar properties; but this, I presumably conceive, is an analytical problem, which no casuist has hitherto had the temerity to undertake.

Necessity in the order of nature must always have the precedence of certainty, just as causation must always take the precedence of issue; because necessity alone is able to produce a certainty: and therefore, in the order of speech, and in force of expression, the term necessary must be always more significant and decisive than the term certain. But I would ask my reader whether he is able to produce any case of absolute certainty, that will not, by consequence, involve an equal necessity. Or whether he is able to produce any case of infallible certainty, that has not been indebted for that infallible certainty, to an infallible and unadvoidable necessity. And I would also ask, if it be possible for the limits of certainty to outstep those of the necessity by which it is produced. And for the issue to exceed the causation from which it proceeded. And whether an effect without a cause, not as gross and palpable contradiction as any thing with which the human understanding can possibly insulted.

According to the old Italian proverb, (che sara, sara) what will be, will be: and it is equally clear, that what will be, must be; because it is impossible for an infallible issue to be separated from an invincible causation. As far as my own observations have extended, I have always found that necessity has given existence to certainty, and that certainty, has been uniformly supported by an equal necessity; for wherever I have been able to predicate the one, I have been always obliged to infer the other. A mathematical certainty, for instance, must always imply a mathematical necessity: and thus it is certain that the whole of any thing is equal to all the parts of which it is composed; and the three angles of an equilateral triangle are equal to two right angles; because it is not possible for the whole of any thing to be unequal to all the parts of which it is composed, or for the three angles of an equilateral triangle to be unequal to two right angles. Again, a physical certainty must always imply a physical necessity; and therefore it is certain that the perfect organization of the human body is conducive to health: because it is not possible that the perfect organization of the human body to be otherwise than conducive to health. In like manner, a moral certainty must always imply a moral necessity; and therefore it is certain that rectitude of principle will always tend to rectitude of conduct; because it is not possible for rectitude of principle to have any other tendency than to rectitude of conduct. Now if certainty and necessity be indeed dissimilar form each other, in their origin, in their nature, and in their properties, it can be no very difficult undertaking to produce examples in proof, and it will be no unreasonable demand to insist upon their actual production. If the reader will only produce a single example in nature or science, or morals, in which it will plainly appear, either that certainty does actually exist, or that even can possibly exist without involving therein an moral necessity, then I pledge my character to him, that I will immediately renounce my hypothesis, as being untenable: but until such a case be discovered, and actually produced, I insist, as a rational man, continue to regard the foregoing argument as being founded in truth.—The separation of certainty and necessity be proceed so obvious and orthodox, as it is generally supposed, there cannot be any very great hardship in being obliged to produce one solitary example in its confirmation: but if I am not greatly mistaken, it would defy the ingenuity of the most expert casuist on Earth, to produce a single example of absolute certainty, that would not involve an equal necessity. It has, I am fully aware, been often asserted, that although neither nature nor science should be able to furnish a single example of certainty, separate from necessity, yet the volume of Divine revelation contains examples without number. In answer to an assertion so obviously the production of ignorance and error, I would only remark, that if the philosophy of the Bible should be found to contradict the philosophy of nature, it would of necessity follow, that the material world and the volume of revelation do not proceed from the same being: and such a concession would contain every thing that infidelity itself could desire; because it would be totally incompatible with the Divine inspiration of the scriptures. It has often been maintained, that the ancient prophets do represent the events which they predict as being the object of an absolute certainty, and as being, at the same time, entirely unconnected with any absolute or fatal necessity. Now this is mere assertion without proof; and I defy the objector to produce a single example that will substantiate the fact. A prophetical certainty must be supported by a prophetical necessity. If the resurrection of the dead, for instance, be a prophetical certainty, it must be supported by a causation amounting to absolute necessity. Hence we read that 'this scripture must needs be fulfilled.' If the necessity be only that of verifying the prediction, the necessity, even in such a case, must be equal to the certainty of the issue.

The truth of the foregoing assertion, must be supported by the production of a case in point: but notwithstanding the boldness and frequency with which it has been repeated, it would, I presume, be found to be no very feasible undertaking, to produce a single example of scripture prophecy that would either literally express, or ligitimately imply, the two opposite propositions in the foregoing assertion. But passing over the fact of the case, for the present, I would only beg leave to remark, that if the Holy Scriptures should be found to contain axioms of faith, that would be at irreconcilable and eternal hostility with scientific fact and common observation, and utterly repugnant to the plainest and strongest dictates of the human understanding, such a discovery would, in my opinion, go a long way towards overturning the authority of the word of God. The Holy Scriptures were written under the inspiration of the eternal spirit of truth and rectitude; they are addressed to the human understanding, as well as to the human conscience, and they are given to us to direct our thinking and acting, and to be the standard of our faith and practice: and therefore it is not possible for the real meaning of the word of God, to be in direct hostility to the native intuitions of the mind. The obvious agreement of scripture doctrine, with the ordinary dictates of the human understanding, constitutes the eternal evidence of their truth, and their primary paramount authority; without which, the most splendid and appalling miracles would be utterly useless and vain. The opinion, therefore, that the ancient prophets do actually represent the events which they predict, as being certain in their issue, without involving a necessary and infallible causation, is nothing less than a gross and palpable contradiction; and those persons who have given such an interpretation to certain passages of the Holy Scriptures, must therefore have quite mistaken the true and real meaning of those parts of the word of God.

It has been always the practice of those persons, whether private individuals or public bodies, whose interpretations of the Scriptures have been at open variance with scientific fact, and the deductions of the human understanding, to support the authority of their interpretations by informing us, that the things which they inculcate are above human reason; and to terrify our consciences by assuring us that to reason upon them would be an act of impiety: and they have maintained that the constructions which they have thought proper to give to such passages of Scripture, are matters of pious and implicit credence, in the reception of which we have no right whatever to employ our own understandings.—Now this is nothing more than a protestant version of the old popish doctrine of the inadequacy of private judgment, in the interpretation of the Holy Scriptures; and which, if carried forward to its ultimate consequences, would eventually produce all the intolerance of papal tyranny. There can never be a compromise between the right and competency of private judgment in the interpretation of the word of God, and the most unlimited intolerance; and therefore the one must ultimately exterminate the other from the christian church. If the right and competency of private judgment be acknowledged, then the human understanding must have some means of testing the truth of the Holy Scriptures, and there must be some acknowledged principles in the human understanding, from whence we derive our competency to decide upon the true and real meaning of the word of God.

It has been a great blessing to the church of Christ, that under all the intolerance which has been exercised therein, and under all the voluntary perversions and impositions of an implicit subjection to that intolerance, a few of those noble spirits have stood forth from age to age, who have dared to dispute the plenitude of human authority; who, in matters of religious belief, would call no man master, and who would always regard with a distrustful shyness, every interpretation of the Scriptures, that would not easily quadrate with the dictates of reason, and the analogy of nature and science: and it is to the decision of such characters that we owe, under God, the blessing of Protestantism, and the light and liberty of the present age. The claims of infallibility are some times preferred, under the most voluntary and specious professions of ignorance, as well as of a pretended christian humility. We not only meet with them in the humble title of servant of servants, but we meet with them in the following namby pamby twaddle: we none of us understand the doctrine, and therefore, we must receive it as a matter of pure revelation; on the bare authority of Divine testimony; alias, you must implicitly believe the interpretation which we have given to it, as a matter of paramount authority; and we charge you, on the peril of your salvation, not to give to these words any other construction than the one which we have given to them; and we charge you not to dispute, nor even to suspect the correctness of the interpretation which we have given to them, or to doubt for a moment their Divine authority.—Such is the padlock that has been usually put upon the mouth of religious inquiry; and such the cause of all the darkness, which has overspread the christian world for ages and generations; and which is not entirely dispersed from the Protestant christian churches of the present day.

If ignorance be made the basis of knowledge and the foundation of the christian faith, there will be nothing too gross to be palmed upon the credulity of the christian world. Human credence may rationally proceed to the utmost limits of abstract possibility, in any case, where a given fact or doctrine is supported by the testimony of God; but it can never outstep the bounds of abstract possibility, in any given fact or doctrine, even though it should pretend to a Divine authority. No man can rationally believe that the properties of Divinity can be communicated, either to an exchange, or to the popish nostrum, the consecrated wafer; neither can any man rationally believe, that any issue which God himself has constituted contingent in re, can be certain to his own anticipation. I have said that any given fact or doctrine, which lies within the range of abstract possibility, would become an object of a rational credence and conviction, if it were supported by the testimony of God. But such a credence could not be rationally demanded of us by any other being. If the Deity were to assure me that I should attain to the longevity of Methuselah, it would be my duty to believe in the veracity of His promise, because I am assured, that such an event is within the reach of possibility; but if all the physicians in the world, were to make affidavits to that effect, they would only be entitled to my ridicule or pity.

My next inquiry will be of possibility and contingency.

JOHN.

"UNION OF SECEDING METHODIST."

Mr. Editor: Such a union would surely be desirable, especially if we allow that "union is strength," but there are other and higher motives to union, viz: a desire to lessen the quantum of human misery, and to increase the quantum of human happiness, to do good of every possible sort, and as far as possible to all men, and the ultimate salvation of the souls of men, should be the great desideratum in christian enterprize. The Fayetteville Luminary and the Wesleyan Methodist, suggest difficulties in the way of a union. I know, that in order to a union of somewhat discordant materials, especially in the United States, embracing a slaveholding and non-slaveholding population, where civil law must govern, there must be a sacrifice of views and opinions, on the part of some, with an eye to the greater possible good. Without this concession or compromise, it would be useless to attempt an association in a country so diversified and peculiarly situated.

The Luminary thinks a union would be desirable, if it could be effected "without a compromise of principle." If it required a compromise of any principle settled in holy writ, the difficulty would be insuperable. But if religious communities would copy the example of the Saviour and his Apostles, who propagated christianity when and where slavery existed to a greater extent; then and in that case, they would not meddle with civil institutions, or make a matter which they have not the power to remedy, a term of communion. I am no slaveholder, nor in an abstract sense, an "apologist of slavery."—I am opposed to slavery, from principle, in any form. I was born in a non-slaveholding State, (Pennsylvania,) but have lived and travelled in slaveholding States for more than 60 years, but never believed it to be the province or duty of the ministers of religion, or religious associations to resist or interfere with civil institutions. The Saviour submitted to taxation, and wrought a miracle, as He said, "lest we should offend them"—"the powers that be." A church government or a religious association, "free from intemperance and arbitrary power," would not interfere with any civil institution in these United States.

Christian enterprize, in order to be useful in seeking and saving that which was lost, must, in a proper sense, become all things to all men. In the South there are multitudes of people who have no slaves, and multitudes of those who hold slaves deplore the evil of slavery. Many of these are pious, and many need the gospel of the grace of God, to save them from perdition. Many of the slaves are pious, and many need religious instruction. An association or organization that would exclude all these from the benefits of the gospel or religious privileges, must be defective. An institution or association which would exclude rigidly, slaveholders from communion, and the privileges of the pulpit, could be of little use in the South, however righteous in the estimation of some. Would it not be better, and more in accordance with the New Testament, to let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind?—To require no impossibilities, or punish or reject men for what they cannot help, or for an evil entailed on them by their forefathers, which they have not the power to cure or remove? Would it not be better for the teachers of religion to say with Paul, servants obey your masters, and masters give to your servants that which is right—and to preach the gospel to both? The Episcopal Methodist were violent on this subject, and contended for what still stands in their book of Discipline, viz: the "extirpation of the evil of slavery"—they but beat the air, created much prejudice, and shut themselves out from usefulness to many. But where are they now? Traffic in human beings is common, and passes unnoticed! We should let our moderation be known to all men; if by all prudent means we may gain some—save our own souls, and them that hear us, whether bond or free.

INFANT BAPTISM.

There is no point of doctrine which our Baptist friends more strenuously insist upon than that of the necesity of baptism; but according to the common belief of the sect, this ordinance is only to be administered to adults. To show that baptism is essential to salvation they argue from the text, except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. John iii. 5. This text is certainly conclusive; baptism is essential for salvation; but in it there is made no exception unless a man. In the word man all are included—all mankind.

A quibbler may say the word man refers to the adult state, as infancy is not expressed by the term. The same argument may apply with reference to the female sex, as the word woman is not expressed in the term. But to show you how comprehensive the signification of the word man here is, I must refer you to the very text from which it is translated; and notwithstanding the antipathy our Baptist friends have expressed to modern appeals to the original text, I think they will derive not a small share of satisfaction by opening a Greek Lexicon and finding in it the meaning of the word, tis the very word in the text above quoted from which the word man is translated. They will there learn from it the following meaning, a, an; a certain one, somebody, any one, a certain thing, any person whatever, every one. This then settles the question. If the word were translated by any one, every one, or a person, it would convey the exact sense of the original, though not better than the word man, for it being here used as a generic term relates to all mankind. Baptism is therefore enjoined on all, of whatever age, for it is evident our Saviour made no exception.

The next objection to the baptism of infants is that they cannot possess the requisite disposition to fit them for the ordinance, namely faith and repentance. In support of this we find them laboring hard to show that faith and repentance must necessarily precede baptism. With regard to adults we agree and prove the doctrine from the same text that they quote, the chief of which are he that believeth and is baptised shall be saved and he that believeth not shall be damned, (I quote their own version,) Mark xvii. 16. Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish, Acts xvii, 30. If then you cannot find in children the disposition necessary for baptism, how shall they be disposed for salvation, because we find by the above text the same disposition necessary both for baptism and for salvation.

By these texts it appears that faith and repentance are necessary for baptism. Children are capable of neither. Therefore, say you, they cannot be baptised; but the same conditions, by the same text, are requisite for salvation. Therefore by your own rule, they cannot be saved.—These texts therefore prove you nothing and leave as much to be inferred in favor of infant baptism as against it. Wherefore the text unless a man be baptised, &c., remains an insurmountable argument in favor of the baptism of all, of all ages and sexes. You will perhaps say there is neither an express command nor an example in the New Testament authorizing infant baptism. I admit that the subject is not pointedly expressed so neither is it forbidden; but the command is fully implied by the words I have quoted "unless a man be baptised," &c. And the practise of it can be well inferred from the fact of the apostles baptising the household of Lydia, of Cornelius, of the Jailor, of Stephanas, and others, whereof there is no account, given of the children being excepted.

But what is far from being the least powerful argument in favor of infant baptism, is the universal practice of it by all christendom, in all ages and in all nations from the days of the apostles to the present time. So universal has ever been the belief that it was of apostolic origin that no one pretended until modern times to controvert it. Peter de Bruis, a Frenchman of the 12th century was the first to form a distinct creed on this subject; but his motive for rejecting infant baptism was the opinion that children could not be saved under any circumstances, and that therefore baptism was unless. He was the author of the principles held by a small party of the Waldensees.—After him the Anabaptist rose in Germany in the sixteenth century. When therefore a custom has been so universally extended over the world to different nations who received their faith and ordinances at the same time from the apostles themselves: When it had not an opponent for eleven hundred years: When it was tacitly acknowledged in every country to be of apostolic origin: When we can find no account in history of its introduction:—And when all mankind are silent as to such an innovation:—Then in reason and in duty are we bound to believe it of apostolic origin and to receive it as such.

I will now put the question to any one who may be disposed to take it up. When? Where?—And by whom, was infant baptism first induced into the church? If this cannot be shown and proved by authentic historical records, you are bound in conscience before Almighty God to ascribe it to Jesus Christ and his apostles. In a late work on infant baptism, by Mr. Kurts, it is satisfactorily shown that, on the reception of Jewish proselytes, under the Mosaic dispensation, it was customary to baptise, as well as circumcise, the children, as well as adults, of such proselytes. The custom having therefore prevailed at the time our Saviour was on earth, why did not he and the apostles forbid it, if it was not their wish that it should be perpetuated.

REFORM.

Br. Springer: We, as a religious community, have gone under the denomination of Reformers, and I have been seriously and closely examining, in order to know whether or not we deserve the name. It is true, we have reformed in the principles of church government, and have adopted principles so consistent with the laws of nature, with reason and the word of God, that the hierarchy of the Methodist E. Church, are afraid to controvert the point with us, any longer, either verbally or through the press. Now, I ask, will this degree of reform, give us an entrance into the kingdom of glory? No verily. I know it is an unthankful, and unpopular task, to point out wherein we come short, and but little attention will be paid to it, especially by those who need reforming most, but whether they will hear or not, we are bound to clear our skirts, by reproving, admonishing and urging to all good works.

I will, therefore, in the first place, compare our devotional exercises with primitive times,—and Oh! that male and female may look to it, and profit by it. 1st. Are we in general, as attentively and fervently, engaged in secret prayer, as the primitive Methodists were? In my remembrance, old and young, would be missing, from their ordinary concerns, at least every evening, and many of them at morning, and noon; like one in olden time, they said, "Three times a day, we will cry unto the Lord," &c. Now is this the practice of our brethren? Do we, really esteem it a high and honorable privilege, to approach the high and holy One who invites us to ask and it shall be given, &c? Even the gift of the holy spirit to lead us into all truth, and to sanctify, to comfort, and unite us together in the bonds of peace and love. Without this we cannot cheerfully attend to any other religious duties, and we have no promise of it unless we ask for it; without it we cannot be reformers, and are destitute, not only of ability, but, also of a desire to take part in reforming others, and of course are something like Dr. Young's baptised infidels, made the "worse for mending, washed to fouler stains." But thank God we are not all in this condition. Let those who are, awake and zealously attend to this high and important privilege, and they will soon experience that worship is not a hard task, and other holy duties will not be a burthen. They will find time to attend to their prayer meetings, class meetings, preaching, and they will not be willing to to put off going to a quarterly meeting until Sunday morning, and start home again on Sunday evening. And serious attention to these privileges, will so fire the soul that they will feel willing to attend a protracted meeting, and will take some active part in it, and thereby help the preachers to save immortal souls from death and hell. I recollect well, when a boy, that the Methodists would go from fifteen to forty miles to a quarterly meeting. But now some will stay at home and receive visits, and pay visits on the Sabbath, within three miles of a quarterly meeting. If it were not that we have some living members in all our classes; if it were not for this my soul would faint, but my heart is frequeutly cheered, from what I see and hear. And if all would arise united in the strength of Jesus, we should be justly entitled to the appellation of Reformers.

2d. We complained while in the old church of the contemptous treatment old ministers had to suffer from the young preachers, (this was not the case thirty years ago.) We need reform in this. We had some young men, in the ministry, and I fear, we have some yet, who do not pay that respect to age which the good book teaches. Oh! that God would bless them, with humility of soul, without which they are not worthy of the office; they are impostors, for a proud minister, a pompous, self-conceited, self-willed minister sent of God, is not to be found on earth, and if not sent of God he is an imposter.

My dear brethren, let us be Reformers inside and outside; in the pulpit, and out of the pulpit, in the meeting-house and out of it, at home and abroad, and then we shall be able to do more than we have done in the Reformation of the world.

A. MCGUIRE.

For the Western Recorder.

Of all the vices with which human society is infested, there is none, perhaps, which prevails to such an alarming extent as the one intemperance. It effects in a greater or less degree, all orders and ranks of society. It enters the habitation of the high and the low, the rich and the poor, male and female, and feeds with impunity upon our moral and physical beings. It is courted in our halls of legislation, and courts of justice. The physician, who should best know its deadly properties, too frequently resigns himself to its mad control. Go to our prisons and poor houses, and inquire of those miserable and degraded inmates, what brought them into their state of wretchedness and degredation, they will answer intemperance. Enter the habitation whose dilapidated appearance and shattered furniture, proclaim it the abode of wretchedness,—ask the unhappy female, who has surrendered all that was once lovely and engaging, ask her the cause of her anguish, she will tell you, with a tear tracing her once lovely, but now palid cheek, that the man whose vows of constancy and protection are registered with God, has, regardless of heaven's frown and the ties of nature, which should bind him to her he swore to love, become a drunkard; her fond anticipations of happiness in life are blasted, her home has become the receptacle of the bloated debauchee, and abusive husband. God of heaven, must these these things be! oh, the depravity of the human heart. Are these things tolerated in a religious community? They are. The image of God's abounding mercy has reared his citadel, within our midst, from which he continues to issue the elements of destruction, producing, devastation, ruin and death. The hydra with pestilential breath, regardless of his own soul and those of the community, seeks every opportunity to vend his weapon of death, that he may satiate his grasp after the pleasures of life. It is high time the moral and religous energies of this community were aroused. It is time for us to pause and reflect upon the state of moral degredation to which we are rapidly hastening. It is time, if we have any regard for the rising generation, to throw around them that protection, without which, in time to come, our heretofore peaceful village will resound with noonday profanity and midnight revelling.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Dear Br: Our prospects on this circuit are some better than when I last addressed you. We have received some additions.

MOSES SCOTT.

Athens, O., June 3, 1841.

FARMINGTON, O., JUNE 2, 1841.

Dear Br. Springer: Not having said any thing through the columns of our very excellent periodical in relation to our success, or prospects of success on this new circuit, since my appointment to it, I deem it my duty to say, through the blessing of God, we are yet alive, and our cause lives. And judging from its healthful appearance at present, I feel justified in saying notwithstanding the recent celebration of its birth here, its sepulchral rites, if performed at all, will be performed at a time far remote. Our progress is slow but certain, like ancient Israel through the wilderness, occupying every inch of the disputed territory by the point of the sword, until God's faithful promise originally made to Abraham was fulfilled. We have to contend for all the spiritual blessings we enjoy. But "our weapons are not carnal but spiritual, and mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds."

We have in this place, (in connection with our right to occupy the church in common with our old-side brethren,) a very spiritual society, numbering twenty-two members; two of whom gave us their names at our last quarterly meeting, which was held on Satuday and Sunday last. At this meeting we were favored with the labors of Brs. Heath, Earl, Chapman, and Bayrd, who spake as though sent of God, and assisted by the Holy Spirit. Their labors have left a very favorable impression upon the public mind in relation to our cause.

In Bazzetta, where at the time of the sitting of the last Annual Conference, we had but five members, we now have 19. Our increase was effected at our second quarterly meeting, at which time the spirit of God was poured out without measure upon the entire christian community, causing every heart to "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." For this outpouring was not confined to our little society, but Presbyterians, Episcopal Methodists, Close Communion and Free-will Baptists, were alike engaged, united and blest in this gracious work of the Lord. And, as is ever the case, when this union and faithfulness exists, sinners in Zion were afraid, and began to inquire "What must I do to be saved?" The cry to God for deliverance was mighty, and blessed be His name, the deliverance came. They received the "oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." "The new song was put into their mouths." Thus the ancient promises of God were verified, "Those who wait upon the Lord renew their strength," &c. And again, "When Zion travails she shall bring forth."

Such are our circumstances at present, and such they have been since our appointment to this circuit, that we have not been able to extend our labors as we should have done under other circumstances. Not having a horse, nor the means wherewith to purchase one, we have tried our Saviour's plan of borrowing when we ride, and walking when a horse was not to be had, therefore, we have been circumscribed in our work. The field is large, the harvest is ripe, the laborers are few. We have done the very best we could thus far, and we look to God in whose hand is the king's heart for success.

JAS. M. PIPER.

A DOG WORTH HAVING,—The Baltimore Sun states that Mr. Knight, while passing along the street the other day, accidently dropped his pocket book, containing fifty dollars. When he had proceeded some distance he discovered his loss, and was about retracing his steps to search for the book, when he met his dog running up to him with the pocket book in his mouth. The only reward the sagacious animal demanded was a caress from his master.

The total population of this country, returned by the late census, is 17,100,575. The Federal population will probably exceed 16,000,000. If the ratio of representation in the next Congress should be fixed at 60,900, the House will contain over 260 members. The ratio is now 47,700. It cannot with any propriety be fixed at less than 60,000, which will give Ohio 25 members.

The desire to live without labor and in luxury, is one of our greatest sins; it fills our courts, the jails, and poor houses: it demoralizes our youth, and brings the aged with sorrow to the grave.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... JUNE 23, 1841.

The President.—Several times through life individuals, from around us, have suddenly and mysteriously disappeared, leaving not a single trace to the avenue, by which they took their departure. When such occurrences transpire they always produce the highest kind of excitement. We have frequently noticed the tendency of human nature, under such circumstances, to fabrication and falsehood in order to gratify the public appetite. Tales will be invented, and recited in order to gain listeners and to accommodate the public desire.

The disappearance of the steam-ship President is of the class of events above alluded to. Her unknown destiny has aroused public curiosity to the highest pitch. Every thing is fixed on with anxiety which might give some clue to her fate, and of course tales are being fabricated to accommodate this feeling. Take the following, from the New Bedford Mercury, as a specimen:

"The President.—A wine bottle which had drifted ashore on the Horse Neck beach, at the mouth of Buzzard's bay, was picked up on Saturday last, by Mr. John Devoll, of Westport, and was found to contain a slip torn from the side margin of a newspaper, upon which the following memorandum was penciled:

"Steam-ship President, sole survivor
the Steward—in a small boat,
Save me—20th May."

"The fragment of paper upon which this is written, is a strip about six inches long and one inch wide, and judging from the typography, which is scantily indented upon both sides of one of the edges, as also from its corresponding texture, it appears to have been torn from the Philadelphia Gazette and Com'l. Intelligencer, altho' we cannot identify it in this respect with certainty. We state what has thus come to our knowledge, leaving it to others who are interested, to form their own conclusions, for ourselves we are strongly inclined to believe it to be an imposure; however, difficult it must be to conceive of the motive which could thus induce any individual wantonly to trifle with the sympathies of hundreds who are anxiously interested in the fate of the unfortunate passengers and crew who were embarked in the President. The President it will be recollected sailed from New York on the 11th of March."

We disagree with the article, above, that this fabrication was designed "wantonly" to sport with the "sympathies" of the afflicted and bereaved; we think it rather designed to gratify their excited desires, than otherwise.

From the Mt. Pleasant (Pa.,) Register.

At Home.—Having returned to our home, and resumed the editorial chair, some further notice of our visit to the Buckeye State will probably be expected by our readers.

From Bellville, where our last epistle was indited, we journeyed through a part of Monroe and Morgan counties, to Zanesville, and thence by Cambridge, St. Clairsville, Mount Pleasant, and several minor towns and villages, to Wheeling, and thence home by the National road.

The staple of Monroe, and some other comparatively new counties in Ohio, is Tobacco. This weed can only be raised hereabouts in new ground. Hence, as soon as a tract of land, originally covered with timber, is partially cleared, two or three successive crops of tobacco are grown, and the strength of the soil is pretty well exhausted. After this they raise whatever they can, but do not pay much, if any, attention to restoring the exhausted soil by lime or other manure.

The face of the country, for many miles south of the National Road, and east of the Muskingum river, is too hilly for comfortable farming. We incline to believe, from a hasty survey, that the soil generally is not very deep nor productive. In the vicinity of Zanesville, however, the farms are well cultivated and tastefully improved, while many of the buildings are truly elegant.

Zanesville is a beautiful place—and though a town only, has every appearance of a city. It contains many princely mansions, with the general appearance of prosperity, and is no doubt the depot of immense quantities of produce from the fertile region by which it is surrounded. Some very large Flouring Mills are driven by the waters of the Muskingum at this place.

If we mistake not, the Eastern part of Ohio now presents the same aspect, in regard to emigration, that Eastern Pennsylvania did twenty-five years ago—Then our enterprizing young people, married and single, besides many seniors, "moved" off to Ohio, to seek more land than they could hope to purchase at home, so that their families might be settled around them. Now, these are in turn the heads of large families—and their children, instead of settling down beside their parents are many of them emigrating to Iowa, Wisconsin, &c. Thus ever-changing and unsettled are the dispositions of the American people. Perhaps it is all for the best.

Near to Morristown, O., while travelling in the evening, to avoid the heat and dust, we passed a colony of Mormonites, encamped in the woods, with their tents, fires, &c., in ample order. These infatuated creatures were bound for "Nauvoo," the land of Promise of Joe Smith and Sidney Rigdon, in Illinois. They seem now to be well furnished, and to be prosecuting their long journey in good spirits. It will be well if their leaders do not swindle them out of property, reputation and comfort, before they are aware of the gross imposition practized upon them.

At Mount Pleasant we visited the Silk Manufactory of Mr. Gill, which appears to be in a very thriving condition. Of this more hereafter. Our time and room are at present exhausted.

What our brother editor says about the hilly character of the country he visited is correct.—But in regard to the productiveness of the soil he is assuredly mistaken. We doubt, for instance, whether there be a more productive county in the State, (and we are well acquainted with Ohio,) than Muskingum. He, however, falls into the general error of travellers, who judge of the quality of the soil from its color. The black earth is that which is generally esteemed to be the richest. But he will permit us to inform him that all black lands are poor lands, and the blacker the worse. It may be said of these soils as the Indian said to the painted lady. He walked up and touching her on the cheek, said, "d—— lie, madam."—If our friend had visited our "Meadow Farm," we think we could have showed him some situations which would no doubt have suited his taste.

From the Saturday Courier.

Last Glimpse of the President.—The packet ship Orpheus, Capt. Cole, which sailed from New York on the 11th of March, in company with the ill-fated President, arrived last week from Liverpool. Capt. Cole had the last glimpse of the steamer on the morning of the 12th of March, the day before the most terrific gale that ever blew on our coast. Nothing has been heard or seen of her since that morning, unless the wreck seen by Captain Bowman was her.

Many and many a person will remember that dreadful gale which raged for two days, the 13th and 14th of March, strewing the broad Atlantic for miles, with spars, masts, hulls, and wrecks of all kinds. Capt. Cole said he never experienced such another. So strong did the wind blow, that it took the sails, furled tightly on the yards of the Oxford, completely off, and tore them into rags. And Captain Comstock, of the steamer Massachusetts, who was in Long Island Sound on the first night, reports that he never passed through such a night. That how he and all his passengers were saved was a miracle. Several of the passengers say that they are indebted to the skill and coolness of the Captain for their lives.

We give these facts to show the severity of the gale the President, with her heavy, bulky machinery had to encounter when only two days out. Capt. Cole thinks she went down that night with all on board!

One of our correspondents has touched his lyre, and produced what follows, upon this touching and heart-rendering event:

SHE WAS NEVER HEARD OF MORE.

LINES ON THE LOSS OF THE PRESIDENT.

Her mighty sails the breezes swell,
And fast she leaves the less'ning land:
And from the shore the last farewell
Is waved by many a snowy hand;
And weeping eyes are on the main,
Until its verge she wanders o'er:
But from the hour of parting pain,
The ship was never heard of more.

In her was many a mother's joy,
And love of many a weeping fair,
To her were wafted in its sigh,
The lonely heart's unceasing prayer.
And, oh the thousand hopes untold,
Of ardent youth the vessel bore:
Say were they quenched in waters cold?
For she was never heard of more.

When on her wide and trackless path,
Of desolation doomed to flee,
Say, sank she 'midst the being wrath
Of racking winds and rolling sea?
Or where the land but mocks the eye
When drifting on a fatal shore?
Vain guesses all—but her destiny
Is dark—she nev'r was heard of more.

The moon has three times changed her form,
From glowing orb to cresent wan,
'Midst skies of calm and clouds of storm,
Since from her port that ship has gone.
But Neptune keeps his secret well,
And though we know that all is o'er,
No eye hath seen—no tongue can tell
How sank that wreck for evermore.

A Story of Pirates.—The New Orleans Bulletin, of the 5th, says:

"Our community were quite horrified yesterday, by a narrative about pirates, which figured largely in one of the city prints. The impression might have been greater, but for the incredulity created by the extraordinary character of the circumstances related. It seems that somewhere on our sea coast, the United States revenue cutter has captured a small craft with a crew of seven men and a quantity of fire arms and weapons on board. The prisoners are charged with being pirates, from the fact that they were armed and carried a corsair's signal. The idea is dreadful; but we rather think that the crew of ferocious rovers, will turn to be a party of our citizens, who have gone out on a fishing excursion, in a frolic, carrying guns and other weapons, as is customary on such expeditions, and perhaps out of fun hoisting the pirate's flag. Such seems to be the public impression on the subject."

Missionaries.—In the whale ship Wm. Penn arrived at Falmouth on Friday the 28th, from the Pacific ocean, came passenengers, Rev. Reuben Tinker missionary at the Sandwich Islands, wife and six children; Luther A. Gulick, son of Rev. Mr. Gulick, missionary, now at the Sandwich Islands. Among the children above stated is a blooming daughter of Mrs. Tinker, whose enumeration among the passengers only commenced after leaving the Sandwich Islands.

Boston.—Great improvements are being made, says the Boston Traveller, in all parts of Boston. New houses are going up in all directions; and if Boston continues to grow in population, wealth and business, as it has for some time past, it will outstrip in greatness the anticipations of all its inhabitants and friends.

The Lardrone Island—England and China.—The New York Courier has an article in reference to China and England, the purport of which is the importance of the absolute cession by China to England of a capacious seaport within her dominions and its natural consequence, the establishment on the confines of China of an Anglo-Saxon Colony, rife with industry and enterprise, which before could scarcely be considered as belonging to the great family of nations,—but which contains a population more numereus than any—the arts and commodities of life, taken from them in return, the superfluous products of their bee-like labor, and thus promising to enlarge the circle of commercial exchanges in a degree, of which we can scarcely trust ourselves to imagine the extent. It is anticipated that this Ladrone Island will in a few years be studded with habitations, factories and warehouses, containing a population made up of people of all commercial nations, the Chinese themselves performing the laborious occupation, and some perhaps engaged in trade; her ports will be filled with flags of various people, and our stars and stripes not shining the least conspicuous among them all.

Important to Bankers and Brokers. An action of some importance was decided a day or two ago, before the Superior Court of New York. Mr. William Fitch, a broker, instituted a suit against Mr. Benjamin K. Hobart, a porter in the Phœnix Bank, under these circumstances: A trunk containing $500 in silver was deposited by a clerk of the plaintiff, in the bank, with orders to the porter not to deliver it except to himself or order. That some days subsequent he called for the trunk, but it could not be found, nor has anything been since heard of it. After a patient examination of the case, the jury, under the charge of the Court, rendered a verdict for the defendant.

The Drought in Delaware.—The Wilmington Journal says: "We are informed that about Cantwell's Bridge and in the direction of that place, the earth is literally parched for want of rain—vegetation has made very little advancement, and the farmers are almost in despondency. While the upper part of New Castle county has been visited by refreshing rains, and the face of the earth become clothed with the richest verdure, other parts of our State are suffering from distressing drought, not having been visited by a beneficial shower since the first day of May last.

A Fatal Duel at New Orleans.—We learn from the New Bee, that a duel was fought on the 2d inst., at Mandeville, between Messrs. Samuel Wright and S. W. Oakey, merchants of that city. The hostile meeting grew out of certain articles in the Vicksburg Sentinel, abusive of Mr. Oakey, and of which Mr. Wright was the reputed author. The combatants fought with rifles. The first shot proved ineffectual. At the second, Mr. Wright fell, having received his adversary's ball in the side. He lived scarcely a minute.

The only penalty for usury in Maine, is that the excess of interest over 6 per cent. may be recovered back in a suit at law with costs. A table is going the rounds of the papers which erroneously represent that usury in that State renders the whole debt forfeit. That State acts upon the idea, that money should be, like merchandise, free to sell for the highest price, or the lowest, at which the condition of the market would sell it. Thousands in this country advocate that principle as being the very best for the poor man, who is ever the borrower.

The Case of Dr. Eldridge.—In this case the Judges heard the arguments on both sides on Saturday, and agreed to release the Doctor provided he would enter into a recognizance of $1000 in his own name. He refused his discharge on these terms, and was conveyed back to Moyamensing. He also demanded the return of the money that had been taken from him. Subsequently, however, at the desire of his friends, he gave the required bail, and was discharged.

The Crops.—Rye in this and the adjacent States looks remarkably well this season. So do the wheat and other crops generally, and let us be thankful to an ever-bountiful Providence, that notwithstanding the "lateness of the season," about which we heard so frequently, there is now every prospect of one of the most abundant general harvests, which our country was ever blest with. The season now is truly delightful.—Phil. Cour.

A Hint to Good Housewives—Washing Salads.—To free salads from the larvæ of insects and worms, they should first be placed in salt water for a few minutes, to kill and bring out the worms, then washed with fresh water in the usual way. This is an invaluable suggestion, as all salads are subjected to insects, some of them inconceivably small, and some of them not very delicious either.

The Crops in Chester, Del.—The Village Record says:—"We have consulted our agricultural friends, and looked upon their farms, and they concur in the promise of luxuriant grass and grain crops, should the season continue favorable. The clover fields are blooming and fragrant; they look rich and pleasing, and so do the farmers. From other sections of the country, the accounts are equally favorable, giving reason to believe this will be a year of national plenty."

Interesting Astronomical Discovery It would appear from the following interesting paragraph from a German paper on the distance of the fixed stars, that unless the German philosopher has missed a figure or two in his calculation, a most important problem has been solved:

"M. Bessel, a German astronomer, has made one of the greatest discoveries of modern times, by having ascertained the parallax of the double star 61 Cygni. He found, from repeated observations made from August, 1837, to March, 1840, that the parallax of a Cygni did not exceed thirty-one hundreths of a second, which places the distance of that star from us at nearly 670,000 times that of the sun, or which is nearly sixty-four millions of miles or, more nearly, 63,650,000,000,000 miles. This immense distance can better be conceived when we state, that if a cannon ball were to traverse this vast space at the rate of twenty miles a minute, it would occupy more than six millions of years in coming from that star to our earth; and if a body could be projected from our earth to 61 Cygni, at thirty miles an hour, which is about the same rate as the carriages on rail-roads travel, it would occupy at least ninety-six millions of years. Light, which travels more than eleven millions of miles in a minute, would occupy about twelve years in coming from that star to our earth."

Mrs. Jarvis, vs. Rev. S. F. Jarvis. Every body remembers the particulars of this case, which created so much discussion in the Connecticut Legislature some two years since, on the application of the lady for a divorce. Being unsuccessful at Hartford, Mrs. J. has since resided in Brooklyn, L. I., for the purpose of gaining a residence in the State of New York, to avail herself of its chancery laws relating to divorce and alimony. Tuesday her complaint came before the Vice Chancellor, but was dismissed for want of jurisdiction. His Honor deciding that neither party had been resident in the State long enough to entitle them to a citizenship. Mr. Jarvis is a very wealthy clergyman of Middleton, Connecticut, and his wife is suspected of being a "bit of a shrew."

Murder.—We learn from the Fort Wayne Sentinel, that there are two men in jail at Peru, Miami county, Ia., awaiting their trial for murder. The prisoners consist of a father and an intended son-in-law. The difficulty which caused the murder is said to have originated from an engagement of marriage between the daughter of the father and the person murdered; which had been broken up by the family. The daughter was subsequently engaged to be married to the person alluded to, which caused the difficulty, and cost the original lover his life.

Highway Robbery.—Mr. Jackson Long, from Lewis county, Mo., recently, while on his way to Platte county, about three miles east of Richmond, was attacked by two foot pads, first taking his horse by the bridle and demanding his money, and on his refusal to give it up they shot him through the neck with a pistol, which dismounted him. The robbers only succeeded in getting a pocket book with a small amount of money. Mr. Long escaped to a neighboring house and bids fair to recover. The robbers were pursued, taken, recognized by the wounded man, and sent to prison.

By a statement in the Nantucket Enquirer, we see that during the month of May, there arrived in the ports of the United States thirty four whalers, bringing oil to the value of a million and a half of dollars. The imports have been 1,041,862 gallons sperm, and 880,740 gallons "right whale" oil. The quantity of sperm being larger than whale is a very unusual circumstance. The whale ship Science, arrived at Portland on the 4th inst., having on board 90,000 gallons whale oil, 10,000 gallons sperm oil, and 22,000 pounds bone. She has been absent about two years and a half.

It is recorded on the monument erected in one of the churches of Newburyport, Mass., by the late Mr. Bartlett, to the memory of Rev. George Whitfield, that during the thirty-four years he was engaged in the ministry, he preached no less than 18,000 sermons, averaging between nine and ten every week during the whole time. During the same period he crossed the Atlantic 13 times, which was not, at that time, as at present, an undertaking of only two or three weeks, but of double or triple that number of months! Whitfield was instrumental of as much good as any man of any age. Oh that we had more Whitfields!

Lead at St. Louis.—By the accounts of several of the wholesale houses in St. Louis, engaged in the lead trade, it appears they had received in the months of April and May 78,000 pigs lead, the pigs averaging from 65 to 70 pounds each, making about 12,104,999 pounds, which at 3½ cents per pound, (the average price in that market,) give an aggregate of $423,640 as the value of the lead.

Calamitous Fire.—On Thursday afternoon, at shortly after 3 o'clock, fire broke out in a block of wooden buildings in Stanton street, near Pitt. Six were burned on Stanton street, four on Pitt, and three in the rear. They were mostly occupied by poor German families, who have lost nearly their all. It was rumored that a child perished in the flames.—N. Y. paper.

Congress—Extra Session.

From the Philadelphia Daily Chronicle.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE TWENTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS.

Washington, June 10, 1841.

In Senate.—Mr. Buchanan presented a memorial praying for a duty upon imported silks.

The Public Lands.—Mr. Clay, according to notice, asked leave to present a bill providing for the distribution of the proceeds of the Public Lands.

The Case of McLeod.—Mr. Buchanan, in proposing to refer that part of the President's Message that related to Foreign Affairs, to the committee which has the charge of them, entered at length upon an examination of the facts relating to the conflagration and capture of the steamboat Caroline, as well as upon the history of the Patriot War in general. Mr. Buchanan then showed from Chief Justice Marshall, and other authorities, that a nation had exclusive right of control over its own waters, and he added that, however justifiable an officer in time of war might be for executing orders of invasion, or violation of a neutral territory, yet in time of peace, he contended, if it were done, the people whose territory had been thus violated, had a right to hold the officer responsible in their courts.

Mr. B. did not agree with Mr. Webster in his construction of the law of nations, and he set forth the points of his disagreement at length. He believed also that the Supreme Court of New York would take a view different from that of Mr. Webster, and if an appeal should be taken he doubted whether the views of the Secretary of State would be sustained.

Mr. Buchanan did not think our condition so very alarming in the event of a war. We were not among the weak nations of the earth, he said, and no other nation could attack us without suffering as much from war as we should. He did not, however, deem that there was any risk of war, but on the event of its coming, he wished the law of nations to be so construed, as to put us right in the eyes of the world.

Mr. Rives gave credit to the sincerity with which the Senator of Pennsylvania had, at the outset, disclaimed any intention to give a party character to his remarks. But the failure to carry out his intentions, proved that he was correct in another of his assertions—that he was a party man. The views which he had taken of the subject were exclusively one sided. He cordially concurred in what had been said as to the attempt on the Caroline, but he maintained that the wrong was a national wrong, which ought not to be revenged upon an individual, but for the redress of which we should look to the great power which ordered it.

The answer which had been made to the demand for the release of McLeod, he thought, was in the spirit of American feeling. We had the power to wreak our vengeance upon an individual, we scorned to do it, when a great nation had justified her act for which we choose to hold the strongest power responsible while we let the weakest go. That this was a proper construction of the laws of nations, he had no doubt, and he quoted Vattel as authority in the case.

Regarding this as a military expedition, he contended that officers employed in it were mere instruments of their government, unconscious and irresponsible instruments, as much so as the guns and swords in use. He alluded to the attack upon Copenhagen in defence of this position. He cited several other European cases to show that such was the understanding of national law throughout the civilized world. He quoted Vattel to show that such enterprises even in time of peace did not change their character, so far as individuals were concerned. Rutherforth held the same ground.

House of Representatives.—Mr. Fillmore offered a resolution referring so much of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury as is not committed to the Select Committee, to the Committee of Ways and Means. The rules were suspended and the motion concurred in.

Mr. Holmes presented a petition from some citizens of Charleston, praying that the salary of the President for one year, be appropriated to the bereaved family of the late President, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Washington, June 11, 1841.

The Case of McLeod.—Mr. Choate, of Mass. having the floor, addressed the Senate upon this subject for nearly two hours. He commended in the strongest language Mr. Webster's letter to Mr. Fox.

Mr. Calhoun replied, and controverted some of the positions of Mr. Choate. He commented severely upon the manner in which the Caroline was burnt, and owned that the Secretary of State had set forth the matter well.

Mr. Huntington then took the floor, and went into an argument on international law in support and defence of the legal positions taken up by Mr. Webster in his correspondence with the British Minister, and in reply to the speech of Mr. Buchanan, who had assailed them.

And then, on motion of Mr. Preston, the Senate adjourned.

House of Representatives.—Last evening, after my abstract was closed, the motion for the previous question having been carried, yeas 113 noes 108.

The main question was put as follows, and decided in the negative, yeas 107, noes 113.

This Day's Business.—The House was opened by the Rev J. W. French with prayer.

Mr. Hunt gave notice that he would introduce a bill to repeal the act of 1837, withholding the fourth instalment of the Surplus Revenue from the States.

Mr. Pendleton rose to present a memorial from certain citizens in Ohio, which Mr. Wise objected to.

The Speaker asked leave to present papers relating to a contested election in Maine, to which Mr. Clifford objected.

Mr. Botts asked for information of the Speaker if all the offices, Sergeant-at-Arms, Door-keepers, &c., would not be void, if the Rules which were now under reconsideration were nullified? Would not the House be thrown back to its situation at the commencement of the session, if this question should be concurred to?

Mr. Wise took the floor in favor of the motion, and stated that he wished the members to see clearly the situation in which they had placed themselves by the recision of the 21st Rule. The cry was around him of "let us proceed to business." He would tell the gentlemen that the subject, (abolition) he was now discussing, was the most important business—the People of the South would yield to a Bank, yield to a Tariff, yield to every thing except this, and no majority could do other business if Abolition petitions were suffered to be presented in this House every Monday to be discussed.

Mr. W. went into a full examination of the subject of Abolition, and the various important questions bearing upon it, defining and illustrating the duties of the State and General Government.

At one o'clock Mr. Wise complained of extreme weakness and sickness, and of being affected by the heat.

Mr. Fillmore moved the postponement of the consideration of the question until to-morrow.—Carried.

The House then went into an election for Printer. Mr. Morgan nominated Gales & Seaton. Mr. McKeon nominated Blair & Rives.—Mr. Gilmer stated that he did not intend to make a nomination, but vote for Peter Force who was a Printer, and was not attached to either a political or religious press.

Whole number of votes,	213
Necessary to a choice,	107
Gales and Seaton,	134
Blair and Rives,	73
Peter Force,	6

Messrs. Gales & Seaton were declared by t
Speaker duly elected.

Washington, June 12, 1841.

Senate.—Several memorials in favor of a Ge eral Bankrupt Law were presented.

The Business of the Senate.—The resolution
Mr. Clay for limiting and designating the bu ness of the session then came up, which M
Benton opposed as an attempt to dictate to t
Senate.

Mr. Calhoun moved to lay the resolution on t
table, and asked for the ayes and nays, when t question being taken, it was decided in the ne ative—ayes 19, nays 27.

After some farther conversation, the resoluti was so modified as to agree to take up the unfi ed business after the morning hour, when t resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Buchanan, the Senate the proceeded to the election of a Chaplain, and t
Rev. Septimus Tuston was declared elected, follows:

For Mr. Tuston, (Presbyterian,)	29 votes
Mr. Danforth,	7
Scattering,	4

House of Representatives.—Mr. Wm. M
Paine, of Alabama, presented his credentials, w qualified and took his seat.

Mr. Goggin moved that the consideration the question under discussion yesterday whe
Mr. Wise became unwell, be postponed unt
Monday. Concurred in.

Mr. Graham asked leave to introduce a bill t repeal the Sub-Treasury Act, and other purpos which was not granted. He then moved t suspend the rules and asked the ayes and nays.

Mr. Pickens asked if there was not a bill re ported from the Senate, having the same obje in view entertained by the gentleman from Nor Carolina.

The yeas and noes were ordered, and it a peared that there were in the affirmative 56, an in the negative 132.

Several petitions were presented from vario
States praying for the establishment of a Natio al Bank.

These petitions were all referred to the Sele
Committee on the Currency.

Mr. Ingersoll presented a petition from certai persons of the city and county of Philadelphi praying for the abolition of Slavery, and an a teration of the Constitution, which, on motio of Mr. Wise, was laid on the table.

Mr. Sergeant presented a petition of the sam nature, which was also laid on the table.

Mr. Fornance offered a memorial showing tha the operation of the present Tariff was oppressiv and moved that it be referred, with instructio to inquire into the expediency of reporting bill increasing the tariff.

On this motion the yeas and nays were de manded.

Before they were taken Mr. Weller moved tha the House adjourn. For the adjournment 8 yeas—nays 104.

The question on Mr. Fornance's motion wit the memorial were laid over for the day.

Mr. Chapman presented certain resolution passed by the Legislature of South Carolin touching the controversy between the State Georgia and Maine. Ordered to lie on the tab and be printed.

Washington, June 14, 1841.

Mr. Wise took the floor, in continuation of h remarks which he commenced on Friday, an which he was obliged to suspend on account indisposition. The gentleman was extremel pale, yet he kept the floor, and continued to en chain the members, by a most powerful constit tional argument until 5 o'clock, when an offer wa made to adjourn, for which he thanked the Hous
but would not permit for his sake. The Hous had been kind in indulging him, and he would er deavor to conclude.

Senate.—Petitions were presented on the sul ject of a National Bank, for it by Mr. Keer, an against it by Mr. Wright.

The resolution offered by Mr. Benton, callin for a schedule of the payments out of the Treasu ry for the last three months, was taken up fo consideration.

Mr. Clay moved to lay the resolution on the ta ble, yeas 22, noes 19.

Mr. Benton gave notice that he should ask th consideration to-morrow.

The unfinished business of Saturday was the taken up and

Mr. Preston resumed the debate, declaring tha he would not have said a word, but for the neces sity of replying to the construction of the inter national law which had fallen from some Sena tors, and which could not be justified by any au thority entitled to any weight. It had been al leged that in Mr. Webster's letter to Mr. Fox there was a defect of tone; 2dly that the con struction of the law of Nations by Mr. Webste was made too hastily; and 3rdly, that the des patch of the Attorney General was unwise. H admitted that Great Britain had in her usual di plomacy, evinced too much hauteur, and on tha account he would have been willing to meet he with equal abruptness. But he was satisfie with the course of the Secretary of State. H asserted that there was no difference in the pub lic opinion as to the tone of this letter, whic was worthy of the high character of its author and calculated to enhance the character of ou diplomacy.

Mr. Benton said he always foretold that Eng land would not relax her hold, and he sat it dow that we should have a war with Great Britain.—
She will keep goading us on, interfering wit our black population, and urging us on to war.—
She calculated on a war of a few years, but if h knew his countrymen she would not find it i so easy to finish the war in a few years. Th American people are brave and will fight and th present administration have nothing to do bu to give up their popularity hunting schemes an put the money into fortifications and cannon an ships.

Washington, June 16, 1841.

Senate.—Mr. Thomas Allen was elected printer.

The discussion of the McLeod case was con tinued.

House.—A long debate was had on the resolu tion offered by Mr. Wise.

An Appalling Case.—The Baltimore Sun states that two brothers named Connelly, were recently brought into the watch house, in a state of melancholly wretchedness. They entreated to be sent any where rather than home, as their father was constantly drunk, and daily displayed the cruelty which drink inspires, in abusing and beating them. They were accordingly sent to the alms house.

Increase of the Mormons.—This sect of visionary fanatics appear to be on the increase. The St. Louis Bulletin says—"Two hundred and thirty-seven Mormons came up in the Moravian, last week, from New Orleans. They are from Westmoreland, Lancaster and Yorkshire, Eng., and are bound for Nauvoo, Ill." Humbug and imposition.

Error Corrected.—The Cincinnati, Ohio, Republican, says that Gov. Carlin has joined the Mormons, is said to be entirely a mistake. Joe Smith and the Governor are not on good terms, and the latter wishes to hand Joe over to the Governor of Missouri, to be dealt with according to law.

THE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... JUNE 23, 1841.

FIRE.—Twenty houses were recently destroyed in New York, by fire, principally wooden buildings, belonged to poor families.

Our readers who are fond of abstract speculations can be gratified by the perusal of our correspondent "John." His essays evince much thinking.

☞The Pittsburg conference of the Episcopal Methodist church, will commence its annual session in Pittsburgh, on the 14th of July next, and the Erie conference on the 28th, in Warren, O.

SENTENCE OF J. F. BRADDEE.—The court, on the 4th inst. overruled the motion for a new trial, and sentenced the prisoner on the first count of the indictment to ten years imprisonment.

☞The Book of Mormon has been republished in England, where the Mormons are said to be more successful than even in this country. The Book is noticed at considerable length by many of the latest journals.

THE WEATHER.—The drought continued with scorching severity until Friday morning last, when we had a very plentiful and refreshing shower of rain, and another equally beneficial to vegetation on Monday morning. These may help the grass and wheat crops some, but they were too far gone to be essentially benefitted thereby.

GRAHAM'S MAGAZINE.—The June number of this deservedly popular periodical has been received, richly embellished with a beautiful mezzotinto on steel, "The Island of the Fay," engraved expressly for this magazine; three figures of fashions, (colored,) and two pages of music.—The contents are varied and interesting, and among the contributors we recognize the names of several of our most distinguished native literati.—PA.

CAUTION.—As Mrs Judge McElheny was returning from quarterly meeting at Asbury Chapel, in Hopewell tp., on Sabbath week past, while her horse was drinking, and of course she had not a perfect command of the bridle, some younsters came dashing up, behind, like a set of Choctaws, and scared the animal, which threw her and broke her leg. This ought to be a caution to such young men as are in the habit of riding to and from church, on the Sabbath, like a set of drunken Indians.

BEE-BREEDING IN THE WEST.—We have received, by the favor of the author, (Thomas Affleck of Cincinnati, Jr. editor of the Western Farmer,") a pamphlet of 70 pages thus entitled. This work contains the most common sense remarks we have seen upon the culture of Bees.—The writer seems to have studied closely their natural history, and his recommendations are in strict accordance therewith. He does not recommend any infallible preventive for the ravages of the moth, yet, if what he says be attended to, it will, no doubt, be the most likely to guard against its distructive power.—Farmers! get the work. It is both instructive and amusing, as well as valuable to the Bee-Culturalist.

HARRIS' DIRECTORY.—In our 38th number we referred to the work here alluded to by the Ohio Statesman:

Mr. Harris, of Pittsburgh, the well known and indefatigable author of the Pittsburgh Directory, Intelligencer, &c., is about publishing a new edition, including cities, and towns in Ohio.—If a reasonable number of subcribers can be obtained in Columbus, a pertinent notice of our city—its institutions, business houses, resources &c., will be included in the work. A prospectus is at this office, and one at the office of Mayor Wood. Let our citizens give a liberal start in the matter. The information connected with Pittsburgh alone, will be worth the price of the work. We are sorry to cut this notice so short. What is done should be done quickly, as the work is now in press.

SMITHFIELD, O., JUNE 12, 1841.

Rev. C. Springer: I hereby inform you that my papers come very irregular—that is, a great many do not come at all. C. Belknap has failed to receive about one-third of his complement, whilst other subscribers receive theirs regularly. Why not mail Belknap's with the package which comes to York? Whose fault is this, yours or "Uncle Sam's boys?" Resp'y, yours, &c.,

JAS. McCOY.

Our papers are not put up by ourself, (for we have not time for it) but by the hands of the office, and it is our wish to have them packed and directed without mistake. An occasional error might happen in our office, but that a general failure should originate with us we cannot think.—However, we shall be glad if all our subscribers who miss their papers would inform us, and we shall do the best in our power to have all difficulties remedied.—We send Belknap's paper to the office forwarded to us with his name. If there is another office which will suit his convenience better, to which he wishes his paper transferred, so soon as he signifies that to us it shall be done.

☞It will be seen by the following article, from the Methodist Protestant, that the editor and his friends have made but little by cousining Dr. T. E. Bond and other editors of the M. E. church. Since the Dr. has given the whole a boring, he finds it to be his duty, all at once, to "be at his post," and to say something about the "ecclesiastical difference" between the two churches. We have noticed the Protestant's flattering allusion to the worthy Dr. and some of them at the time rather palled upon our taste.—On the whole, to use a trite expression, we think the Baltimore editor is rather sucked with his Episcopal friends.

If we have heretofore said little upon the ecclesiastical difference between the Old Church and the New, it has been because we have thought such a course the most prudential under the circumstances. We are now convinced that the time for action has come: and we mean to be at our post. The late unwarranted and unmanly assertions of the Editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal, have rendered indispensable what was before of questionable propriety. Dust has been thrown into the eyes of the people, and it is necessary that the injury should as far as possible be remedied. Our readers may therefore expect that "Dr. Bond" and his misrepresentations, will occupy no inconsiderable portion of our attention for some time to come.

We have recently been looking over a work now out of print, but well worthy of republication, by Dr. S. K. Jennings, of this city. We speak of "Jennings' Exposition." In that work we find the articles originally written upon Reform, for which accusation was brought against the brother in Baltimore. We intend to bring these "senseless ravings" again before the people, with such explanations as may be deemed necessary. We shall, however, wait the prosecution of our design until certain matters shall be terminated that are now in progress. The brethren who have been so slandered by the Advocate are not sleeping. A meeting of the UNION SOCIETY will probably be called, and such measures taken as shall convince the "Senior Editor," that some things can be done as well as others. The public—we speak not of Methodist Protestants alone, or, of those only who read Methodist prints—the public, will hear more of this matter than will be agreeable or creditable to the Doctor, if we are not much mistaken. The times call for it—suffering and slandered innocence calls for it—and their calls shall not be unheard.

THE UNITED STATES BANK.—The officers of the U. S. Bank are still engaged in giving certificates of deposit, bearing six per cent. interest, in exchange for its notes, as well as to such depositors as had funds in the bank at the time of its suspension. About $800.000 have been funded in this way. The effect will be salutary inasmuch as creditors of the Bank, either as note-holders or depositors, will now draw interest.—Bick.

ILLINOIS INTEREST LOAN.—About the 1st of January last the fund commissioner of Illinois hypothecated $300,000 of State bonds, to raise some seventy or eighty thousand dollars to pay interest then falling due. The loan was for 90 days. It is now stated that an extension of this loan has been effected, payable partly in October and partly in February, 1842, on terms more favorable to the State. The loan fell due on the first instant, and a tender of the money was made by the commissioner on the 8th, but the pledged bonds were not forthcoming. A renewal then became necessary, which the commissioner finally consented to, at reduced rates. Even this was effected with much difficulty.—Buffalo Com.

THE NATIONAL THEATRE investigation has closed, and Shiers and Hurd are fully committed for trial. The evidence on which they are committed has already been stated in this paper. The Express says:

Hurd at one time proposed to make disclosures and state all he knew,—but his statements were contradictory, nay, amounted to nothing of moment, though made on his knees, with an appeal to Heaven. After he made them his wife was admitted, and dissuaded him from making any further statements. On Saturday he was brought out and denied all his former statements, saying he was under apprehension and excitement, and did not know what he said.

During the investigation the magistrate received advices that Hurd was not worthy of any belief, and that he was corrupt and viscious in every respect. He had been turned out of employment at the Theatre for the theft he had committed, and it was strongly believed that he had set fire to the business place of a Mr. Brown, some months ago—when in the employ of said Brown. The insurance on Brown's premises was paid, but the insurance company has prosecuted for the recovery back of the money—under the impression that the premises were fired as was supposed by Hurd for spite towards Brown. In the case of Shiers $2,000 bail will be received, but no bail will at present be taken for Hurd.

CROPS.—Accounts from nearly every part of the country are most cheering in their nature; the yield promises to be abundant, and the husbandman will be amply rewarded for his labor.—Phil. Chron.

STEAMER PRESIDENT—OPINION OF CAPT. HOSKINS.—Upon the arrival of the Great Western, Mr. Buchanan, the British Consul, handed to Captain Hoskins the New York Herald, containing the report of the investigation recently held at the office of the British Consulate, relative to the President. After a careful perusal thereof, he gave the following as his opinion as to her fate.

Some of the opinions given in the course of the inquiry, I differ from most distinctly, and those opinions would, no doubt, have a strong, though very erroneous impression on the public mind, if allowed to pass without notice from some one placed in a similar position to me, who, from very many years experience of all description of vessels, sailing and steam, has had an opportunity of forming a good judgment on the subject.

The opinions to which I allude are those of Captain Cole, of the packet ship Orpheus, who, by report, said "that the President then must have been shipping seas heavily and fast; that probably these huge bodies of water worked through the engine room or fire room, and extinguished the fires, in which case the steamer would have been comparatively helpless."

That the President was shipping water there is no doubt, but I do feel a perfect conviction she did not ship sufficient to extinguish the fires. The fire-places are put upon the platform of the fire room, and the platform put upon the bottom of the ship (in the Great Western—the President's I think higher)—the openings to the engine and fire rooms are so small, as to render it quite impossible that a body of water sufficient to overflow the fire-place could find its way below, even with imprudence; but with the necessary precaution, in such weather, of battering the hatches, &c., down, the supposition of such a result is perfectly chimerical. Capt. C's opinion appears (by the report) to have been coincided in by other gentlemen, certainly good sailors; but with every respect for Capt. C. and those gentlemen, I must say they are not competent judges in this steam ship case.

I fully and entirely believe a good steamship the safest vessel that ever went to sea, and there are numerous instances where they have been placed in situations from which no sailing ship, however well managed, could escape. A case in point occurred at Barbadoes, during the last tremendious hurricane in the West Indies. H. M. steamer Spitfire, and many ships were laying in Carlisle Bay—the ships were all lost or stranded; the Spitfire slipt her cables and put to sea, in the face of the hurricane—her decks were swept—her boats and paddle boxes washed away, yet she never had her fires extinguished, but weathered it all by means of the steam power, which alone saved her. If the engines are damaged, still steamships are safe and good sea boats with their sails. I was once, in the Great Western, compelled to stop the engines at a moment, in a heavy gale of wind, which was heaving her on the eastern edge of the bank of Newfoundland. Immediately got storm aft sail on her, and for two hours—the time we were stopt—she lay too beautifully, as snug and as dry as any ship I was ever out in, in similar weather. I do not know the exact proportion of losses between sailing and steamships, but I am quite sure it is very much in favor of steam. I am not called upon, nor do I feel justified, in giving any opinion respecting what may have happened to the President, which, I yet believe, is above water, possibly a log working about at the mercy of the wind and waves, as the Superior, (a vessel belonging to this port) did, some time since, for seventy days, before she reached St. Thomas, and ninety days before she was heard of here. Captain Roberts is a sailor, with energy of character and resources from long experience, which is a strong inducement for hope, that the President will yet be heard of.

The schooner "President," arrived at Castine, Me., on the 4th inst. bringing three of the crew of the Wm. Brown, news of whose disasterous wreck was brought by the Acadia. They were saved in the small boat with Captain Harris, the second mate, one lady passenger, and three other seamen. The men were badly frozen, and one of them will lose both feet. While in the boat, they had but half a biscuit and half a wine glass of water for twenty four hours. They were picked up by a French fisherman on the sixth day, after the ship went down.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the Brother Jonathan.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP GREAT WESTERN.

TWELVE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

No news of the President; Excitement on the Corn Laws; Continued Mercantile dullness.

This vessel arrived at her dock at about 8 o'clock on Thursday evening, having made her passage in a little more than fourteen days. She saw very little ice on her passage, which was a pleasant one, and brings only forty-two passengers.

The dates are Bristol to the 27th, and London to the evening of the 26th.

THE PRESIDENT.

We regret to state, though we anticipated that such would be our duty, that there is no authentic tidings relative to the President. In the London Chronicle, of May 25th, appears a paragraph from a Lisbon correspondent, which states that a vessel arrived at Lisbon, saw on the 23d April, a steamer making under sail, in the direction of the Azores. This steamer had a white streak, however—the President had none. It must have been the steamer Dee, which was once before mistaken for the President.

On looking attentively over our files we find not an item excepting this; and this amounts to nothing.

PARLIAMENT.

The proposition to change the corn laws was to be brought forward, June 4th.

Incidental debates had risen in the House of Lords relative to the corn laws. The other business was less interesting. The Upper House appears to have been busy in watching the crisis of the other House.

Both Houses would adjourn on Friday, the 28th, to the next Thursday, over the Whitsunday holidays.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The British Queen steamship was to come out of dock, where she had been overhauled, on Sunday, May 30. The proceeds of the admission of visitors on board, and also of visitors on board the President when last in port, amounts to £103, were to be given to the families of the President's crew.

Trade remained exceedingly dull.

Great excitement prevailed throughout the kingdom in relation to the corn laws and church rates. A bill to modify the latter had been introduced into the Commons—but would not reach the first stage of legislation. A dissolution of Parliament is counted on as among things certain.

The conduct of the crew of the Wm. Brown, and of the American and British Consuls who acquitted them of blame, is very severely commented on in the English papers.

The protocols respecting the East have been signed by all the five powers, and France has thus returned into the European Alliance.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: Since the date of my last communication, I have visited some eight other charges, in my second tour of the Ohio District. A few particulars pertaining to the state of affairs, may be of interest to your readers.

Cincinnati station is looking up a little. Some valuable accessions have been received this spring, but owing to the incessant emigration west, I do not know that there is any nett increase. As however report has gone forth that we are so far reduced in the city as to have but one class left, I would state there are nineteen classes in regular organization. I feel delighted to mention, also, that a juvenile class consisting of Sunday School Scholars, has been established many months ago, and is regularly met by our indefatigable Br. S. Easton. This interesting undertaking has been attended with gracious results. I trust that this circumstance may be deemed worthy of attention in other stations, and societies where there are Sabbath Schools.

Cincinnati circuit.—Br. Boyd has furnished you an account of the reformation in his circuit. The protracted meeting at Bethesda was of no ordinary degree of interest, and its blessed results will, I trust, not soon pass away. I would mention that the missionary spirit has descended upon our Br. G. G. Moore, of Cincinnati—also that our old friend W. B. Evans has been nerved up afresh with almost youthful energy in in the cause of religion and reform. These two brethren are laboring conjointly and vigorously, at the contiguous outposts of the city, and their labors have been abundantly blessed. A society of 20 or more members has been established of late at Columbia.

Washington circuit.—Br. Clemmons is still regularly engaged in the work. And though he has met with some discouragement, in a portion of the circuit at least, his labors have been attended with decided success. The circuit, I am informed, not only "holds her own," but has realized some increase.

Springfield circuit.—The labors of Br. Crall, I believe, have been evidently blessed. The quarterly meeting at Br. Labourn's, which I attended, commencing 1st of May last, was a precious time. Six or more individuals professed to have found the pearl of great price.

Xenia circuit.—Incessant rains and high waters prevented my reaching the quarterly meeting 9th ult. agreeably to appointment. So I spent the Sabbath at Bellbrook in the same circuit. I am gratified to learn that our old brethren McGuire and Flood were present, and assist at the quarterly meeting.

Rehoboth circuit.—Attended quarterly meeting at Rossburg, May 15th and 16th, and confidently say, the Lord was with us. Seldom if ever have I attended a more interesting love-feast than the one at this place. Individuals of some 4 or 5 different denominations freely stood forth as witnesses for Jesus. On this occasion, assisted by Br. Dobbins and a venerable minister of the Free Will Baptist order, we set apart Br. James Betson for the office of deacon. This circuit has experienced prosperity.

Broad Ridge circuit, Ky.—Attended a meeting on Crooked creek in Grant county, 23d ult. On this occasion our aged Br. Jesse Robinson was ordained elder, now in his 84th year. You will permit me, Mr. Editor, to correct my statistical error. I believe this Br. R. to be the eldest unstationed minister in the Ohio District. I rejoice that this circuit is still advancing. Not only is Br. Williams found faithful, but Br. Smith, the supernumary assistant, labors constantly upon the Sabbaths, and devotes not a little of his time on week days to the work. One new class has recently been formed in Pendleton county.

Ruddell's Mills circuit.—On my visit here the last week in May, I regret to state, I found that our Br. Lamper had been confined by sickness for nearly three months, and had not preached in the bounds of his charge since my previous visit, the last of February. He is now thought to be convalescent. I commend this Br. and the destitute little remnant at this place, who have I trust their garments unspotted from the world, to the sympathies and prayers of the people of God.

Upon the whole our brethren are much encouraged in many sections of our Zion. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." Respectfully, y'rs,

A. H. BASSETT.

Washington, Fayette, Ohio, June 9, 1841.

To the President of the Pittsburg Annual Conference.

CONNELSVILLE, PA., JUNE 15, 1841.

Dear Br. Ragan: As the discipline makes it the duty of each superintendent "to report quarterly, when practicable, to the president, the state of his circuit or station;" and as we feel it to be a duty we owe to the church, to make known the displays of Divine grace, that we have recently realized in this part of God's moral heritage, we embrace this opportunity of making to to you, through the medium of the Recorder, our third quarterly report.

Our third quarter, for this conference year, has just closed, and has been by far the happiest one that we have spent since we joined the travelling connexion. At its commencement the Lord poured out His spirit on this place in a manner unparalleled by any thing we have ever seen. The church which had hitherto been in a dead and cold state, was roused up to vigor and activity. In answer to the prayer of faith the portals of Heaven were opened; the Holy Spirit descended and under its influence the obdurate hearts of sinners were melted into deep contrition before God, and prepared for the reception of His richest blessings, while God's people rejoiced in the marvellous displays of His grace.—Day after day, during the progress of the protracted meeting, at which this took place, sinners found peace and pardon in the blood of the Lamb.

As the immediate fruits of this gracious work, about eighty have united with the classes in Connelsville and the adjoining neighborhood. What is best, nearly all of these have professed religion, and by their punctual attendance to the means of grace, and ordinances of God's house, and, by their daily deportment, give the most satisfactory evidence of the genuineness of the work. Among those who have united with us, there are between twenty-five and thirty young men, who bid fair for usefulness in the church. They hold their "Young Men's Prayer Meeting," twice a week. Besides, those who have recently joined us, there was a great number converted who had joined the church previous to the revival. Our circuit is in a pleasant and prosperous condition; upwards of one hundred have been added to our numbers this year, and prospects for a more abundant increase are encouraging.

My highly esteemed colleague, Br. Davis, has been sick and unable to preach for some time past, but we hope that under the care of a skilful physician, and by the blessing of God, his health will soon be restored, and the circuit again blessed with his labor of love.

Our last quarterly conference resolved to hold a camp-meeting on this circuit, to commence on the 20th of next August. This date was fixed upon in view of securing your assistance, as it will be near the time when you will be in this region of country. If you could make your arrangements so as to be with us, we would be extremely glad. Please drop us a line and let us know, and you will greatly oblige your fellow laborer in the vineyard. JAMES ROBISON.

Br. Clarke, of Allegheny, is informed that the Pittsburgh conference, according to the minutes forwarded to us, commences in his city, first Tuesday in September next.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.—We inform a subscriber, that we know little of this paper. We quoted an article from Bicknell which alluded to it, is all we know about it. Had we the information desired, it would be cheerfully imparted.

The P. M., Tiffin, O., informs us that M. M Fizer refuses to take his paper; he owes us $2,50. Will Br. Mercer get it for us? J. White, dec'd. at the same place, owes us 1,00.

The P. M., Carrollton, O., says R. Gould has refused to take his paper, and says he wont pay for it. He must be a very honest man. He owes us from the commencement. Will our agent see to this matter for us?

OBITUARY.

For the Western Recorder.

LANCASTER, O., MAY 27, 1841.

Mr. Editor: On the 23d inst. the mortal remains of Br. JOHN MEEKS and sister AMELIA CLARK, members of the M. P. Church belonging to this station, were committed to the grave. What gives peculiar interest and deep solemnity to the occasion is, they were members of the same earthly family—A BROTHER AND SISTER. One short day witnessed their exit from the shore of time, and another deposited them both in the same grave.

Br. Meeks was in his twenty-first year. His steady habits and upright conduct, made him respected and beloved by all who knew him. In June last, having thought seriously upon the subject, he came deliberately to the determination to serve God, and gave his name to the church in which, till his death, he lived evidently endeavoring to overcome the corruption of the heart. His disease was of the pulmonary kind, which preyed upon him for the space of one year, gradually bringing its victim to the tomb. Until the last three weeks, some hopes were entertained of his recovery; but then all were given up. Tho' friends wept around him, in view of the evidently approaching hour when they must be separated, "until the heavens be no more," his mind was calm and undisturbed, and in possession of a true hope of glory he sunk into the icy arms of death, leaving full proof that all was well.

His sister, Mrs. Clark, was also in possession of that consolation which no earthly circumstances could take away. About one year ago she earnestly sought and evidently obtained the forgiveness of her sins, and lived in possession of peace with God till her last. Her affliction, though similar to that of her brother's, was of a shorter duration. She was confined to her bed for about three months, during which time we frequently visited her, and always found that she felt religion to be good in the hour of calamity. On Friday, the 21st, soon after hearing of the death of her brother, rather unexpectedly to her friends, she expired. Her end was joy and peace.

Sister Clark was in her twenty-seventh year, and left behind her a husband, two small children and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss.

A funeral discourse was delivered by Br. Ragan, President of the district.

Respectfully,

W. MAYNARD.

From the Congregational Observer.

YOUTHFUL HONESTY.

As Deacon Seward was sitting one Sabbath evening, in his beautiful arbor, in the rear of his garden, meditating upon the sermons he had heard during the day, and enjoying sweet communion with God, his attention was arrested by the conversation of two little boys, who were standing outside of the garden with their eyes fastened on a pear tree, loaded with its luscious fruit. He was unobserved; for a luxuriant grape vine, with its thick foilage, covered the trellis-work of the summer house and almost excluded the rays of the sun itself. "Robert," said John Howe, "Robert, I have been thinking all day about Deacon Seward's pear tree—and I have made up my mind that I would have some of the pears this very night. That's the reason I asked you to walk with me. Now, Bob, I will creep through the fence and shake the tree, and you must pick up your hat full, and then we will have a good time eating them."

"Why, John!" exclaimed little Robert, "if I had known what you wanted, I would not have come with you—I love pears as well as you, but I can never consent to get them in this way—I would rather go and ask Mr. Seward for them or not have them at all."

"But Robert, Deacon Seward will not miss them, and if he does, he will not know who got them—and what hurt can it do?"

"True, John—but ever since Mr. H. G. L. requested the children to commit the 139th Psalm to memory, I thought it a very small matter whether I was seen by man or not, as long as I knew that God saw me."

"Mr. H. G. L.!" said John—"Mr. H. G. L., that is a curious name. Who is he?"

"I do not know, John, but they say he is a man who lives in New Haven, that loves children. One thing I do know, that since I began to read the 'Children's Corner' I have been pursuaded not to do a great many things I used to do, and I am sure I feel the better for following his advice. There was a time, when I would have taken these pears, but I cannot now." Poor John Howe had never been taught the 139th Psalm, nor had he read the "Children's Corner."

"Well," said he—"Bob, you may do as you please, but I mean to have some of the Deacon's pears." So he began to creep through the fence. "Wait one minute, John," said Robert, "and let me repeat to you a few verses of that Psalm."

John paused, and little Robert proceeded, and very solemnly through the first twelve verses. When he came to the last two, "If I say, surely the darkness shall cover me; even the darkness shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day; darkness and light are both alike to thee." John had started back and was standing trembling at his side. "Well Robert," said he, "that is all new to me—I never felt so before.—Come, let us go home, and I promise you, if you will not tell any body what I have been doing, I will never do so again. I wish you would lend me the 'Children's Corner' as you call it; and I should like to read the whole of that Psalm. Where shall I find it?" "In the Bible, John."—But poor John had no Bible, for his father and mother were what they call Infidels, and had no Bible, in their house. "Bible!" said John—"I have got no Bible, I wish I had one." "I will lend you mine," said Robert, "till you can get one," and so saying they returned to their homes.

Deacon Seward's heart overflowed with tears of joy, at the result of this conversation, and after thanking God for this new proof of the power of God he returned to his house. The next morning a servant was despatched with a basket in each hand, to little Robert Baker and John Howe. Upon opening his, John found a large number of fine yellow pears, and a handsome bound pocket Bible, with a mark in it at the 139th Psalm, and a note from Deacon Seward stating that he had overheard the conversation of the evening, and was happy to find that little John was so willing to abandon his evil course, as soon as he heard the word of God. The note expressed the hope that John would read the Bible through, and the assurance that the Deacon would never reveal what he had heard to any one. When Robert opened his basket, he found some fine pears, and a handsome little volume, entitled "ANECDOTES—The Young," by the London Religious Tract Society, and a mark in it at the 65th page. It contained also a note, stating that the Deacon had heard the conversation between him and John Howe, and expressed a great deal of pleasure on account of Robert's honesty and regard for the word of God.

Robert then read the piece to which the Deacon had directed his attention:

"A poor chimney sweeper's boy was employed at the house of a lady of rank, to cleanse the chimney to her chamber.—Finding himself on the hearth of the lady's dressing room, and perceiving no one there, he waited a few moments to take a view of the beautiful things in the apartment. A gold watch, richly set in diamonds particularly caught his attention, and he could not forbear taking it into his hand. Immediately the wish arose in his mind—"Ah, if thou hadst such a one!" After a pause he said to himself, "But if I take it I shall be a thief,—and yet continued he—no one sees me. No one? does not God see me, who is present every where? Should I then be able to say my prayers to Him, after I have committed the theft? Could I die in peace?" Overcome by these thoughts a cold shivering seized him. "No!" said he laying down the watch, "I had much rather be poor and keep my good conscience, than rich and become a rogue." At these words he hastened back into the chimney.

The countess, who was in the room adjoining, having overheard his soliloquy, sent for him, the next morning and accosted him: "My little friend, why did you not take the watch yesterday?" The boy fell on his knees, speechless and astonished. "I heard every thing you said," continued her ladyship—"thank God for enabling you to resist the temptation, and be watchful over yourself for the future: from this moment you shall be in my service. I will both maintain and clothe you; nay, more, I will procure you good instruction, that shall ever guard you from similar temptation."—The boy burst into tears; he was anxious to express his gratitude, but he could not. The countess strictly kept her promise, and had pleasure to see him grow up a pious intelligent man.

MISCELLANEOUS.

RELIGION.—"Bright as the morning star in the radiance of the sun-beams, cometh the seraph of immortality."

Religion, the child of heaven, wears an angelic smile and is distinguished by all the graces of its divine original. Elevated and aspiring, yet winning and attractive, benevolent, gracious, courteous and condescending; her features formed to complacency; her voice attuned to harmony; her eyes shining with benignity, and all her motions, though composed and steady, are yet graceful and unassuming. Religion erects to her votaries a temple sacred to immortality. The good man dreads not death nor dissolution. Invited to heaven, and called to glory, he soars above this dim spot man calls earth, and is lost in the incomprehensible progression of eternity, that opens to his prospect. Religion is divine vigor in the soul, triumphing over the darkness of nature, refining its baseness, enriching its poverty, healing its maladies, and converting its very wants and miseries into abundance, happiness, and glory. Without this divine treasure, man is poor indeed! Amidst opulence, how needy! amidst titles and honors, how ignoble and vain! in a palace how miserable! how contemptible on a throne.

One evening an officer presented himself to General Jackson, and complained that certain of the soldiers had got together in a tent, and were making a great noise.

"What are they doing?" asked the General, with some feeling.

"They are praying now, but they have been singing."

"And is that a crime?"

"The articles of war order punishment for any unusual noise."

"God forbid," said the old General "that praying should be an unusual noise in any camp."

HUMAN DEPRAVITY.—The doctrine of human depravity is most distinctly taught in God's word, and but too sadly confirmed by our own personal experience of the world at large. Yet, nevertheless, there have been and yet are those who have had the hardihood to deny it. But while some in christian lands with the Bible in their hands have rejected this truth, the Pagans without the Bible have felt and admitted it. In proof read the following:

"To sin is the common lot of all men."—Sophocles, Anting. v. 1911.

"It is to be expected that men will sin." Euripides, Hypol.

"There is an innate inclination in man to sin."—Sopater.

"If children were born virtuous by nature we should seclude them from contagion, and guard them more sacredly than jewels."—Plata, Meno 89.

"Depravity is transmitted to generations. Hence the disorders of the soul, the diseases of the body, and the cares and fates of mortals."—Plutarch Consolatio, ad Apoll. 6.

"As in a pomegranate there is always a corrupt seed, so in every man there is at least a sinful inclination. No one is without sin."—Diogenes Laertius, 6, 89.

"Nature declares her will by a thousand signs; but we (originally pure) become deaf, I know not how, and heed not her admonitions."—Cicero, Tusculum Questions, 3, 1.

"We have all sinned, some in greater things, some by choice, and, perhaps, urged on or compelled by others' wickedness.—Nor do we merely come short, but we shall continue to do so to the end of life."—Seneca de Clem. 1, 6.

"All men sin both in public and private:—It is preposterous to suppose that depraved lust once excited can be allayed by laws or any other means."—Thucydides, 2, 46.

"No one is born free from vice."—Horace.

THE HOLY CITIES.—A late number of the Augsburg Gazette contains the following interesting paragraph, which we hope will prove to be true:—

"England has entered very readily into an idea formed of rendering Jerusulem, and the other holy cities of Palestine, independent of the Turkish dominion. A proposal for the appointment of a Christian governor at Jerusalem, has also been well received at London, and it is now certain that the European powers are about to open a negociation with the Porte on this subject in concurrence with France. This measure may be considered as the last step towards a final settlement of the eastern question."

THE JEWS.—It is said that within the last five years, the number of Jews of the Holy Land has increased from 2,000 to upwards of 40,000, and that it is still increasing. The London Society, for the conversion of the Jews, have established a mission at Jerusalem, and have built a church upon Mount Zion. They have translated the book of common prayer into Hebrew, and have a missionary who is a converted Jew, stationed there; and thus after a period of 1800 years, the Psalms of David in Hebrew, are again sung on Mount Zion—where they were set to music by their author, the "sweet singer of Israel," 3000 years ago.

GENERAL JACKSON.—The incident from which the report of Gen. Jackson's pecuniary failure arose, is thus stated by a southern paper: "Mr. Reeside wrote to the General from Louisville, stating that he was sick and in distress, and requested the loan of $100—the 'good old man, replied that he was not able to send Mr. Reeside the amount in money, but tendered him a horse, which he could convert into money."

BANK CASE.—A case is now pending before the Chancery Court of South Carolina, in which Henry Shultz and the State Bank are plantiffs, and the Bank of the State of Georgia, the City Council of Augusta, and G. B. Lamar, are defendants, in which the property in dispute amounts, costs, income and interest, to 568,182 dollars 91 cents, and which suit has now been pending about 20 years.

A merchant, who had failed in business, held the following consultation with his clock; "You," said he, "are a mere mechanical affair, while I have the principle of action in myself." "Very true," returned the clock, "but when you wind up your affairs, you stop business; when my affairs are wound up, I go the longer for it."

MAIDEN MODESTY.—There is a maiden lady in Connecticut who is so extremely nice in her notions of female modesty, that she turned off her washer woman because she put her clothes in the same tub with those of a young man! It was a shocking piece of immodesty, to be sure!

OUR COAST DEFENCES.—We learn that orders have been issued from the proper authorities, to increase the naval strength of our country, along the whole line of the Atlantic coast; and also to augment the strength of the West Indian Squadron.

Just ask your most particular friend, who is rolling in wealth, to lend you a hundred dollars when you are in need of it, and see how poor he becomes at once; see his golden coffers vanish and bankruptcy come upon him!

No glasses affect the eyes more unfavorably than glasses of brandy.

AN AFFECTIONATE MONKEY.—On a shooting party, one of my friends killed a female monkey, and carried it to his tent, which was soon surrounded by forty or fifty of the tribe, who made a great noise and seemed disposed to attack the aggressor. They retreated when he presented his fowling piece, the dreadful effect of which they had witnessed, and seemed perfectly to understand. The head of the troop, however, stood his ground, chattering furiously; the sportsman did not like to fire at the creature, and nothing short of firing would suffice to drive him off. At length he came to the door of the tent, and finding threats of no avail, began a lamented mourning, and by the most expressive gestures, to beg for the dead body. It was given him; he took it sorrowfully in his arms, and bore it away to his expecting companions. They who were witnesses of the extraordinary scene resolved never again to fire at one of the monkey race.—Forbes' Oriental Memoirs.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.—Br. Hinckley of Indiana proposes the following plan by which our seventh-day brethren can be made first day Baptists without sacrificing their consciencious scruples. It is founded on the fact that a ship sailing around the world gains one day on the time at the port from which she sailed.—He says:

"Let them embark at any of our eastern sea-ports on a voyage around the world, sailing around Cape Horn, across the Pacific, Indian and Atlantic oceans, to the port of their embarkation, and if they have worshipped regularly on the seventh day during their voyage, they will find on their return that the day on which they worship is the first day of the week or christian Sabbath. Thus enabling them to unite with other christian churches, in observing the first, instead of the seventh day, without feeling that they have departed from the original command."—Cross and Jour.

DISTILLERIES STOPPED.—Several distilleries have been stopped in Illinois, which are costly and profitable. The owner of one of them suddenly became convinced that his distillery was scattering death through the land. In reflecting on it during a sleepless night, he came to the conclusion that he must stop it or lose his own soul. Before the day dawned he took his resolution. "I will become faithful to my conscience and my God, whatever becomes of my distillery."

Accordingly he rose early in the morning, went to the distillery, and calling his foreman,—"John," said he, "come here. Put out these fires."

John looked up at this unusual order, in doubt whether he understood it. "What do you mean, Mr. T.——?" "I mean to have you put out the fires of the distillery. There shall be no more whiskey made here."

THE BIBLE.—The Bible has been dispised by many, and the heaven-daring infidel has taxed his genius to turn it into ridicule. But its truths have not as yet been destroyed, and they never will be.—They will even withstand the general conflagration, and the principles and truths of the Bible will be known when the great white throne shall appear, and the nations be judged according to their deed—So, whether men will consent to be ruled now by the revealed word of God or not, they will have to be judged by it in the last day.—Morning Star.

THE INVESTIGATOR.—This is the infidel paper edited by the celebrated A. Kneeland. It has been suspenped a while for want of patronage, but has revived again at $3 a year instead of two; and the publisher tells us that he shall lose money at that. What misanthropes unbelievers are, not to patronize the organ of 'darkness invisible,' but cruelly to leave us poor christian bigots, to the misery of a firm belief in God, and a cheerful hope of Heaven. Wake up! fly around, you lazy believers in all unbelief, or Christians will take the world.—Olive Branch.

STRANGE METHOD OF OBTAINING SALT. Mr. Bowring in his report on Egypt, says that the consumption of salt is considerable in Egypt, and strange are the means employed for obtaining it. At Abydos, the Arabs open the mummies, take out the inner parts which they put into water, and thus they furnish excellent salt.—They sometimes get salt from the sand in which the mummies lie: but more frequently from the bodies themselves.

A SAD PICTURE.—It is stated that we have in the United States nine thousand six hundred and fifty-seven distilleries of spiritous liquors, which distilled last year 36,343,236 gallons; upwards of two galls. for every man woman and child in the country. In the State of Pennsylvania alone there are 707 distilleries, exceeding in quantity any other two States in the Union, the annual manufacture of which amounts to 8,784,138 gallons.

NEW APPOINTMENTS.—A Washington letter says, the Hon. Daniel Webster goes to England as our Minister, that the present Secretary of the Navy goes into the Chair of State, and that the Hon. Charles F. Penrose, of Pennsylvania, goes into the Navy Department. This arrangement would be most excellent in every possible respect.

An ingenious electro-magnetic apparatus for taking sounds at sea, has been invented in England by a Mr. Bain. By this, on breaking off the electric current, a bell is struck upon the deck of a vessel, and indicates the precise moment when the lead touches the bottom of the water.

Streeter has invented a syrup for young people, called "Concentrated Syrup of Goosequill," which gives children an immediate taste for composition. It is excellent for editors who are hard up for ideas.

MATRIMONIAL RULE.—If you wish to undertake any important enterprise, be sure and consult your wife. If she agrees with you, fly into her arms; if she don't, then fly into a passion.

No one understands how a newspaper should be conducted, so well as some modest individuals who never managed a paper in their lives. They understand all about it.

Love come in all shapes, but mostly asking for cash. It must have shawls, silks, satins and jewelry—it draws upon our pockets in all ways; it is truly an expensive thing, this love.

THE NEW WORLD.

A New Enlarged Quarto Volume.

COMMENCING THE FIRST WEEK IN JULY.

THE Third Volume of the QUARTO form of the NEW WORLD will commence on the 3d of July, when it will be much enlarged, and four columns given on each page, instead of three, making sixty-four columns of choice reading, without any increase in the price. New Volumes will always begin on the 1st of July and 1st of January, making two in each year, of 416 pages each, to which a handsome title page, and a copious index will be given.

The NEW WORLD is a Journal of Popular Literature, Criticism, Science and the Arts. It is supplied with aritcles by the first living writers of the United States and Great Britain. The first number was issued in June, 1840, and its circulation has steadily increased to this day, till it counts more readers than any other newspaper of its kind in the world. This is owing to the fact of its having given to the public, for a sum merely nominal, and always in advance of any other print, the most popular works of the most approved authors.

A novel and striking feature of the New World, is, that it has given besides the great literary productions of the day, the discourses of eminent divines. In future these discourses will be presented even more frequently than heretofore; but not too often to interfere with other interesting articles.

In addition to all these new and popular works, these eloquent discourses, this comprehensive journal has given the best poems and periodicals papers which have appeared in the English and American Magazines. What has been done is an earnest of what will be done.

The New World is divided into various departments, viz:—Original Articles; First American Editions; Periodical Literature; The Scrap Book; The Literary World; The Musical World; The Dramatic World; The Political World; The World of Science and Art; Patchwork; Latest Intelligence.

We cannot forbear to add in conclusion, that the New World studiously avoids all party politics; and is conducted on principles of the strictest morality. No profane or improper jest, no vulgar allusion, no irreligious sentiment, is allowed to soil its pages. Reverence of God and respect to man govern it always. The rule of the Editor is never to publish a line which he would hesitate to read aloud in the hearing of virtuous and intelligent females. Thus the New World is made an unexceptionable Family Newspaper, and is earnestly recommended to the regard of every friend of a pure literature, as well as of correct morals and the public good.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the hackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

POETRY.

The Mirror says, the following lines, descriptive of fact, were sent to the children of the Sunday School at St. Thomas' Church, by Dr. Hakes, the Rector.

I knew a widow, very poor,
Who four small children had;
The oldest was but six years old—
A gentle, modest lad.

And very hard this widow toiled
To feed her children four;
An honest pride the woman felt,
Though she was very poor.

To labor she would leave her home—
For children must be fed;
And glad was she when she could buy
A shilling's worth of bread.

And this was all the children had
On any day to eat;
They drank their water, ate their bread,
But never tasted meat.

One day when snow was falling fast,
And piercing was the air,
I thought that I would go and see
How these poor children were.

Ere long I reached their cheerless home,
'Twas searched by every breeze;
When going in, the oldest child
I saw upon his knees.

I paused to listen to the boy—
He never raised his head;
But still went on and said—"Give us
This day our daily bread."

I waited till the child was done,
Still listening as he prayed—
And when he arose I asked him why
The Lord's prayer he had said?

"Why, sir," said he, "this morning, when
My mother went away,
She wept because she said she had
No bread for us to-day.

"She said, we children now must starve,
Our father being dead;
And then I told her not to cry,
For I could get some bread.

"Our Father, sir, the prayer begins,
Which makes me think that HE,
As we have got no father here,
Would our kind father be.

"And then you know the prayer, sir, too,
Asks God for bread each day;
So, in the corner, sir, I went,
And that's what made me pray."

I quickly left that wretched room,
And went with fleeting feet:
And very soon was back again,
With food enough to eat.

"I thought God heard me," said the boy;
I answered with a nod—
I could not speak, but much I thought
Of that child's faith in God.

AN INQUIRY, &c.

A Statement of the Doctrine of an Unoriginated, Infinite and Eternal Prescience, as it is currently and implicitly received by a very large proportion of the Christian World.

NO. V.

OF POSSIBILITY AND CONTINGENCY.

Every supposable thing, the actual production of which would not involve any real contradiction either physical, or mental, or moral, must, in itself, be abstractedly possibly: but, on the contrary, it is equally plain, that every supposable thing, the actual production of which would of necessity involve any real contradiction, cannot be in itself even abstractedly possible, but must be absolutely and eternally impossible. If every supposable thing, the actual production of which would not involve any contradiction, is in itself abstractedly possible, then the Deity, who is possessed of Almighty power, may possibly bring such a supposable thing into actual existence: but if every supposable thing, the actual production of which would involve a contradiction, cannot be in itself abstractedly possible, then it is not possible for the Deity to bring such a supposable thing into actual being. That abstract possibility itself must have definable bounds and immutable limits, beyond which it can never pass: and that there are supposable things which the power of an infinite Being could never be able to bring into actual existence, is a clear and a palpable, and intuitive truth. And thus it will appear that the human imagination is able to produce imaginary association, which no power in earth or heaven is able to associate in fact and actual existence. The human fancy can associate happiness with impiety towards God; and can disjoin personal happiness from the approbation and blessing of the Deity: it can presume on final and eternal felicity after a life of incorrigible rebellion and final impenitence:—it can believe that this material and temporary world had no immeterial and eternal creation; and that a future event may be the object of a certain anticipation, while the real and actual existence of that event is perfectly fortuitous: it can believe a thousand other things that are equally supposable to the human imagination, but would be equally contradictory. Equally incable to co-existence, equally impracticable to the hand of Omnipotence, and equally irreconcilable with the perfections of the Deity. But although all supposable things, the actual production of which would not involve any real contradiction, be in themselves abstractedly possible, yet all such possibilities could not actually exist together: partly because every one of those abstract possibilities may be predicated both negatively and positively, both alternatives of which would not be capable of a co-existence; and partly because the co-existence of all abstract possibilities would imply an exhaustion of infinite fecundity, and would be incompatible with the infinite continuation of the Divine existence.

In relation to the existence of opposite possibilities it may be argued, that before the creation of this world had taken place, it was then abstractedly possible for such a world as this to be created, and it was equally possible that such a world as this might never have been created: but its creation and its non creation are perfectly incapable of co-existence: and therefore since this world has been actually created, it is no longer possible that such a world as this may not be created. In relation to the co-existence of all abstract possibilities, it may be necessary to remind my readers, that when we speak of all abstract possibilities, we mean all that are possible to an infinite being, not at any particular, or present point of time; but all that are possible to an infinite Being during the everlasting continuation of his existence. So that it is not possible to suppose the actual production of all things, without supposing a termination of the Divine existence; the entire annihilation of the Deity himself: for if every thing were actually done which would even be abstractedly possible, it would then be impossible for Omnipotence himself to produce any thing more. I know it has been asserted that the foregoing hypothesis is contradictory, since it seems to assume that things which are abstractedly possible are not capable of actual evidence; which appears to be the same with saying that they must be both possible and impossible at the same time. In reply I need only to remind the reader, that in relation to opposite possibilities, the argument did not go to shew that opposite possibilities are not capable of actual existence, but only that they are not capable of co-existence: and in relation to the co-existence of all things which are abstractedly possible, the argument had precisely the same bearing. Every thing which is abstractedly possible may be brought into actual existence, but all things which are abstractedly possible are not capable of co-existence, at any single point of duration: neither can all the abstract possibilities of an infinite duration be ever brought within the limits of any finite portion of duration however extended. All abstract possibilities are hypothetically eternal; since what is abstractedly possible at any point of duration, must under the same circumstances, be equally possible at every point of duration: but although all abstract possibilities are hypothetically immutable, they are actually subject to perpetual mutation. Many things that were possible yesterday, may have been rendered absolutely impossible at the present moment, and that which is possible to day may be rendered absolutely impossibleby tomorrow: and so on ad infinitum: and therefore, although all things which will ever be possible, may be utterly incapable of co-existence, yet every possible thing may have an actual existence in its own legitimate place of succession on the boundless range of an unlimited duration. The present existence of all abstract possibilities, would imply a compression of a limited duration within the indivisible limits of the present moment; which would be as incompatable with the infinite duration of the Deity, as with the inexhaustible fecundity of Almighty power. All things which are at present possible, may either negatively or positively, have a present existence: but the possibilities of an infinite duration will require an infinite duration to bring them into actual being.

The sophism which would argue an actual certainty from an abstract possibility, may claim a moment's notice in this place. It has been speciously argued, that since the reader is now actually perusing what my mind has indited and my pen has written, it was therefore certain, from all eternity, that at the present moment he would be so employed. It does not much excite our wonder when we hear illiterate people talking away in such a random manner; but it is, I confess, more than marvellous, to hear grave and learned doctors propound such a sophistical proposition in the name of argument. If a person would only distinguish between abstract possibility and actual existence, the case would be perfectly intelligible. It would then stand as follows: since my reader is now actually perusing what my mind has indited and my pen has written, it was always possible that at the present moment he might be so employed; but it was, prior to the present moment equally possible that at this time he might not be so employed: up to the present time, both alternatives of the possibility were equally possible; but since my reader is now actually perusing the production of my pen, it is now no longer possible that at the present moment he may not be so employed; for by the actual transpiration of the positive possibility, the negation thereof has been actually annihilated. Arguing from the mere abstract possibility of things, up to their real and actual existence, is, I conceive, the great fallacy of the Berkleyan theory; which is so far from being in accordance with the legitimate deductions of human reason, that it would justify every conceit of a Bedlamite, and would clothe the wildest vagaries of the human fancy, with the sober garb of truth; and would embody every phantasm of a disordered intellect, in the forms of real existence.

These obvious and numerous discrepancies, between abstract possibilities and actual existence, open the door for the admission of an innumerable swarm of contingencies of every species, which flit through every postern of the human intellect buzz along all the avenues to the heart, crowd the great thoroughfare of human life, and darken the whole hemisphere of the moral world in their ceaseless and portentous flight. See them stretch themselves out into all their immeasurable amplitude, and pursue their aerial way along an infinite continuity of beings; as wide as from the margin of absolute certainty and actual existence quite to the verge of absolute impossibility; and commencing their flight with the duration of the Divine existence, and continuing their course from everlasting to everlasting. Possibility, in the way of accommodation, may be improperly predicated of all certainties and of all things in actual existence, since their certainty, or their actual existence, demonstrates that they are possible; but possibility, in its strict and proper application, belongs exclusively to things which are only abstractedly possible, and have no actual or real existence: still it must always be kept in mind, that every abstract possibility may be predicated both negatively and positively.

Here then we come to the final conclusion; which is that between the alternatives of abstract possibilities, there is always to be found a mental, or moral, or a physical contingency: since both the negative and positive alternations are equally capable of being brought into actual existence, and each of them is just as capable as the other of being completely destroyed, by the actual transpiration of the opposite alternative. It is possible I may be eternally saved, such are the advantages of my probationary state; and such are its awful responsibilities, that it is equally possible I may be eternally lost; and between this appalling alternative, there lies a momentous contingency; which will continue hanging in fearful suspension over the issue of my life until my final happiness or misery shall render one of these possibilities an everlasting reality, and annihilate the other possibility for ever and ever. But until one of those events shall have actually transpired, the issue of my life will be as much a contingency to the infinite mind of God, as to the narrow intelligence of my own finite understanding. It has, indeed, been frequently argued, that some things may be certain to an infinite intelligence, which are contingent to us; an argument that is perfectly tenable, and is as perfectly irrevelant. That some things may be certain to an infinite mind, which are not so to any finite intelligence, is intuitively evident, but that an infinite mind can anticipate with certainty, an issue, which He himself has made to be contingent, is the very point in dispute; a point which has been roundly and repeatedly asserted, but which no person has hitherto ever pretended to prove. It is a strange thing that our opponents will imagine, that assertions on their side, are evidence the most plenary and decisive, while they will regard even argument on our side, as being little less than blasphemy. Why should they be so confident of infallibility, when they were not able to produce a single argument in support of such a point as the one before alluded to. And why will they continue to shield their ignorance under the pretended mystery of the subject?

The question as we have already argued, is not now a question of evidence but of fact. Certainty, in knowledge, is a very different thing from certainty in fact: the former cannot possibly exist without the latter; but the latter very frequently exist without the former, as far as the knowledge of created beings is concerned. Certainty in the event must be antecedent to and quite independent of, all knowledge or mental certainty of fact; but although mental certainty should have no influence whatever upon certainty in re, yet certainty in evidence, must always demonstrate the existence of certainty in re, and must for ever be incompatible with all contingency.

Contingencies are identified with all moral agency, whether created or uncreated, and every attempt to subject them to the rules of a rigid certainty, or reduce them to the regular proportions of physical causes and effects, would be nothing better than an outrage on human liberty, and a libel on the moral government of God. They refused to submit themselves to the authority of a rule, or the process of measurement; they shrink from the touch, and vanish from the sight, they are ever changing in their forms; they are ever flitting on the wing; they ride on the fiery Pegasus of a lawless will; they are created by every excitement of the passions, and are flung in myriads from every scintillation of the human fancy.—Contingency scorns the mechanical rules of mathematical demonstration, and the rigid laws of mental and physical certainty: she soars into a loftier region, and as she spreads her ample wings and wheels her eccentric way, she describes a track as unlike the regular concatenation of physical causes and effects, as the course of the royal eagle is from the flight of an automaton or the sailing of a balloon.

My next inquiry will be into the notion of a a certain prescience in relation to moral actions, and the final issue of human life inconsistent with human responsibility, and repugnant to all moral feeling. JOHN.

THE CASE OF JOHN DORCAS.

Resolved, That the Secretary give a statement of the reasons of John Dorca's expultion from the church to be published with the minutes.

Inasmuch as John Dorcas stood accountable to this conference as a silenced preacher—upon hearing of his conduct for the past year, it being contrary to the principles of the christian religion, they do exclude him from our church.

The above is an extract from the minutes of the Sandusky Annual Conference of the United Brethren, as published in their church organ—the Religious Telescope, of the 26th May.—Now, Br. Editor, the above requires some explanation. The person above referred to, as having been silenced and expelled, is the identical person named in the letter of our Conference Missionary as having been received lately by the quarterly meeting conference, M. P. C., Sandusky circuit. It is true that Br. J. Dorcas was a preacher a number of years; that he was an ordained elder—and part of the time a presiding elder in that church;—and we might here add we, believe he was instrumental in building up that church as much as any minister they had during the time he laboured with them. And now we frankly admit that he was silenced (or in o her words unpreachered) by the above named conference, one year ago last March.

When it was ascertained that J. Dorcas was silenced a large amount of curiosity was excited in the public mind, as well as deep anxiety in the minds of his brethren in church fellowship with him, to know the whys and wherefores of it; but the answer to their inquiries was we dare not tell—we are bound by a resolution of conference to keep that a secret. Whereupon fifty or upwards of their members resolved, that, if they dare not know any thing about such an important act of a conference, in a case of a brother who had done them a large amount of valuable ministerial service, and in whose piety they had the utmost confidence, they would seek a home where they could have a knowledge of, and a participation in the law making and law executing of the church; hence they are now placed to the account of the M. P. Church on Sandusky circuit.

The year having rolled around, the conference again met, and finding their resolution of secresy had made such havoc among them, they reconsider it, and resolve to divulge the whole secret.—Hence they instruct "the Secretary" to "give a statement of the reasons of John Dorcas' expulsion from the church," and that it be "published" to the world.

The Secretary then attempting to execute the order of conference—he says—"Inasmuch as John Dorcas stood ACCOUNTABLE to this conference as a silenced preacher—upon HEARING of his conduct for the past year; it being contrary to the principles of the christian religion, they do exclude him from our church."

Here we ask for light—Who? What? How? Who expelled him? What expelled him? Or how was he expelled? John Dorcas publicly withdrew from the United Brethren in Christ Church a short time after they had condemned him to silence as a minister of the gospel, and stood one year out of fellowship with any church—and previous to the siting of their last conference he was received into the M. P. Church—and of course was not amenable to them in any shape or form, neither had they any control over him.

But the inquiry has been, and still is, for what cause was John Dorcas condemned to silence?—We answer the cause is as definitely stated in the above "reasons of his expulsion" so called, as any thing we have heard or have been able to learn. We leave the "statement of the reasons," &c. with the reader, comment on them is unnecessary. We have thought it due to the character, not only of a brother, that we are convinced has been unjustly injured, but also to the Methodist Prot. Church, to give the above explanation. We say in conlusion that we are sorry our good United Brethren have acted so inconsistent in this whole affair—but we feel morally bound to defend injured rights.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

OHIO, JUNE 13, 1841.

Br. Springer: Our Presidential and third quarterly meeting is over, on Adamsville circuit. Although we have but little increase this year, we have peace and love. Our circuit is at present gaining ground; we have good class meetings. We are punctual to our appointments, and the congregations are greatly increased, and our societies blessed with a state of good feeling.

Yours, &c., T. FOSTER.

LIGONIER CT., PA., JUNE 18, 1841.

Br. Springer: Having to write on business we would add a few words concerning our field of labor. We should be glad to have more cheering intelligence to publish, but are still thankful that we are participants of the favors of our heavenly Father. We cannot boast of large accessions to our church on this circuit, yet we have abundant reason to praise God for sustaining us in the midst of persecutions and difficulties. From the commencement of our operations here we have met with opposition. Yet in the midst of it we have prospered as a people. Our circuit is but a small one, and in all probability will so remain. But still our people are determined to sustain it as well as the preachers who may be sent to them. I should be pleased if the conference, next year, could send them a single man, as they have had a considerable burden upon them the last two years, in sustaining a married one. To their credit be it spoken, they are making every effort to sustain their minster.

Brethren, pray for us.

FORMATION OF CHARACTER.

There is no period of our lives, on which so much depends, and yet which is to some, apparantly, so unimportant, as when we are about the age of sixteen—about to forsake the habits and feelings of boys, and to assume the character and occupations of men. Our thoughts are alternately carried to the past and to the future.

In looking back to the day of our childhood, we see but little to regret and much to admire. Hitherto, with hearts naturally light, buoyant and thoughtless, our actions have been of little consequence, cherishing enmity against no one, and no one against us. We were at peace with all. If we committed a wrong action, we were forgiven. If we made a resolution or a promise to-day, to-morrow it was forgotten, and things which appeared hateful to us one moment, seemed lovely to us the next.

The only sorrows we endured were the sorrows of vexation and disappointment, but which like the wind, blew around us for a moment, and then were gone forever. In contemplating the past we are apt to judge of the future, and this fills our minds with a variety of emotions.

We may think, perhaps, that our own path will be fair and smooth, that our own imprudent actions will be disregarded. But it is not so.—As I before said, we must soon fill responsible stations in life, therefore, our path must be marked and our destiny fixed.

Instead of the fickle and unsteady actions and the trifling and perhaps viscious ways which have marked the progress of by-gone days, the mind, in order to accomplish the higher purpose for which its creator designed it, to enjoy happiness itself, and to reflect as in a mirror the glory of its God, must aspire to objects, pure and heavenly, and as lofty as the rude Himelah's peak.—We must form, for the basis of our character, principles founded upon the cause of God, of right unchangeable form, and intimately fixed and be guided thereby. The formation of these principles, then, is the object of my communication. Let us endeavor to form such as will be a benefit to ourselves and a blessing to those around us, both for time and eternity.

In the first place, then, we must render obedience to the laws of God, because it is our duty to love and obey Him, and because we are a creature dependent on Him for the daily comforts of life, and to the laws of man because they are necessary for the peace and harmony among ourselves.

In our intercourse with others, be just and honest. "Do to others as you would be done by." Make it a point of duty to succor the distressed and the afflicted. Be kind and obliging to all, and in every case. Let our judgment and our conscience only be our dictators.

These are the main points. Obey these precepts and you will obtain the blessing of God, and the love and good will of all, (a privilege which Bonaparte, as he strode the gory field of blood never knew) and the proud consciousness of having done right, (a feeling which Alexander in his ambitious attempts to enslave a world never felt,) and we may live honored and respected by all and die peaceful and happy. Our spirit will live in the smiles of its Creator redeemed and disenthralled while eternity endureth.

RIOT AT DETROIT, MICHGAN.—The Buffalo Commercial of Thursday last says:—"We have a painful rumor of popular violence and destruction of property at Detroit, a day or two since, growing out of indignation at certain transactions of the State Bank of Michigan. We hope the report is exaggerated, and in the absence of papers of authentic information, refrain from any more specific statement."—Phil. Chron.

VERY CONSISTENT.—A thourough democrat ashamed of his poor relations.

AN ICEBERG.—At 12 o'clock, we went below, and had just got through dinner, when the cook put his head down the scuttle and told us to come on deck and see the finest sight we had ever seen. "Where away, cook?" asked the first man who was up. "On the larboard bow;" and there lay floating on the ocean several miles off, an immense, irregular mass, its top and points covered with snow, and its centre of a deep indigo color. This was an iceberg, and of the largest size, as one of our men said, who had been in the Northern Ocean. As far as the eye could reach, the sea in every direction was of a deep blue color, the waves running high and fresh, and sparkling in the light, and in the midst lay this immense mountain island, its cavities and vallies thrown into deep shade, and its points and pinnacles glittering in the sun. All hands were soon on deck looking at it, and admiring in various ways, its beauty and grandeur; but no description can give any idea of the strangeness, splendor, and really, the sublimity of the sight. Its great size—for it must have been from two to three miles in circumference, and several hundred feet high—its slow motion as its base rose and sunk in the water, and its high points nodded against the clouds—the dashing of the waves upon it, which breaking high with foam, lined its base with a white crust, and the thundering sound of the cracking of the mass, and the breaking and tumbling down of huge pieces, together with its nearness and approach, which added a slight element of fear, all combined to give it the character of true sublimity. The main body of the mass was, I have said, of an indigo color, its base froze with crusted foam, and as it grew thin and transparent toward the edges and top, its color shaded off from a deep blue to the whiteness of snow. It seemed to be drifting towards the North, so that we kept away and avoided it. It was in sight all the afternoon; and when we got to leeward of it, the wind died away, so that we lay to quiet near it for a greater part if the night. Unfortunately there was no moon, but it was a clear night, and we could plainly mark the long, regular heavings of the stupenduous mass as though they must have run through the whole length of the iceberg, and several pieces fell down with a thundering crash, plunging heavily into the sea. No pencil has ever yet given anything like the true effect of an iceberg. In a picture, they are huge, uncouth masses, stuck in the sea, while their chief beauty and grandeur is their slow stately motion, the whirling of the snow about their summits, and the fearful groaning and cracking of their parts, the picture cannot give. This is the large iceberg, while the small and distant islands floating on the smooth sea in the light of a clear day, look like the floating fairy isles of sapphire.—Dana's "Two Years before the Mast."

CHILDREN'S IDEAS OF THE STARS.—A very little girl, walking home with her aunt on a fine frosty evening, had her attention attracted by the brilliant appearance of the heavens, and pointing to the stars, said with great simplicity,—"Aunt, what are these? Are they not little gimlet holes to let the glory through?"

"What a beautiful place heaven is," said a little boy, not four years old.—"Why do you think so?" said his mother. "Because," said he, alluding to the stars, "the nails in the floor are so beautiful."—Pruce's Juv. An.

A fine little fellow about five years of age, was lying in the door on a summer evening gazing up to the heavens, with all the simple earnestness of childhood's happy hours, when the clouds, which, until then, had formed a slight veil between him and the object of his infantile admiration, were suddenly swept away by a gentle breeze, and left the sky studded with its millions of little orbs exposed to his gaze. "Father, father," said he, pointing to the stars, "do look at the little drops o' day."

WILD CAT'S NOTION OF A WARRIOR.—On Wild Cat's interview with Major Childs, at Fort Pierce, the other day, he saw an iron pot which he recognized as having once belonged to him. "You call yourself a warrior," said he, "and yet you took that pot from an old woman. If it had been a man and taken in a fair fight, it would have been your pot, but you frightened the squaw and captured the pot. That was not a warrior's act. I would as soon take baby linen from a piccaninny, as a pot from a squaw. But I am a warrior, and I want my pot." The gallant Major could not stand the force of the argument; the pot was borne off to gladden the old woman again with the delight of soft ky.

COMMON SCHOOLS IN VERMONT.—We learn from the Vermont Chronicle that the number of children in Vermont, between the ages of 4 and 18 is 100,600, and the number of district schools 2300. The number of teachers employed is 5100.—The school tax for the year is $61,803 equal to $22 for each district; the sums raised voluntarily by the towns and districts amounted to $81,000. The aggregate expense for schools, including board for teachers, books, fuel, &c., is about $292,730 or $112 to each district.

AGRICULTURAL.

From the Western Farmer.

CULTIVATION OF THE WATER MELON.—There is no plant more tender, or difficult of cultivation than the Water Melon. It is of a different genus from the Musk Melon, which is, in comparison, hardy and certain in its crop. The latter may be grown in great perfection, in the same manner, as we will now direct for the cultivation of the former; with difference, that it may be planted a few days earlier; will bear transplanting from a hot-bed; and need not over 7 to 9 feet from hill to hill of this kind.

The best soil for the Water Melon, is a piece of meadow, or old sod-land, ploughed the August preceding, as deep as possible; left to lie in the rough all winter: early in the spring cross ploughed; and if not pretty rich, had best have a good coat of old well-rotted stable-yard or chip manure, scattered over it, previous to the second ploughing. This is better than putting the manure in the hill; as on examation, it will be found that the roots of this plant spread over the whole space, from hill to hill, and moreover are always to be found within three or four inches of the surface. About the third week of April—I speak of the vicinity of Cincinnati—let the ground be marked out by running light furrows with the plough, twelve feet apart, crossed by others at the same distance. Where these intersect, form a flat hill of 15 or 18 inches in diameter, and not over three inches in height. Immediately, if the weather is mild and favorable, plant 6 or 8 good sound seeds at one side of the hill. As soon as these appear above the ground, or on that day week after they were planted, put as many more of the same variety, on the other side—and it is good practice, to make a third planting one week after the second. You thus secure a sufficiency of good, stout plants in each hill. When the plants are yet in the cotyledon or seed leaf, go over each hill, and with the finger gently withdraw the earth from about each plant nearly to where the rootlets appear. This will in a measure prevent the cutworm's attack; will harden the stem, and, prevent its damping off, if a cold wet spell come on. Leave at least 8 or 10 good, stout plants in each hill, thinning them out gradually, as they seem to require room—until when they begin to vine out, all may be removed but two. In the meantime the ground must be kept clear of weeds by the use of the plough or cultivator, and hoe. When the plants have vined out about a foot, go over them for the last time; levelling off the ground and forming a neat, flat hill of two feet and a half round the plants, but taking care not to draw any earth up to the stems. After this they require no farther attention. A few weeds scattered about, of a trailing growth, will be of advantage rather than otherwise; for if there is nothing for the plants to attach themselves to, by their tendrils, the first gust that comes, will blow them about in every direction, to their certain injury—they ought never to be disturbed or displaced. Care should be taken to procure sound seed, of a good sort.* The best and largest we have met with, were the Black Spanish, the Long Island, the Ice Rhind, and Goodwin's Imperial

The cut worm is the great enemy to our water melons, sweet potatoes, and early corn. The best cure is fall and winter ploughing—but where this has been neglected, much of the picking by hand, I have been assured by a gentleman of experience, may be rendered unnecessary, by scattering a little salt round the margin of each hill—that the worm in its night journies in search of food, will never cross the line thus drawn.

It has often been attempted to grow the water melon in a hot bed, and transplant, but never to our knowledge, with success. It might however be done, by planting in small pots, taking care to harden the plants before setting them out, and carefully turning the ball of earth, enclosing the roots into the hill. T. A.

*Experience has shown that seed procured at the east, say New Jersey, where the melon grows in great perfection, will produce a superior quality, as to size and flavor. And none other than the eastern seed should be planted, as those from the products of this country depreciate about the same proportion as the Wethersfield Union.

A sandy or alluvial soil is preferable for the melon; but a clay sod managed as above, will answer well, from the fact that sod causes the ground to remain mellow and loose which seems to be the state required for the prosperity of this vine.

For eastern seed the hill should be about 20 feet apart, as the main stem will run nearly that length, throwing out lateral branches some ten or twelve feet long. And if vines of any description run together so thick that they shade each other, so as to exclude the sun, the fruit will fall off.—[ED. REC.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... JUNE 30, 1841.

THE FISCAL AGENT.—The plan of Secretary Ewing for a Fiscal Agent to the Government, as communicated to the United States Senate, is in substance as follows. We may suppose this to embrace the principles of such a National Bank as the Whigs desire.

It is to be established in the District of Columbia, and to be called the "Fiscal Bank of the U. S."—capital $30,000,000, with power to establish branches in the States with their assent. The Government to subscribe one-fifth of the capital. The amount of the 4th instalment now due to the States to be subscribed by the U. S. for the use of the States. For the two amounts (equal to ten millions) ■ stock to be created having 5 per cent. interest redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after 15 years. The remaining twenty millions to be subscribed by individuals. To be seven Directors. Two appointed by the President and Senate, and five to be elected by the stockholders. The President to be chosen by the Directors out of their own body. The Bank to be a fiscal agent to the Government, to receive and disburse the public funds and perform the duties of pension Agent without charge

The dividends to be limited to 6 per cent.—deficiency, if any to be made up; surplus, if over two millions, to be passed to the credit of the U. S. Treasurer. Not to owe more than 20 millions above its deposits. Debts due the Bank not to exceed its capital and 75 per cent. thereon. It is not to deal in any thing except coin, bullion, promissory notes, and inland bills of exchange; to take no more than 6 per cent. on loans; to discount no paper having more than 180 days to run; no debt to be renewed; not to loan the United States at any one time more than three millions, nor any State more than $100,000; to contract no debt longer than a year; to issue no notes less than $10.—Officers of the Institution to be prohibited from borrowing, directly or indirectly.

The Books of the Institution to be open at all times to the inspections of the Secretary of the Treasury, to a Committee of either House of Congress, to a Committee of the Stockholders, and to the Directors. The Branches not to issue notes, but may sell drafts not less than $40.—The Bank not to suspend specie payment; not to pay any thing but coin or bullion for its own notes. The Corporation to exist for 20 years.

DECISION OF THE SUPREME COURT IN THE YORK PRESBYTERIAN CASE.—English Presbyterian Congregration, vs. James Johnson, et al.—This was an action of ejectment brought to try the title to certan property in York, under the following facts:

The property was granted by the Penns in 1785, for the use of the England Presbyterians, in and near the town of York. In 1562 and since, the congregation there was connected with the Donnegal Presbytery, and that was afterwards merged in the Carlisle Presbytery. A portion of the congregation, in October 1838, seceded from the Carlisle Presbytery, denied their jurisdiction, and refused to submit to them. These were known by the name of New School party. The other portion of the congregation, known as the Old School, adhered to the Carlisle Presbytery, and are still in connexion. The latter being ousted of the property brought suit, and upon a decision in the court below against them, carried it up to the Supreme Court by writ of error. The Supreme Court being divided three to two. Judge Gibson declared the opinion affirming the decision below, on the ground that the new school were the majority—Judges Huston and Kennedy dissenting.

MURDER AT ALBARY.—On Sunday last a man by the name of Aaron Hughs, formerly a captain of a canal boat, murdered his wife under the following circumstances. He had always lived with his wife until last fall, when he treated her so badly that she left him, and engaged as chambermaid, on board of another boat. On Saturday night last, he went on board the boat where his wife was, and remained there during the night. Early on Sunday morning, he got up, went and drank a glass of gin, returned to the boat, and with a pistol, shot his wife through the head. The inhuman monster denies the act!

STEAM ON THE OSAGE.—The Jefferson Missouri, Inquirer mentions the accomplishment by the steamer Leander, of a trip up the Osage river, as far as Osceola, with about two hundred tons of freight. Another trip is contemplated. Thus the feasibility of navigating this river by steam, almost to the utmost verge of civilization, is proven, and a means of communication opened which will greatly facilitate the development of the resources of that vast and fertile region, which is now dimly known as the "Far West."

ARRIVAL OF THE PIRATES.—The New Orleans Picayune of the 10th inst. says: "The tow boat Swan arrived from the Balize this morning—she towed up the pilot schooner Argus, having on board Capt. Putron and his crew of seven men found on board the Piratical schooner, and six other suspicious characters since arrested. Nugent, found on board the tow-boat Tennesseean, had a large bloody Bowie knife concealed on his person.—They are now in the Parish Prison.

AMERICAN PRISONERS IN MEXICO.—Some months since accounts were published in the papers of the arrest of fifty or sixty Americans and Englishmen in California. The Brookly Star contains the following information in relation to them in a letter dated Santa Barbari, Upper California, Nov. 26:

"The principal author of these outrages was one Jose Castro, the perfect, or head police magistrate of California.—This Castro is an old revolutionizer himself, and has for some time, as it is supposed, been ambitious of becoming military commandant of California, ignorantly supposing that his zeal against the foreigners would recommend him to the favorable notice of the Mexican Government. The forty-seven prisoners were put in charge of this Castro, but on his arrival at San Blas, instead of finding himself a great man, as he anticipated, he found himself in jail, through the influence of the English and American consuls at that place. After being in jail for twenty-two days, he was ordered to Mexico to give an account of himself to the Government. One of the prisoners from the State of Mississippi, Nathan Daylay, has been released by death, the other forty-six prisoners are yet at Nepic, a city inland from San Blas, where they are provided for by the Consuls, and awaiting their trial. Their accquittal is certain, and heavy damages will unquestionably be obtained from the Mexican Government, if the Governments of the United States and England have any regard for the rights of their citizens residing in foreign countries. In consequence of these difficulties, Captain Forrest has ordered Mr. Estabrook to remain here for the present, as Consular Agent for the United States. I expect one of our ships of war will return here during the winter or spring ensuing, when he will probably rejoin the squadron."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.—The Providence, R. I. Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, commenced its session at Providence on the 9th inst., Bishop Hedding presiding. Sixty-one of the clergy were in attendance. An interesting discussion arose upon the practice of depending upon notes or sketches in the delivery of discourses. They were recommended for preparation, but not to be used in the pulpit. This being a new Conference, having been set off from the "New England," a Conference Missionary Society was organized. The presiding Bishop to be the President. On Saturday five were elected each to the office of deacon, and two to the office of elder. A committee was appointed to co-operate with the Wesley Institute, in behalf of theological education. The committee was instructed to advocate its location at the Wesleyan University.—Phil. Chron.

IMPORTANT TO SHIP MASTERS.—The New London Advocate says, a decision has recently been made before the court of Admiralty in England, by which it appears that a vessel falling in with an abandoned wreck at sea, and taking therefrom any cargo or other property, must not only note the fact, time, and place on the log book, but also the kind and quantity of each, with the marks and numbers of each if there be any. The captain of a British ship fell in with the wreck of a schooner, from which he took a quantity of cigars, tobacco, logwood, rigging, &c., the whole valued say at £150. Upon his arrival at New Orleans he caused the whole to be sold at auction. The fact was noted on the log-book, but not with the required specifications. He was fined fifty pounds and twice the amount of property, although it appears he was ignorant of the law! It is said that the same law would take effect in this country.

REMOVAL OF REMAINS.—The State of Delaware has made arrangements to remove the remains of Col. John Hazlett from their resting place in this city to the burial ground of the Presbyterian church, in Dover. Col. H. commanded the Delaware division at the battle of Princeton, where he fell. The ceremony will take place on the 3d of July.—Phil. paper.

POISONING.—About thirty blacks were poisoned at Baton Rogue recently, by drinking water from a well in which a copper pipe communicating with an engine, had been inserted. It is further stated three have since died from the fatal effects.

A RICH FIELD.—The Kentucky Commonwealth speaks of a field near Frankfort, which has been cultivated in corn for nearly half a century without a change of crop or manure, and the yield two years ago was more than eight barrels to the acre.

THE ST. LOUIS MURDERERS.—The St. Louis New Era of the 28th announces the conviction of Warwick, the last of the four murderers. The whole four have now been convicted, and will speedily suffer the penalty of the law.

MARCH OF IMPROVEMENT.—An overland mail from Bombay to Great Britain, twice a month, is in contemplation by the East India Government. This will prove an advantage to the mercantile interest.

SWIFT.—The President's Message was carried from Wheeling to Columbus, O., a distance of 127 miles, in 14 hours; making the whole distance from Washington to Columbus, in 44 hours and three quarters.

RADICALISM.—A writer in the N.E.Christian Advocate is saying many good things about Radicalism.—From one of his articles we clip the following. It is truth. Mr. Wesley never gave his sanction to Methodist Episcopacy. The course pursued by Asbury and Coke was never marked out by that eminent man of God. Hence we challenge a refutation of the statement in the extract.

"Radicalism is almost as old as Methodist episcopacy, and though it has generally been in the minority, and always the weaker party, it has nevertheless, at different times, been active, and has shown a spirit and courage worthy of a better fate if not of a better cause. I apprehend that many in these latter days, labor under a mistake as to the origin of what is called radicalism; many appear to think that it is American in its origin, and that it is the offspring of our democracy, but nothing can be farther removed from the truth. It is an exotic plant, and was first introduced into this country in 1788 or '89, but a little more than three years after the creation of Methodist Episcopacy. But who was the first radical? I answer, Rev. John Wesley, as the following letter will show. This letter, it should be understood, was written to Bishop Asbury, about three years after he assumed the episcopal functions. The letter is as follows;—

"LONDON, Sept. 20, 1788.

"There is, indeed, a wide difference between the relation wherein you stand to the Americans, and the relation wherein I stand to all the Methodists. You are the elder brother of the American Methodist: I am, under God, the father of the whole family. Therefore I naturally care for you all, in a manner no other person can do. Therefore I, in a measure, provide for you all: for the supplies which Dr. Coke provides for you, he could not provide were it not for me—were it not that I not only permit him to collect but support him in so doing. But on one point my dear brother, I am a little afraid both the Doctor and you differ from me. I study to be little, you study to be great; I creep, you strut along. I found a school, you a college. Nay, and call it after your names. O, beware! Do not seek to be something! Let me be nothing, and Christ all in all.

One instance of this, your greatness, has given me great concern. How can you, how DARE you suffer yourself to be called a BISHOP? I shudder at the very thought. Men may call me a knave or a fool, a rascal, a scoundrel, and I am content, but they shall never, by my consent, call me a bishop! For my sake, for God's sake for Christ's sake, put a full end to this.—Let the Presbyterians do what they please, but let the Methodist know their calling better.

Thus, my dear Franky, I have told you all that is in my heart, and let this, when I am no more seen, bear witness how sincerely I am your affectionate brother,

JOHN WESLEY."

"I shall not take upon myself to justify this language, on the part of Mr. Wesley, for my object is not to prove it right or wrong, but to identify and embody radicalism; and no one can deny that Mr. Wesley was notoriously radical. The utterance of such language at the present time, would not only be pronounced radicalism just "going to seed," but it would be considered a crime worthy to be punished by expulsion from the church, a crime tenfold worse than slaveholding.

"Radicalism being thus introduced, it soon took root in American soil, and has existed to a greater or less extent ever since, in the M. E. Church. Every effort has been made to root it out, but it has never been entirely exterminated, and some fear it never will be. They have tried by cutting it down, and tearing it out by the roots, and at times it has appeared to be entirely eradicated, but soon it has been seen sprouting and sending out its troublesome branches."

ACCIDENT ON THE NORWICH AND WORCESTER RAILROAD.—On Friday afternoon last, as the train of cars were passing from Worcester to Norwich, in North Killingly, the front axle of the locomotive broke off while travelling at the usual, rapid rate, and tore up the whole track a distance of 30 feet. The engineer as soon as possible disengaged the engine from the cars, and the engine ran off the track to the left, at a descent of ten feet, and was crushed to atoms, with the engineer and conductor upon it, who very fortunately escaped without any serious injury. The coolness and intrepidity of the engineer probably saved many lives. At imminent risk he detached the locomotive from the train. The news of the accident was forwarded, and another train come on for the passengers.

We understand that the greatest dissatisfaction exists at Nauvoo, amongst those who have lately arrived from England. It is said that many have determined to leave—and that letters have been sent to England, warning their friends, who had designed to emigrate, of the sad state of things in the city and the Church. Mr. Rigdon on the contrary, informed us last week, that in general, the new comers were well satisfied. Be it as it may, it is certain that some have left both the city and the Church—not believing on the one hand, in the mission of the Prophet, and on the other, dissatisfied with the temporal government, which is exercised over them.—St. Louis New Era.

GALVINA, the musician, died at Liespic recently at the age of 104. His father, the celebrated singer, died at Rome in 1825 at the age of 138.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE. Six large railroad cars were precipitated from an inclined plain into the river at Hudson, N. Y., on Saturday. The train was materially injured, and one of the cars entirely lost. The worst part of the accident was the death of several persons in the cars. The bodies of two have been recovered—and shockingly mutulated. How many were killed is not yet known. The accident occurred through the bad action of the breaks. The cars were permitted to run down the descent as usual, by themselves, checked only by the attendant of each. The attendants used all their force to stop the speed of the train, but without success, as the awful result shows. The damages done to the cars is said to be twenty thousand dollars.

RAIL-ROADS.—There is now wanting only two or three links to complete the long line of rail-road from Maine to N. Carolina—twenty-four miles of which is between Hartford and Springfield, and fifty miles from New Haven to the State Line of New York, making one entire line from Buffalo on the west and Portland on the east to the city of Washington—in length of over 1000 miles. When this is completed we have an iron line from the east to the west, north to southwest, of continued lines with the exception of about fifty miles from Washington to Fredericksburgh, Virginia, of nearly 2000 miles.

THE MORMONS.—A letter from Nauvoo, states that Joe Smith, the leader of the Mormons, has been arrested by the authority of the Governor of Illinois—that the Mormons had taken possession of a large tract of land without authority, and that the strongest excitement prevailsd against them in the immediate neighborhood, and fearful apprehensions were entertained lest a sanguinary struggle should take place. The Commissioner sent by the Governor to survey the lands had been seized by the Mormons, and both parties labored under much excitement.—Bicknell.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT.—The Lancaster, Pa., Union states that a most painful accident occurred on the 6th instant at the raising of a barn on the farm of Mr. Martin Pfautz, 2¼ miles South-east of Strasburg. The scull of Mr. Heckman, one of the persons injured, was so terribly fractured, that he expired on the following day. Mr. Long had his back broken and is otherwise hurt. Several other persons whose names we have not heard, were considerably injured.

SUDDEN DEATH.—Within the last week ■ number of persons have died very suddenly. Three on Tuesday, in the District of Kensington; one a lady named Wells, expired while sitting in her rocking-chair. Her husband called her several times, and so natural was her countenance that he believed she refused to heed his call, and was not convinced of her demise until he took hold of her. She died without a struggle or a groan.—Phil. paper.

STEAMER DISASTERS.—The steamboat Maid of Orleans was recently sunk at Hat island, Mississippi, with a cargo of lead. The steamer Salem was snagged, on the 23d ult. near Vicksburgh. The Macedonia steamer took fire at Paducah, was scuttled and sunk, but afterwards raised.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP COLUMBIA,

AT BOSTON.

The Columbia steamer arrived at Boston on Wednesday evening, at half past 10 o'clock.—By Harnden's Express, we received the New York Herald, at twelve minutes past one o'clock yesterday. We gather the following highly interesting and important news.

She brings dates from London to the 4th, Paris to the 2d and Liverpool to the 4th, inclusive. She also brings us dates from Bombay to the 3d of May—just six weeks back. And Canton to the 1st of April, only 77 days since.

The overland mail from Bombay, May 2d, reached London on the evening of the 2d of June.

The principal feature in the news is, that the war has again broken out in China, because the Emperor would not ratify the treaty. The British have captured Canton and all the forts on the river without the loss of a single man.—The trade is open to Canton, the owners of vessels running all risks. Canton was taken on the 25th of February; on the same day Chusan was given up to the Chinese. High Commissioner Keshen has been disgraced and sent to Pekin in irons. The Chinese lost 400 men.

An American gentleman from Canton says the city is doomed to the flames. There are 200,000 Chinese starving in the neighborhood for want of employment, who are as ready to sack the place as the sailors are.

Lord Stanley has withdrawn his famous registration bill for the present session.

PARLIAMENTARY.—Nothing important has been done in either House. The debate on Peel's "no Confidence Motion" commenced on the 27th of May, and was continued next night. The adjourned debate was opened by Serjeant Talford on the 3d June. We give Sir Robert Peel's speech at the opening of the debate.—Several of the leading members have already spoken; the debate was expected to continue ten nights.

THE PRESIDENT STEAMSHIP.—The settlement of the risks upon the President entered at Lloyd's was to have taken place to-day, but was postponed to the 11th inst. to allow further time for news respecting her.—London Times, June 3d.

DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT.—We learn from the best authority that the dissolution of Parliament will take place about the 12th of this month. The proclamation is ready, and only waits the Queen's signature. The new Parliament is to meet on the 4th August. We trust that the conservatives in this district will be fully on the alert, but the remark is almost unnecessary, for the very best spirit prevails all through the country.—Hart. Jour.

The house of Grant & Co. of Glasgow, has failed for £45,000.

MURDER ON SHIPBOARD.—Patrick Cahill, a passenger in the ship United States, at Liverpool, from New Orleans, killed the steward, Eli Robinson, in a fit of passion.

The London, Yarmouth, N. S. at Liverpool, May 9, lat. 43, long. 66, fell in with the Paragon, Liverpool to Halifax, in a sinking state, having been run aboard by a large American ship the day previous, and took off the crew.—May the 12th, lat. 43, long. 50, the London struck an iceberg, and lost bowsprit, foremast, maintopmast, &c., and stove in her larboard bow. Shortly afterwards heard a crash, which was supposed to proceed from another vessel running against the ice, and it is feared sunk, but the weather was too thick to distinguish her.

LIVERPOOL, JUNE 4.

Another Steamer seen—Probable safety of the President.—We have had a great many arrivals of vessels from foreign ports, to-day, and among them the Fortitude, from Buenos Ayres; the Captain (Arbuthnot) of which states that on 27th May, at about 5 A. M. lat. 47 N. long. 24 30 West., about 10 miles distant, he saw a very large steamer steering to the N. E. without a funnel, a crippled foremast, and large paddle boxes, painted of a dark color, with a large square topsail set on the main topmast, a top gallant sail on the foretopmast, and with fore and aft sails. The steamer was making very slow progress. This intelligence communicated by Capt. Arbuthnot, has excited the most intense interest here, and many persons still hope that from concurrent circumstances, it may be the President; and probably the steamer seen by the Portuguese brig Conde de Palma, on the 23d April, in lat. 31, and long. 40. Others suppose it to be the Britannia steamer, from Halifax, but this impression is by no means general: towards the close of the day the opinion was very strong that the vessel seen by the Fortitude will prove to be the President: but it is mere conjecture.

LIVERPOOL, 6 15 P. M.—The impression gains ground every hour that the steamer seen by the Fortitude is the President.

Among those interested in the fate of the crew and passengers on board the President, and who called at the company's office in Billiter court, yesterday afternoon, anxiously inquiring if any intelligence had been received respecting her, was the eldest son of Mr. Power. Inquiries were also made on the part of his grace the Duke of Richmond, (whose second son, Lord Fitzroy Lennox, is a passenger) Mrs. Roberts, wife of the commander, &c.

THE BRITANNIA STEAM SHIP.—The non arrival in England of this vessel which ran on the rocks at Halifax, has occasioned great uneasiness in London, as appears by the following:

THE ATLANTIC STEAMERS.—The arrival of the Halifax steamers has hitherto been so regular and punctual, that some little disappointment appears to be experienced if the slightest delay takes place in their appearance. The Britannia, which was advertised to leave Boston on the 16th ult., was, according to the usual calculation, due on Sunday last. It is not improbable that she may have been detained a few days at the other side, in order to bring some definite information as to the result of the present steps in the case of McLeod, who it is known has been removed from Lockport to New York. We hope to see the Britannia in the course of the day.

THE WEATHER AND CROPS.—Since the date of our last, the weather has been exceedingly hot, and has had a powerful influence in forwarding vegetation. The brairds, which in many situations during the cold weather, showed the effects of the worm, are now coming away freely, and promise luxuriant crops. Indeed, harvest prospects have not at this early stage looked so promising for many years.—Ayr. Advertiser.

THE CENSUS.—Great preparations are making all over England, in relation to the coming census, which is to be taken immediately.

DEATHS.—Rear Admiral Samuel Motley, and Admiral Sir George Montague Hamilton, Sir Robert Wilmot Horton, and the widow of Sir Everard Home are dead.

CHINA.—Most Important Intelligence from China, Capture of the Bogue Forts and the City of Canton by the British.—The intelligence received from China during the past month is of a highly interesting and important nature. Our latest news from Macao is to the 31st of March. Keshen's continued procrastination having at length exhausted Captain Elliott's patience, the Nemesis steamer was dispatched from Macao on the 14th February, with the draft of a treaty for the approval and ratification of the imperial high commissioner. The commander of the steamer was ordered to wait at the Bogue for a reply until the 18th, and in the event of his not receiving one by that day, to return immediately to Macao. This he accordingly did on the 19th, Keshen not having made his apperance. A circular was then published, stating that the squadron were then moving towards the Bocca Bigres. On the following day Captain Elliott received a message from Keshen, in which the latter stated his willingness to sign the treaty, and excused his delay in not coming to the Bogue when the steamer was there, by alleging that he had been detained by some piratical boats. This appears to have been a mere ruse to gain time. On the 24th of February a notification of the renewal of hostilities was issued to her Britannic Majesty's subjects.

Towards the close of the morning of the 25th of February, three howitzers and a party of Sepoys were landed at Chuen-pee, from the Nemesis and the boats of the squadron. The Cinese kept up a desultory fire while the darkness lasted. Before the dawn of day a battery had been erected with sand-bags and the guns got into position. From these as soon as it was sufficiently light, the British returned the fire of the Chinese. At 11, A. M., the tide served and the signal was made for the squadron to weigh. H. M. S. Calliope bearing the board pendant of the Commodore, led the attack against North Wantong, followed by the Samange, Druid, Wellesly, Sulpher, and Modeste. The Blenheim, and Melville with the Queen steamer, opened their fire on the fort at Chuen-pee. By noon the action had become general, and the firing constant and heavy on all sides. In the meantime the Memesis and Madagascar steamers, with numerous boats in tow, ran in close to Ty-Cock Tow, and landed the troops under the command of Major Pratt. Shortly afterwards the whole of the forts were in possession of the British forces. Official notifications were issued in the course of the day; one by the Plenipotentiary intimating the capture of the forts, the other by the Commodore, authorizing merchant vessels to proceed to the Bogue.

The number of prisoners taken at Chuen-pee is estimated at 1000, and the killed and wounded on the sides of the Chinese are said to be very numerous.

It is evident that an attack on the Bogue forts should have been resorted to in the onset. The great loss of time and expenditure of public money which has occurred since the first arrival of the squadron off Macao, would have been avoided, as also the mortality which has so dreadfully thinned the ranks of the unfortunate regiments that were quartered in Chusan.

That island has been evacuated and delivered up to the Chinese, order to that effect having been transmitted by Captain Elliott, when he was laboring under the unhappy delusion that the Chinese were inclined to fulfil their promises of indemity. The British who were detained prisoners at Ningpoo were released as soon as the evacuation of Chusan was completed. Captain Anstruther, Lieutenant Douglass, R. N., Mrs. Nable, and their companions in captivity, are now safe under the British flag.

The whole of the European troops, on leaving Chusan proceeded to Hongkong, and consequently have been available in the hostile operations that have been carried on, since the date of the action at the Bogue. But no greater proof need be adduced of the wretched management of Capt. Elliott, and his utter incapacity to fulfil the responsable duties of the station which he holds, than the fact that three transports, with several hundreds of the Bengal volunteers, were ordered to proceed direct from Chusan to Calcutta. On their arrival at Signapore they heard of the renewal of hostilities, and were detained at that port, awaiting farther instructions. The troops were so diminished in numbers by death and sickness, during their sojourn at Chusan, that the Bengal volunteers may be considered as forming one-third part of the effective land forces attached to the expedition. Yet at a time when the presence of every man is so important, the volunteers are several hundred miles from the scene of attack, the entire blame of which rests with Captain Elliott, whose reliance on Chinese good faith in opposition to the oppinions of all well-informed persons on the spot, appears to have been caused by something bordering on insanity.

We have extracted various items of Chinese intelligence from the Calcutta papers of the 30th of April. On the morning of that day the Queen steamer, from Macao the 31st of March, arrived at Calcutta with Commodore Sir James Gordon Blemer. His Excellency is said to have come to India for the purpose of consulting the Governor Gen. and obtaining reinforcements. The British troops have possession of the factory at Canton, but it would appear there is a provisional Chinese government in the city. The Calcutta Courier states that the forcing the passage between the Bogue and Canton was most gallantly effected. The Chinese lost 490 men. The English had only six wounded.

We have been favored with private letters from Singapore to the 10th ult., Macao to the 28th, and Canton to the 26th of March. From these we learn that Canton was almost deserted. The Hong merchants remained on the spot, but said that the people were afraid to trade whilst the men of war remained in the river. The Chinese at Canton now believe that no traffic of importance can be carried on until the whole question is definitely settled.

No dispatches had been received in Canton since the Emperor's reply to the announcement of the Bogue forts. The imperial chop breathed nothing but vengeance and defiance to the English. This induced the Commodore to start immediate for Calcutta. He at the same time ordered her Majesty's troop-ship Jupiter to proceed to Cannamore for the 94th regiment. A report was prevalent among the Chinese that the Emperor's nephew had arrived in Canton, and ordered all the chops about the opening of the trade to be cancelled.

Three Englishmen, two of them officers of the Blenheim, were carried off from ■ passage boat near Macao, on the 26th of March, and have not since been heard of. It is supposed they were captured by order of the Mandrains.

The Commodore's principal object in coming to Canton is said to be the expediting the dispatch of reinforcements. His excellency being of opinion that matters cannot be satisfactorily arranged without another visit to the Gulf of Petchhell.

Canton is in possession of the British troops, and a truce had been agreed upon between the new commissioner and Capt. Elliott; the trade is to be re-opened at Canton, pending the imperial decision.

The accumulation of goods outside Canton is immense, and will, without doubt, be thrown on the market. Prices will rule very low—Patna is quoted at 400 to 410 Sp. dollars, Benares 400, and Malwa 410.

It appears that after Capt. Elliott's notice of the re-opening of the trade, nine American and fourteen British ships proceeded to Whamppa, but in a few days new obstacles were thrown in their way, it being intimated that the Chinese traders were all armed, as the ships of war were so near Canton, and that no trade would be carried on until they were removed. It is said Captain Elliott was inclined to yield this point. Before, however, any arrangements could be made, the reply of the Emperor to the dispatch announcing the destruction of the Bogue Fort was received, which was fierce in the extreme, and orders a war of extermination to be carried against the English. The notices posted by the Canton authorities on the walls, announcing the opening of the trade, were pulled down and all communication with the English ordered to be cut off.

FRANCE.—Paris, June 2—On Saturday the trial of Darmes and his accomplices before the Chamber of Peers, was brought to a close. Considere was acquitted, Duclus delivered over to the ordinary tribunals, and Darmes condemned to death.

The sentence of the Court of Peers was carried into effect this morning, on Darmes. The preparations, which were made at a very early hour this morning, at the Barriere St. Jacques, gave notice to immediate neighbors, that a criminal was to suffer the extreme penalty of the law within a few hours; the name of Darmes transpired, and a large crowd was collected.—Several squadrons of Municipal Guards and other troops kept the ground, and perfect order was maintained. Darmes was brought from the prison of Luxembourg, and mounting the fatal scaffold, at half past six, suffered immediate decapitation. His behaviour was firm, and he appeared resigned to his fate.

THE TREATY OF LONDON.—La Presse states positively that Lord Palmerston refused to sign the final protocol of the conference of London, alleging as his reason that he should be first officially informed that Mehemit Ali had accepted the hatti scheriff of the 19th of April.

GERMANY.—The Constitutionnel publishes a letter, dated Frankfort, 22d ult., which announces that the British Charge d'Affairs to the Germanic Confederation had fled from that city with an English lady, a married woman, and the mother of 11 children. The Constitutionnel adds that this scandalous affair had caused ■ great sensation at Frankfort. It was not known what direction the parties had taken. The husband of the lady had pursued them to Belgium.

RUSSIA.—Accounts from Moscow to the 10th of May, mention that the hopes already entertained in Central Russia, of the coming harvest, had led to a fall of twenty per cent. on the price of corn.—Prussian State Gazette.

THE PRESIDENT STEAMER.—The following is what the Palma reports:

The captain of the Portugues ship Conde de Palma, which arrived at Lisbon from Rio de Janiero, on the 6th of May, saw a large steamer under canvass on the 23d and 24th April, but did not speak her. The following is a copy of the Log:—"On the 23d of April, 6 o'clock, P. M., in lat. 31 24 N., long. 50 43 W., saw a very large steamer, without showing her colors, under canvass; the morning, at 6 o'clock, saw her again under topsail and latine.—The following day the wind veered to the North and blew strong, which would prevent the steamer approaching the Islands. Neither smoke nor paddles were in motion."

On the 25th the wind veered to N. W., and blew strong, which would prevent the said steamer reaching the Western Isles.

THE PRESIDENT.—(Extract of a letter.)—The following is what I consider the most favorable in the new hopes opened to us by the steamer seen on the 22d, in lat. 29, lon. 40. The Times of this morning contains all that is known on the subject, except the certainty that the steamer then and there could not have been the Dee. On the same day the Dee spoke the Thompson from Palermo to N. Y., (New York, I presume,) in lat. 41 lon. 42, (compare this with the other, and there is no possibility of their identity.) This intelligence has been received from the agent of the Navigation Company at Liverpool, and will, I have not the least doubt, be confirmed by the log of the Dee, for which an application has been made to the Admirality, as yet unanswered.

RESOLVED.—The Presbytery of Niagara, New York, have passed a formal resolution, declaring that Byron's works and Bulwers novels "are books of an infidel and licentious character."

THE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... JUNE 30, 1841.

THE STEAMER PRESIDENT.—From the Foreign news in this paper, there is some ground to hope that this vessel is still safe.

☞The merchants of McConnelsville, Ohio, have signed a pledge against circulating shinplaster money.

EDITORIAL CHANGE.—A. Underhill retires from the editorship of the Massillon Gazette, and F. Keath takes his place.

DAYTON.—This town has become reconciled to hearing Abolition lectures, some two or three of which have recently been delivered without any disturbance.

MCLEOD AFFAIR.—This case continues to occupy the attention of Congress. It appears to be made a political party matter, and of course the occasion for speech making.

IMPORTANT DISPATCHES.—It is said that Henry A. Wells, Esqr., passenger in the Columbia steam ship, is the bearer of important dispatches from the American embassador, at the court of St. James, to the government at Washington.

JOHN W. BEAR.—This person, who was recently appointed Sub-Indian Agent at Upper Sandusky, says the Ohio Statesman, has been removed. The appointment is said to have given much dissatisfaction.

LAST SHIFT TO RAISE THE WIND.—M. T. C. Gould, of Fallstown, Beaver, Pa., proposes to publish, in pamphlet form, the trial of John F Waddee;—$4 per dozen;—50 cents single copy. What next?

HOUSE FLIES.—Providence, in the dispensation of His kindness, has relieved us, measurably this year, from this afflicting plague. We never before, saw them so scarce, tho' a few families, in our vicinity, have plenty of them.

☞The loss of the packet ship Sampson, bound from London to New York, is confirmed. She struck a rock, running in the fog, near Whale island. The cargo received but little damage, and the passengers all got safely to the shore, but the vessel was abandoned.

MAST.—If Providence is afflicting the community, by curtailing the crops, He seems to be providing for this section in another way. From present indications we shall have a plentiful White Oak Mast. This kind makes about as good pork as corn, while the nut mast makes it too oily.

"SPIRITUAL EXISTENCE."—We received a communication on this subject some time ago, which we have recently given a perusal. The article evinces considerable research, but we do not judge it suitable for the press without more attention than we have time to give it. Meantime, if the author will continue to practice with the pen, he will, no doubt, be ultimately successful.

BROTHER JONATHAN.—The last Br. Jonathan comes to us enclosing an "Extra," containing the 86th chapter of "Charles O'Malley," and a notice of "Tyrone Power," the actor, who is supposed to have perished with the Steamer President. What has become of the "Dollar Magazine?" We have not seen it for some six or eight weeks past. However, we are not complaining, as we have been liberally treated by the establishment, CONGRESS.—This body is doing but little of importance to the nation. The Extra Session, seems to promise, not much, except wind and words. We think it therefore hardly worth while boring the reader with a general abstract of its proceedings. Meantime, if they should quit speech making and do something to relieve the nation, from its present embarrassment, we will take pleasure in recording it.

THE CROPS.—We have paid some attention to what the papers have said on the subject of the prospect of the present crops. We gather therefrom, that in the counties around Philadelphia, Pa., including New Castle, Delaware, they are quite promising. But generally, throughout the country, the Wheat, Oats, and Grass, are much injured by the cold wet weather in the spring, and the scorching drought which followed. We hear complaints, to this effect, from Illinois, Indiana, Western Pa., the lower counties of Delaware, this State throughout and from sections of the North, though there has been partial showers which have greatly benefited certain neighborhoods. The prospect for corn has much improved since the late rains, of which we continue to have plenty.

The following Address, to Bishop Andrew, of the Meth. Episcopal Church, is from the pen of the Rev. Lewis Garrett, of Nashville, Tenn. He is an aged and talented minister of the gospel, the prime of whose days has been given to build up the M. E. Church in Western Tennessee. He was among the early pioneers of Methodism in that section, and formerly greatly attached to the institutions of the church in which he had spent the most of his life. A few years since, while he conducted the "Western Methodist," one of the most popular papers that has ever been published in that church, we, having made some strictures upon the government of his church, he took us to task most severely therefor. But, he has since found, by sad experience, that all we said, about the episcopal government is true, and a great deal more we did not say. While conducting his paper, above, he admitted an article on the Dandyism of Methodism, which gave great offence to some of the managing spirits; this induced a campaign against him, which has ruined his temporal and greatly injured his spiritual interest. We give this letter to the Bishop to shew that some things can be done, in the South, as well as in the West.

We wish, however, to discriminate on this subject. These outrages upon the principles of justice and right, are not to be directly chargeable on the whole of the ministry and membership of that church, but on the principle rulers, who have the power to do, in such matters, as they please. The others are only censurable for sustaining them in such acts of injustice.

TO BISHOP ANDREW.

Rererend Sir: I need not inform you that you preside in an Annual Conference, as the Judge of law and of order—and that the General Conference has said, that the Bishop is to "decide on all questions of law"—or as the official organ has it, "to decide what is, or is not constitutional law," "or what is, or is not discipline." The question brought before you in 1837, by the impeachment of executive officers (Pitts and Andrews) was, whether a preacher in charge and Presiding Elder—or a committee and Quarterly Meeting Conference in the case of an accused local preacher, have "the right to judge of the magnitude of an alleged offence, and apportion the punishment." Now sir, I assert, and I suppose you will hardly deny, that this was a "question of law"—and it was explicitly laid in the bill of charges, that those officers did "claim the right," and the minutes or record, and the clearest evidence, prove that they did exercise that right. I then thought, and still think, that it was your province and duty to have decided this question—and as evidence of this, I referred you, in the bill of charges, to "Rule, chap. 1, sec. 20, and the minutes of the trial." If you could not then "decide the question of law," because the Presiding Elder suppressed the minutes you had a fair opportunity of doing so, and were urged by memorials to do so, in 1839 and 1840, when the minutes or Journal of the Quarterly Meeting Conference were at hand. It was a question of law too, involving the administration of discipline, which the Annual Conference was incompetent to "decide on"—having no authority from "constitutional law," or any rule of discipline. Can an Annual Conference try and decide on a case of impeachment, "for misrule or mal-administration?" Where is the law? Surely not in the book of discipline—and you ought to know it, if it is competent for you to "decide what is, or is not constitutional law—or what is or is not discipline"—which is your prerogative, agreeably to the sense of the General Conference.—You and the Annual Conference stickle about my not taking "an appeal," in bar of "further hearing," as a point of legality! I knew that there was no appeal for a local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church, from the decision of a Presiding Elder, or from an informal process or an illegal tribunal—but only "in case of condemnation," by a regular Quarterly Meeting Conference, according to law—and I knew, and can prove that there was no such "condemnation,"—and I therefore chose the mode of impeachment, as the only legal and proper course to test the "question of law," and to correct mal-administration—which I then believed, and still believe to be your province and duty as judge of law.—This important duty you evaded and still evade! You attempt to throw the responsibility upon the Annual Conference, which you permitted to act out of its proper sphere, for which you can show no law. The whole proceedings against me from the first hasty step, were informal and illegal—and the resolutions of the Tennessee Conference of 1837 and 1840, are null and void, being unauthorized by law, untrue in fact, and unsupported by evidence—therefore the question of law, of legal or illegal administration remains undecided—and the "odious resolution," fixing a stigma on my ministerial character, remains, on your Journal, uncancelled, regardless of the petition of weighty memorials, praying investigation. It must be a bad cause that will not bear the light of "impartial investigation!" The injustice done to me by rash misrule, or mob-law, and the reluctance manifested to investigate, or rectify or redress grievance, is the only apology I offer for publishing this communication, deeming a private address, which I have tried repeatedly, utterly useless—and because memorialists of high standing are treated with similar disregard. Certified copies of record were suppressed by Stephen G. Rozzel, at the late General Conference, I presume to prevent the detection of error in your administration. That there was error or a dereliction of duty, I most solemnly believe—for which I leave you to answer to the public, to your conscience, and your God. But I suppose you believe, with the Gen. Conference, that the Itinerant Ministry are "the divinely authorized expounders of moral discipline," and with the Church Organs at New York, and at Nashville, that "the society has no right to admit or expel church members," that it must never be "put to vote,"—that "a committee or select number has no right to determine the punishment!!" and that "a second vote" is "modern reformism;" and the fair inference is, that "the preacher in charge" and Presiding Elder, are the irresponsible arbiters of the rights of local preachers and lay members! Add to this that itinerant influence, and church papers improperly wielded, furnish ample means for the destruction of hard earned reputation, and no redress! a deplorable state of things. Injustice and tyranny dread the light of "impartial investigation" and "free discussion!" Frankly, an injured man, L. GARRETT.

HEAT IN MAINE.—The thermometer at Augusta, Me., on Tuesday last, at 1 P. M., stood at 100 in the shade.

THE PUBLIC WORKS OF ILLINOIS.—The Chicago American of a late date, says that the present Board of Canal Commissioners are determined to go on with the canal at any sacrifice. Six contracts, it is said, have been let in the vicinity of Ottowa for State bonds at par. Ottawa will be put up.

HORRIBLE DEATH.—The Richmond Star says a negro man was ran over by the cars on Saturday night, about three miles from the city and instantly killed.

THE PIRATES.—The New Orleans papers express a confidence, that those concerned in the piracy of the Ship Charles will shortly be taken. Numbers of volunteers have left that city in pursuit.

MAINE BOUNDARY.—The American Commissioners who commenced a survey of the North-Eastern Boundary last season, are about to assume their labors. A part of the expedition recently sailed for the St. Lawrence.

CHOLERA!—The editor of the Louisville City Gazette states that he had been informed by a physician in that city, that a case of real cholera occurred there on Thursday last.

FIVE PERSONS BURNED TO DEATH.—On Friday a dwelling house in the village of Kinderhook, N. Y., was burned down. It was occupied by a colored family. Five of its inmates, two grown persons and three children, perished in the flames.

MELANCHOLY.—A lad named Charles Rogers, was imitating the feats of the circus riders at Lyons, N. Y. a day or two ago, when he hung himself through mistake.

The steamboat has again commenced running between this place and Zanesville after a suspension of two or three weeks, on account of repairs on the public works. —McConnelsville Standard.

It gives us pain to state that our esteemed friend, Dr. Cotton, of Marietta, had his jaw fractured and was otherwise severely bruised, by the upsetting of his carriage.—ib.

The names of Messrs. Kelly and Williamson, were accidently omitted last week in the publication of the list of merchants of this place, who decline circulating the small notes issued by the corporations of Putnam and Lancaster. The determination was unanimous.—ib.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.—A fire broke out on Tuesday last in the extensive steam flouring mill of Mr. John McMechan, on Salt Creek, two miles from Taylorsville, which consumed in a few moments the entire building and all its contents. The mill had in it at the time the fire occurred twenty-two hundred bushels of wheat, and the quantity of flour we have not heard, not a particle of which was saved. The loss, which is estimated at about $7,000, falls heavily on the proprietor, as there was no insurance upon the property. The fire was purely the result of accident.—Zanes. Aurora.

A Protracted Meeting is now in progress at Pittsburg, attended by two delegates from the Baltimore Society of Reformed Drunkards. May much good come of it.—Mt. Pleas. Reg.

LOSS OF THE SHIP WILLIAM BROWN.—Capt. Harris, of this ill-fated ship, called upon us on Saturday. His details of the loss of the Wm. Brown and consequent sufferings were thrillingly interesting. He is a stout built, warm-hearted sailor, and during the recital of his hair-breadth escape, the tears ran down his hardy cheeks. The first suspicion, he says, he had of his contiguity to the ice, was the terrible collision. It was about 11 o'clock, and the night dark and foggy. He found as soon as the examination could be made, that his bows were stove in. His ship was going at the rate of nine knots, and soon began to fill. The passengers rushed from their berths in consternation. The boats were got out as soon as possible, and he freely told all on board what must be their fate. He was calm, and assured them that a portion would be saved if they did not overload the boats.

When the long boat was let down, the frantic people jumped into it promiscuously. He expresses surprise that it did not immediately fill. The jolly boat was let down with more caution astern by the sailors, and pushed from the ship. While they were calling to Captain Harris to save himself, the terrified women and children clung around him and plead that he would not desert them. Their screams were heart-rending. He did not leave the ship until her decks were nearly covered with water. When he leaped on board the jolly boat he found it overloaded, but both boats kept near the wreck, attached to it by lines, until it sunk, which took place in a few minutes after he left. Capt. Harris told the mate not to cut loose from the wreck until he should give the signal. Each stood ready with a hatchet. About 11 o'clock the ship had settled to her scuppers. Suddenly her bows went down and the crash of the falling masts told him that she was about to be engulphed forever. He had just time to sever his own rope, and give the word to the mate when the yawning deep swallowed up ship and passengers, accompanied by a terrible shriek. Not a fragment remained to tell where she was after the sea closed over her, except a large water cask. Both boats remained near the spot until next morning, when the horrors of their situation were fully disclosed.

Capt. Harris's boat was 12 feet long and contained 9 persons, while the long boat had crowded into it 40 persons. He says that they were so thick they could not move. They literally stood and lay upon each other. Most of the females were in their night clothes, and many of them were chilled to insensibility before morning, from the severity of the weather. The oars could not be reached, the water remained unbailed, and the boat lay utterly helpless upon the surface of the water. After taking a list of those on board and advising them to be of good cheer, Capt. Harris determined to try and reach Newfoundland. He had in his boat forty pounds of bread and a cannister with five gallons of water. He immediately put all on short allowance of half a gill of water three times a day, and at morning and evening one third of a sea biscuit. The case for his sail needles, which he exhibited to us, was the little vessel out of which they drank this precious allowance of water.

During the six days and nights they were in the boat, it rained and hailed, and the sailors suffered bitterly with cold in their feet. They could not change their position, and of course had no exercise, and the bottom of the boat was continually covered with water. The feet of all the men had frozen badly, but the woman did not suffer much, as the sailors each contributed of their clothing to preserve her from the cold. During this period Capt. Harris says he is not conscious of having slept a moment. He was at the helm constantly. It required the utmost care to prevent his little boat from shipping seas, which would at once have swamped her. He had a blanket hoisted as a sail. On the end of the boat hook a red handkerchief, as a signal of distress, was displayed. The oars were kept in motion during the day, but as the nights were foggy and dark, they remained motionless.

Two days before they were rescued, Capt. Harris says a schooner was seen approaching them. Their joy was intense, but when within half a mile, she changed her course. A fog came up and they lost sight of each other. Almost frantic, he made every possible cry of distress, and a horn was heard in the fog. Two days were elapsed after this before they were taken up by the French craft which rescued them. He said his resolution and courage were strong to the last, although the famished condition of his fellow-sufferers told him they could not hold out much longer. Yet when he reached the deck of the ship and felt that he was safe, his strength failed and he fell senseless. At this time, he supposed, the next day would have enabled him to reach land. It was his intention to get a supply of provisions and prosecute his perilous voyage. He found he was 200 miles from shore, among ice, and in a suffering state, and he abandoned the thought, and received every possible kindness from those who had rescued him and his companions from their peril.

Captain Harris believes nothing was done on board of the long boat but what inexorable necessity demanded. The mate said before they parted, that some of them would perish with exposure and want of provisions, and a slight breeze would swamp the boat. He relieved her by committing to a watery grave, those who were insensible and nearly dead, and thus saved the living. The idle fictions about cruelties practiced, were set afloat by French news runners. In conclusion, out of eighty-two souls on board, thirty-three were swallowed up in the fathomless ocean with the ship. Their anguish was terrific, and the scene appalling, as they crowded upon her bulwarks and rigging, still imploring of the hapless survivors to save them. But in that hour of terror, all considerations but self-preservation were forgotton. While vainly pleading for help, the mighty deep yawned, and husband and wife, child and parent, were instantly in the "deep ocean buried."—Captain Harris states that even now, he starts involuntarily in his sleep at the recollection of the appalling scenes he has witnessed. Never from his memory will be stricken out the horrors of that awful night!—N. Amer.

TO SUPERINTENDENTS IN THE OHIO DISTRICT.

The undersigned would respectfully suggest to our itinerant brethren the importance of accuracy and promptness in making report at the ensuing Annual Conference of the numbers we have in society. Care and pains should at all times be taken in this matter, but the present year especially, as the enumeration of our membership is to indicate what number of delegates our Conference will be entitled to send to the General Conference.

Another matter. As the annual volume of the Methodist Protestant, and also of the Western Recorder expires sometime in August, shortly previous to the sitting of our Conference, would it not be well for our brethren in the various circuit so far as practicable to collect what is due for each of those periodicals, and obtain as many new subscribers as possible, to commence with the ensuing volume? As Br. Springer will probably be in attendance, will not our brethren cheer his heart with a goodly amount of subscription money and a lot of new subscribers?

Respectfully, Yours, &c.,
A. H. BASSETT.

Finley, O., June 21, 1841.

Br. Hanna, of the Ia. Conference, is informed, that the appointment for his visit to Mill Creek will be at Poe's School House, in Morgan county. By visiting his father he can have a pilot from there on Friday morning, who will conduct him to the place.

There will be a camp-meeting, at our fourth quarterly meeting, including the 1st Sabbath in September, in Putnam county, Ia., eleven miles west of Danville, on the state road to Rockville, in the Collin's neighborhood. Help is wanted.

June 19, 1841.

The last quarterly meeting is appointed to suit the president's visit to Highland circuit, at Cove Run Meeting House, two miles N. W. Bainbridge, O., to commence on the last Saturday, in July. Brs. Dobbins, Dalbey, Clemmons, and Boyd, together with all others who can make it convenient are requested to attend. Brethren take into consideration our necessities and comply with our request if possible. I. EDWARDS, Sup.

June 23, 1841.

More definite information is called for, as it respects the place of the sitting of the next Ia. Conference. It is said to be appointed at the White River Meeting House, in Johnson county. But it is desired, of some one who has the information, to state, in our paper, near what town, or on what leading road this Meeting House is situated.

A camp-meeting will commence on Friday, the 20th August, at East Middleburgh, Logan, O., and will continue until the following Sabbath week. It will also be the time of our next quarterly meeting. We respectfully invite Brs. Barnes, J. Flood, Jr., Young, and Guest to our aid. I. C. HUNT.

June 21, 1841.

Br. Addis we made out to get the money off, you allude to.

Br. Earl, all right.

CHRISTIAN CONFESSIONS IN HIGH PLACES.

THE KING OF PRUSSIA.

On the occasion of his Coronation, the new King thus acknowledged his responsibility to the King of Kings and Lord of Lords:

"I recognize before you all," said he, "that I hold my crown in trust from the Lord, and that I must account to Him for every day and hour of my reign. This is the security I offer you for the future; nor can I, nor any body else, give a better security; it has more authority, more binding force, than all the oaths of a coronation, than all the pledges written upon parchment or upon brass; it comes from the heart, and has its foundation in faith."

THE LATE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

In connexion with the preceding, we subjoin the declaration of President Harrison, at the close of his Inaugural Address:

"I deem the present occasion sufficiently important and solemn to justify me in expressing to my fellow citizens, a profound reverence for the christian religion, and a thorough conviction that sound morals, religious liberty, and a just sense of religious responsibility, are essentially connected with all true and lasting happiness, and to that good Being who has blessed us by the gifts of religious freedom, who watched over and prospered the labors of our fathers, and has hitherto preserved to us institutions far exceeding in excellence those of any other people, let us unite in fervently commending every interest of our beloved country in all future time."

Recently, in a ministerial meeting, for conversation and devotion, we heard one of the members say, that when he read this passage in the President's Address, he fell on his knees, and gave thanks to God for the gracious token. Others expressed similar gladness and gratitude.—Doubtless myriads of Christians felt their hearts grow warm when they read it.

AN EX-PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The following is the conclusion of J. Q. Adams' argument before the Supreme Court, in the case of the Amistad captives. We copy from the Emancipator:

In closing, Mr. Adams said:

May it please your Honors:—On the 7th of February, 1804, now more than 37 years ago, my name was recorded on the rolls of this court, as one of its Attorneys and Counsellors. Five years afterward, I appeared before this court, in an important case. Since that time, I have never appeared before this court until the present occasion, and now I stand before this court again. It is this same court, but not the same judges. At that time these seats were filled with honored men indeed, but not the same. They are changed. Then there was Chief Justice Marshall, and Judges Cushing, and Chase, and Washington, and Johnston, and Livingston, and Todd. Where are they? Where is that able statesman and learned lawyer, who was then my associate counsel, Robert Goodloe Harper?—Where is that eloquent counsellor, so long the pride of the American Bar, who was opposed to me, Luther Martin?—Where is the excellent Clerk of that day, whose name has been inscribed on the shores of Africa as a monument of his abhorrance of the African slave trade, Elias B. Caldwell? Where is the Marshal? Where are the criers of the Court? Where is one of the very judges before whom I commenced my argument in the present case? Gone!—gone! all gone. Gone from the services which they rendered to their country, to appear before a tribunal where they must answer for all the deeds done in the body. From the excellent characters which they sustained, so far as I have the means of knowing, I fondly hope that they have gone to receive the rewards of eternal blessedness. In taking, as I suppose, my final leave of this bar and this honorable court, I can only ejaculate a fervent prayer to heaven that every member of it may go to his final account with as little to answer for as these illustrious dead, and that you may, every one receive the sentence—"Well done, good and faithful servants, enter into the joy of your Lord."

I need not say that a crowded audience was deeply affected by this solemn close. Many of them shed tears. Having read this, look at the letter from the venerable advocate, to the Committee, announcing the decree of the Court and see with what heartiness of praise it closes: "Not unto us—not unto us,"—&c.—or more fully,—"Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory for thy mercy and for thy truth's sake.—Wherefore should the heathen say, where is now their God? But our God is in the heavens, He has done whatsoever He pleased." No wonder his gratitude was so promptly though briefly, expressed.—The prayer was heard—the fire fell—the flame rose.

Contrast such facts as these with the recent exhibition of passion on the part of two distinguished duellists in the Senate Chamber of the United States and —What a contrast is it! Nothing can dignify our nature but the religion of Jesus Christ.—Ch. World.

DEATH WARRANT OF JESUS CHRIST.—Of the many interesting relics and fragments of antiquity, which have been brought to light by the persevering researches of modern philosophy, none could have more interest for the philanthropist and the believer, than the one we copy below. 'Chance' says the Courier des Stats Unis, 'has just put into our hands the most imposing and interesting judicial document, to all christians, that has ever been recorded in human annals; that is the identical Death Warrant of our Lord Jesus Christ.' The document was faithfully transcribed by the editor, and is in hec verba.

Sentence rendered by Pontius Pilate, acting Governor of Lower Galilee, stating that Jesus of Nazareth shall suffer death on the cross.

In the year seventeen of the emperor Tiberius Cæsar, and the 25th day of March, the city of the holy Jerusalem, Anna and Caiphas being priests, sacrificators of the people of God, Pontius Pilate, Governor of Lower Galilee, sitting on the presidential chair of the Prætory, condemns Jesus of Nazareth to die on the cross between two thieves—the great and notorious evidence of the people saying—

1. Jesus is a seducer.
2. He is seditious.
3. He is an enemy of the law.
4. He calls himself falsely the son of God.
5. He calls himself falsely the King of Israel.
6. He entered into the temple, followed by a multitude bearing palm branches in their hands.

Order the first centurion, Quillius Cornelius, to lead him to the place of execution.

Forbid to any person whomsoever, either poor or rich, to oppose the death of Jesus.

The witnesses who signed the condemnation of Jesus are, viz: 1. Daniel Robani, a Pharisee; 2. Joannus Rorobable; 3. Raphael Robani; 4. Capet, a citizen.

Jesus shall go out of the city of Jerusalem by the gate of Struenus.

The above sentence is engraved on a copper plate; on one side are written these words:—'A similar plate is sent to each tribe.' It was found in an antique vase of white marble while excavating in the ancient city of Aquilla, in the kingdom of Naples, in the year 1820, and was discovered by the Commissaries of Arts attached to the French armies. At the expedition of Naples, it was found enclosed in a box of ebony in the sacrity of the Chartrem. The vase in the chapel of Caserta. The French translation was made by the members of the Commission of Arts.—The original is in the Hebrew language. The Chartrem requsted earnestly that the plate should not be taken away from them. The request was granted, as a reward for the sacrifice they had made for the army. M. Denon, one of the savans, caused a plate to be made of the same model, on which he had engraved the above sentence. At the sale of his collection of antiquities, &c. it was brought by Lord Howard for 2,890 francs. Its intrinsic value and interest are much greater. A few years ago there was found at Catskill, in New York, a "shekel of Israel," of the time of our Saviour. On one side was the representation of a palm leaf; on the other, a picture of the temple, with the words underneath, "Holy Jerusalem," in the Hebrew tongue. Relics like these, properly authenticated, have about them an inexpressible sacredness and moment. They seem to blend two worlds, and to carry human curiosity from the finite to the infinite.—Phil. Gaz.

FOR THE YOUNG.

WHAT IS EDUCATION.

Extract from the "Means and Ends, or Self-Training," by Miss Sedgwick.

"What is education?" asked a teacher of a class of girls. Young persons, when asked such general questions, do not reply promptly. They have no thoughts on the subject, and therefore have nothing to say, or, their thoughts not being arranged, they are not ready to answer; or, they may be too diffident to answer at all. On this occasion, half the girls were silent, and the rest replied, "I don't know, sir."

"Oblige me, girls, by saying something," urged the teacher. "The word is not Greek—surely you have some ideas about it. What is your notion of education, Mary Bliss?"

"Does it not mean, sir, learning to read and write?" Mary Bliss paused, and the girl next her added "and cyphering, sir, and grammar, and geography?"

"Yes it means this and something more. What is your idea of education, Sarah Johnson?"

"I did not suppose education meant much more than the girls have mentioned, sir. Mr. Smith said, at the Lyceum Lecture, that the great mass of people received their education at the common schools."

"Does not education mean," asked Maria Jarvis, "the learning young men get at colleges? I often hear people say of a man that he has 'had an education,' when they mean merely that he has been thro' college,"

"You are right, Maria, in believing this to be a commonly received meaning of the term, 'education;'—but it means more, and as it is important to you to have right and fixed ideas on this subject I earnestly beg you all to give me your attention, while I attempt to explain to you its full meaning.

"A great man, Mr. Locke, said that the difference to be found in the manners and abilities of men, is owing more to their education than any thing else.' Now, as you are acquainted with men who have never seen the inside of a college, and yet who are superior in 'manners and abilities' to some others who have passed four of the best years of their lives there, you must conclude that education is not confined to college walls.

"You are born with certain faculties. Whatever tends to develop and improve these is education. Whatever trains your mental powers, your affections, manners, and habits, is education. Your education is not limited to any period of your life, but is going on as long as you live. Whatever prepares you to be a profitable servant of God, and a faithful disciple of Christ—whatever increases your reverence and love of your Maker—all that in the Scripture is called the 'nurture and admonition of the Lord,' is a part of your religious education.

"Whatever you do to promote your health, to develop and improve the strength and powers of your body, is part of your physical education."

"What, sir!" interrupted Mary Lewis, "do you mean running, and jumping rope, and trundling hoops, and clambering over rocks, is that a part of education?"

"I certainly do—but why do you laugh, my dear child?"

"Because, sir, I never knew that education meant anything so pleasant as that; I wish my mother could hear you, sir; she would let me play more, instead of studying all the time, if she only knew that driving hoop was called education."

The teacher smiled and proceeded—

"Whatever calls forth your affections and strengthens them, whatever directs and subdues your passions, whatever cultivates your virtues, and whatever improves your manners, is a part of your moral education."

"Then," said the same lovely little girl, "that is what my mother means when she says, 'there is a lesson for you, Anne!' every time any of the family does any good thing. It seems to me I am educating all the time."

"You are, Anne—the world is your school, and good examples are your very best lessons. Whatever unfolds the faculties of your mind, improves your talents, augments your stores of knowledge, is a part of your intellectual education.

"Whatever improves your capacity for domestic affairs, or for business of any sort, is a part of your economical education. Now you will perceive, from what I have said, that education is not confined to schools and colleges, but that as Anne has very well remarked, we are 'educating all the time.' Nor is the conduct of education confined to professed teachers; we are educating one another.

"While I am teaching you geography and arithmetic, you are perhaps trying my patience, or by your own patience calling forth my gratitude. If I make progress in these virtues, you are helping on my moral education.

"The knowledge you impart to one another, the kindness you receive, the love you exchange, are all a part of your education. When you learn to sweep a room, to make a bed, or a cup of tea, a shirt, or a loaf of bread, you are getting along in your education.

"Everything around us, my children, may help forward this great work. The sun, the moon, and the stars teach their sublime lessons. 'Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knoweledge.' The seasons make their revolutions. The rain and snow, dews and frosts, the trees and rocks, fruits and flowers, plants, herbs, the very stones and grass we tread upon, are full of instructions to those who study them.

"All the events and circumstances of your lives are contributing to your education. Your classmate, Lucy Davis, has been absent from school the last two months. Reflect on what I have been saying to you, and then tell me whether Lucy, during this time, though she has not looked into a school book has made any progress in her education."

The girls were silent and thoughtful for a few moments. Maria Jarvis spoke first.

"Lucy's 'economical education,' as you call it, sir," she said, "has been going on, for she has had the care of the family, and every thing to do all through her mother's illness."

"And I guess she has been going on in her 'moral education,' interposed little Mary Lewis, "for I never saw any body so patient as she was with her mother's cross baby."

"And has she not lost this opportunity for improving in her religious education," resumed the teacher. "You all saw her yesterday at her mother's funeral, subduing the grief of her little sisters by her quiet resignation and affectionate devotion to them. Ah, she has been taking lessons in more important branches of education than are taught in schools.

"So you see, my dear children, that life is a school—a primary school; and that we are all preparing for a day of examination, when the infallible Judge will decide how we have profited by our means of education."

THE TRADE OF THE WEST.—Our New York friends are still making extraordinary efforts with regard to the trade of the West. They recognize in that trade the great commercial prize of the American Union, and seem determined, despite the clamour that has been raised in relation to a State Debt, to exert themselves to the utmost, with the object of attracting within their borders the agricultural produces of the teeming and fertile western sections of this Great Republic. Pennsylvania, we regret to say, is not at this moment in so enviable a condition as she should be, in the matter of competition with her rival. Our public works are in fine condition, and the route by Pennsylvania is infinitely shorter than that by the Empire State. But still there is difficulty somewhere; and it behooves our State authorities as well as our active business men, too examine this matter with close attention, and if possible, provide a remedy.—Bicknell.

A SKIRMISH WITH THE ARABS.—A skirmish recently took place between the French and the Arabs, in which the latter mustered 5000 men, in addition to 15,000 more—the latter to be called in case of need. The Duke de Nemours commanded the French, and it is stated in the French account of the affair, that the Arabs lost five hundred killed, and were repulsed at all points; while the French had only ten or twelve men killed and fifty wounded.

SINGING SCHOOL.—A Texas editor states that the musquetoes have established a singing school in his bed room.

The great beauty of the pictures will give pleasure to every lover of the beautiful, and it shall always be our aim to procure such subjects for the engraver as will even, without the poetical illustration, tell their own tale. While thus giving attention to that which pleases the eye, we will show that equal attention has been paid to catering for the mind.

MRS. L. H. SIGOURNEY,

While from abroad we are receiving such assistance as will serve to make an agreeable variety, we must not forget to mention that we are now publishing an article from an eminent writer of our own country—

The author of 'losing and winning,' and 'sensibility.'

This tale we are certain will cause as great a sensation as did the publishing of "Losing and Winning," which was re-published in half the papers of our country.

Let it not be forgotten that Miss Lesslie contributes to the Lady's Book only. ☞No other magazine has articles from her pen.☜ She commences in this No. another of those graphic sketches that give so much pleasure to our readers,

LEONILLA LYNMORE.

While paying a proper tribute to the great talents of the English ladies previously mentioned, be it remembered we have our own Hale, Sigourney, Leslie, Parsons, Embury, Hentz, and a host of others, to mention which we have neither time nor space.

THE NEW WORLD.

A New Enlarged Quarto Volume.

COMMENCING THE FIRST WEEK IN JULY.

THE Third Volume of the QUARTO form of the NEW WORLD will commence on the 3d of July, when it will be much enlarged, and four columns given on each page, instead of three making sixty-four columns of choice reading without any increase in the price. New Volumes will always begin on the 1st of July and 1st of January, making two in each year, of 416 pages each, to which a handsome title page, and a copious index will be given.

The NEW WORLD is a Journal of Popular Literature, Criticism, Science and the Arts. It is supplied with aritcles by the first living writers of the United States and Great Britain. The first number was issued in June, 1840, and its circulation has steadily increased to this day till it counts more readers than any other newspaper of its kind in the world. This is owing to the fact of its having given to the public, for a sum merely nominal, and always in advance of any other print, the most popular works of the most approved authors.

A novel and striking feature of the New World, is, that it has given besides the great literary productions of the day, the discourses of eminent divines. In future these discourses will be presented even more frequently than heretofore; but not too often to interfere with other interesting articles.

In addition to all these new and popular works, these eloquent discourses, this comprehensive journal has given the best poems and periodicals papers which have appeared in the English and American Magazines. What has been done is an earnest of what will be done.

The New World is divided into various departments, viz:—Original Articles; First American Editions; Periodical Literature; The Scrap Book; The Literary World; The Musical World; The Dramatic World; The Political World; The World of Science and Art; Patchwork; Latest Intelligence.

We cannot forbear to add in conclusion, that the New World studiously avoids all party politics; and is conducted on principles of the strictest morality. No profane or improper jest, no vulgar allusion, no irreligious sentiment, is allowed to soil its pages. Reverence of God and respect to man govern it always. The rule of the Editor is never to publish a line which he would hesitate to read aloud in the hearing of virtuous and intelligent females. Thus the New World is made an unexceptionable Family Newspaper, and is earnestly recommended to the regard of every friend of a pure literature, as well as of correct morals and the public good.

Terms of Subscription.

Three Dollars a year—Two copies one year, or one copy two years, for Five Dollars—payment in advance. All remittance must be in current funds, and either post-paid or free.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the hackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

THE LOSS OF THE PRESIDENT.

I.

Speak! for thou hast a voice, perpetual sea!
ft up thy surges with some signal word,
Show where the pilgrims of the waters be,
r whom the nation's thrilling heart is stirr'd.

II.

Down to the waves they went in joyous pride,
ey trod with steadfast feet thy billowy way:
The eyes of wond'ring men beheld them glide wift in the arrowy distance—where are they?

III.

Didst thou arise upon that mighty frame,
ad that the strength of man with thee should strive.
And proud thy rival element to tame, idst swallow them in conscious depths alive?

IV.

Or, shorn and powerless, hast thou bade them lie, eir stately ship, a carcase of the foam?
Where still they watch the ocean and the sky,
nd fondly dream that they have yet a home?

V.

Doth hope still sooth their souls, or gladness thrill?
peace amid those wanderers of the foam?
Say, is the old affection yearning still,
ith all the blessed memories of home?

VI.

Or is it over? Life and breath, and thought,
he living feature and the breathing form?
Is the strong man become a thing of nought, nd the rich blood of rank no longer warm?

VII.

Thou answerest not thou stern and haughty sea,
here is no sound in earth, or wave, or air,
Roll on ye tears! Oh! what can comfort be,
o hearts that pant for hope, but breathe despair?

VIII.

Nay, mourner, there is sunlight on the deep,
gentle rainbow on the darkling cloud;
A voice more mighty than the floods, will sweep,
he shore of tempests when the storm is loud.

IX.

What tho' they woke the whirlwinds of the West,
r rous'd the tempest from his Eastern lair,
Or clave the cloud with thunder in its breast;
ord of the awful waters, thou wert there!

X.

All-merciful! The fate—the day were thine;
hou didst receive them from the seething sea;
Thy love too deep, Thy mercy too divine,
o quench them in an hour unworthy Thee.

XI.

If storm were mighty, Thou wert in the gale?
their feet failed them, in Thy paths they trod;
Man cannot urge the bark, or guide the sail.
r force the quivering helm away from God!

AN INQUIRY, &c.

Statement of the Doctrine of an Unoriginated, Infinite and Eternal Prescience, as it is currently and implicitly received by a very large proportion of the Christian World.

NO. VI.

HE NOTION OF A CERTAIN PRESCIENCE IN RELATION TO MORAL ACTIONS, AND THE FINAL ISSUE OF HUMAN LIFE, INCONSISTENT WITH HUMAN RESPONSIBILITY, AND REPUGNANT TO ALL MORAL FEELING.

As the great question of necessity and certainty so intimately connected with that of an eteral prescience, and will be likely to interweave self with every part of our discussion, it will be ecessary to give an accurate definition of those erms, that they may not hereafter be employed understood according to any vague or equivoal meaning. If my notion of their meaning be orrect, we apply the term necessity to causation nd that of certainty to consequence or issue.—n event is necessary which has an effectual and nfallible causation, and certain when the issue not capable of miscarriage. Now although it s not philologically correct to say the terms coney precisely the same idea, inasmuch as the one indicative of causation, and the other of issue; et in popular speech, the terms are perfectly onvertible, and the ideas which they convey are niformly co-existent.

Necessity and certainty are cognate ideas, and he evidence of the one must always demonstrate co-existence of the other. Prove an event to e certain, and you will prove it to be necessary; rove an event to be necessary, and you will rove it to be certain; prove an infallible causaion, and you will prove certain catastrophe; rove a certain catastrophe, and you will prove n infallible causation. An infallible causation annot possibly exist without involving a certain ssue; neither is it possible to secure a certain ssue exceept by an infallible causation. The isunion of issue from causation is the sole work f an unbridled imagination, of whichwe have no recedent in either nature or science, and for which we have no authority in any rational deduction of the human mind. It is therefore perectly gratuitous, and perfectly contradictory and bsurb. Now if the foregoing argument be not ound and legitimate, the objector has only to deect and expose its fallacy, and to produce some angible case of certainty separate from necessiy, or some case of necessity separate from certainty.

The argument applies to prophetical certainies quite as legitimately as it does to natural nd scientific certainties. If the issue be secure, he causation must be infallible; and if the issue e fortuitous, the causation must be equally prearious: that which will secure the end, must of ecessity secure the means; and a prescience of he means must of consequence be involved in a rescience of the issue. Must the faith of the uman mind in the absolute predictions of scripure prophecy, rest upon a mere hypothetical, or ather, upon an imaginary basis? Is the confidence which we are called upon to place in the infallible promises of God, built upon a less substantial foundation than that of natural and scientific fact? Heaven and earth shall pass away; but my word shall not pass away. If therefore, the predictions of prophecy do possess the properties of absolute certainty, then they must of consequence possess the properties of absolute necessity. When any person pretends to argue that an event may be certainly foreseen, but may not of necessity take place, he ought to explain to us how certain issue may be separated from an effectual causation; or otherwise the truth of his assertion must rest upon the strength of his credulity, and not upon the legitimacy of his conviction.

There are many things which are often regarded as being absolute certainties that are only among the highest class of natural probabilities; as for instance, the rising of the sun to-morrow morning. Now, on the supposition that the continuance of the world another day be the subject of a certain prediction, or of an absolute determination in the Deity, then the rising of the sun tomorrow morning, we have already demonstrated, must be an absolute certainty, but at the same time, it is equally evident, that the rising of the sun to-morrow must be as necessary as it is certain, because the causation must be as secure as the issue. But there is no natural certainty of another rising sun. For if there be a natural certainty that the sun will rise again after his going down at the present day, then it must be equally certain that he will rise again at the distance of a week, month, a year, a century, a thousand years; yea, it must be equally certain that he will continue to set and rise for ever and ever.

The advocates of the doctrine of eternal prescience, even after they have been obliged to abandon the certainty of moral actions and of contingent events, will nevertheless contend for the certain prescience of such actions and events: as tho' an issue might be contingent in re, and infallible in anticipation. Alas, alas. But what may not any person bring himself to believe, while he will regard the christian faith as demanding an implicit credence, and not as supplying a rational and plenary conviction? When a human being is under such a prostration of intellect, it is in vain either to expect the unsoundness of his premises, or to detect the fallacy of his conclusions. His licentious faith has broken the marriage contract with his own reason, and has obtained a divorce under the pretended authority of the Almighty: and therefore he can now believe without a particle of evidence, his faith is now become entirely independent of all rational convictions; he ranges the whole empire of implicit credulity, and scorns the plodding and tardy progression of his own mental deduction. His credulity needs not the glow-worm of reason to cheer his devious way; he wants not the walking stick of slow deduction to support his tottering steps, nor the lope staff of a logical syllogism to scale the thorny fence of contradiction, or leap the miry ditch of absurdity. He inflates his buoyant mind with idle conceits until it becomes lighter than vanity; he spreads the wings of his unfettered fancy infinitely beyond the limits of all possible existence, and away he flies like a hippogriff, or a modern Dædalus. Brakes, and bogs, and swamps, and seas of absurdity are nothing to him; he leaves them all beneath him: and therefore as long as he can ply the wings of his credulity, and winnow the yielding element of his ideal possibility, he will always despise those crawlers upon earth that will thrust forward the proboscis of common sense, and put forth the feelers of rational investigation; but it is ten to one, if his wings should ever grow weary of their flight, that he will flounder in the sloughs of absurdity, or sink for ever in the shoreless and bottomless ocean of universal scepticism. A believer in the doctrines of an eternal prescience is a mere religious gryffith.

We have already shewn that all knowledge must be derived from evidence, and all evidence must be derived from actual existence, and that there can be no adequate testations of truth and knowledge, but that of comparing their predications with facts, and with the real properties of the things about which they make their predications. For if all knowledge may not be brought to the test of fact and actual existence, there are no means by which we may distinguish knowledge from ignorance, and truth from falsehood. The foregoing rule must be as applicable to knowledge in the Diety, as it is to knowledge in created beings; or otherwise the garniture of the Divine intellect must be less real and less correct than the thoughts of the human heart. A certain knowledge of an uncertain thing is as gross a solecism, as palpable a contradiction as the geometrical admeasurement of the sound of an organ, the olfactory properties of scarlet or green, or the weight of rotundity in averdupoise. If the Deity may have certain anticipation of an issue which He himself has rendered contingent, and if He may discover properties in things which are allowed to have no real existence in the things themselves, then He may possibly know a truth to be falsehood, or a falsehood to be a truth; evil to be good, or good to be evil; light to be darkness, or darkness to be light; pain to be pleasure, or pleasure to be pain; sweet to be bitter, or bitter to be sweet; then it is possible that, to the infinite intelligence of the Deity, a cube may be a mere surface, or a surface have the properties of a cube, that a plenum may be as empty as a vacuum, or a vacuum as solid as a plenum; that a triangle may be a square, or a square a triangle; that the parts may be unequal to the whole, or the whole be unequal to all the parts; that the chorus of heaven may be a perpetual silence, and that the regions of eternal misery may be as light and joyous as the realms of everlasting felicity and glory.

The advocates of eternal prescience apart from predestination, pretend to give up the influence of prescience upon moral conduct and the issue of which it has a certain anticipation, and thereby to render an eternal prescience as powerless as blank ignorance itself. In that case, the issues which it would certainly anticipate, must be as perfectly fortuitous as though they were no longer the objects of certain knowledge. In such a case the anticipations of the Deity could not possess any practical or rectorial efficiency, and therefore they must be as useless to the Deity, as they are destitute of motive or benefit to human beings. Every issue must remain a perfect contingency, suspended entirely on the volitions of the human mind. In this manner a pretended perfection of the infinite Jehovah is reduced to a mere nonentity: and yet for the fancied credit of this perfect nonentity they will contend with as much tenacity as though it were of infinite importance, as though it supported the basis of the earth, and the foundations of the heavens. If this hypothetical perfection of Deity were absolutely annihilated every part of creation would remain entire, the work of redemption would be equally complete, and every department of the government of God would be equally efficient; whereas it must be intuitively evident that every assumed perfection of the Deity which would be entirely superfluous in creation, providence, or redemption, must be perfectly gratuitous, and cannot have any real existence in the person of the Divine Being.

It has been very speciously argued, that contingency is not the antithesis of certainty, but is the antithesis only of necessity: but this pretended argument is a mere philological quibble, and is in no degree relevant to the question at issue. The real point in dispute, is not whether the word contingent be verbally opposed to the word necessity, or to the word certain; but whether certainty in re implies necessity in re, and necessity implies certainty; for if that be the case, although we were to concede that contingency is verbally opposed to necessity and not to certainty, yet if contingency in re be the opposite of necessity in re, it must of consequence be equally the opposite of certainty. That which is opposed to an infallible causation, must be alike opposed to an infallible issue, because an infallible issue cannot be secured except by an infallible causation: so that after all that can be made of this philological evasion, it will amount to precisely the same thing, whether the word contingent be verbally the antithesis of the word certain or the word necessity.

The doctrine of eternal prescience is undoubtedly of heathen origin, from whence it has been imported into the theological system of christian divines; and it has evidently originated in confounding the actions of God with the conduct of men, the anticipation and distribution of rewards and punishments in the government of the world, with the moral agency of human beings.—The ancient heathens had never read, in the scriptures, that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet favor to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all. Eccle. ix. 11. Yet they were convinced, by their own observations on the world, that human events were under some invisible and irresistible control; and being ignorant of the scripture doctrine of Providence, they were easily betrayed into the error of supposing that the moral actions of men were under the same absolute control as the consequences of those actions. Under this delusion, they vainly imaged to themselves a chimerical deity, whom they denominated fate, and then resolved the moral actions of human beings, as well as their consequence, to an over-ruling and fatal necessity. But the ancient heathens were not able to carry these theological speculations of theirs into the economy of real life; they enacted laws and administered justice, and these they manifestly did under an implied and involuntary conviction, that the moral actions of men were, in reality, under no such control. For to what purpose could they administer justice or enact laws, if they did not hope thereby to influence the moral conduct of human beings? For if the necessity, under which their mythology had placed all human actions could be counteracted, that necessity could not be any fatal or irresistible necessity. And here I will boldly appeal to the understanding of my readers, whether there can possible be a stronger proof of the falsity of a system, than the glaring and palpable fact, that the persons who have been the loudest in its praise, and the most sturdy in its defence have never been able to carry it into their personal practice, but have maintained it only as a matter of abstract speculation.

NO. VI.

Br. Timothy: In your last communication you notice but two points, and those points you are pleased to call strong ones. So far so good. I think you will find them strong points before you will be able to uproot them, for they are the bone and sinew of the gospel.

1. The manner in which you explain the case of Simon is perfectly ridiculous. What, a man to purchase the Holy Ghost after receiving it! the very act proves that he had it not. Look at it; Simon believed as did the others, and was baptised as was the others, (i. e.) precisely. Then a question is asked—laid their hands on whom? Why, on Simon to be sure; and yet after all this process he was pronounced to be in the gall of bitterness. Acts viii. 21, 22.23. And more than this; he had neither part nor lot in this matter—thy heart is not right in the sight of God. Then after all this, argue that Simon received all that the rest did, a man that neither had part nor lot in this matter. None are so blind as those that will not see. We argue that the means of his pardon is given in the 22d verse of the 8th of Acts. Now Br. Timothy, get over that if you can.

2. We notice once more Cornelius.—Peter was to tell him words—what words? "Baptism for the remission of sins." No, nothing of that in the record, and we have to go by that. What then was this word? You will find them in Acts x. 36. That word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace (not contention about words) by Jesus Christ.—Not by baptism. He is Lord of all. That word we find in John i. 1. "In the beginning was the word." 4th verse—In him this word and Christ was life, and the life was the light of men. Well, Peter presented this word, or the Christ, or the life. And this was backed by the prophets, to Cornelius, and in the 43d v. he informed him that "to him give all the prophets witness that through His name (not baptism) whosoever believeth (not baptism) in Him shall receive remission of sins." 44th v. While Peter yet spake the words no doubt Cornelius believed the words with all his heart, for man cannot believe with the head, or hands or feet, or with the skin, but the heart. Man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. Rom. x. 10. Then God gave him the spirit; could he get any more after baptism? We declare once more that we take this as a model conversion with the Gentiles. All those converted in this way, thank God, do not think of purchasing the Holy Ghost with money, for they have the spirit of God to bear witness with their spirits that they are born from above, not from below in the water, but from above. And who knoweth the things of God but the spirit of God. Now will Br. Timothy rest the argument on these two points?

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

MECHANICSBURGH, O., JUNE 21, 1841.

Mr. Editor: I wish to say, through your excellent paper, that since my last, the Lord has revived us. Some four weeks ago we held a protracted meeting at Middletown, Champaign co., O. This place being proverbial for wickedness was distinguished by the appellation of Sodom. When I arrived to commence the meeting, an inn-keeper, with a number of others, were within a few rods of the meeting house, pitching quoits, and shooting for money and whiskey. Under these gloomy prospects we commenced the meeting. However, by the middle of Sabbath a Divine influence rested on the people, and the stoutest sinners were seen to shed tears. At night some six or seven joined the church. The meeting was continued for nine days, and increased in interest until the close.—It resulted in the conversion of about thirty sinners, and the addition of forty to the church, all from the world. At this place we had no members before this meeting. The work is still going on; several have been converted and joined the church since.

We had another protracted meeting in Union co., near Richwood, which resulted in the addition of seventeen to the church. Also, a third, at the Flat Woods in the same county, at which some thirty-five were converted and twenty-six added to the church before I left, my colleague, Br. Devore, still continuing the meeting. Here we had the assistance of our worthy President, Br. Bassett. Two hundred and thirty-five have united with us on this circuit, since conference.

Your fellow laborer in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ,

I. C. HUNT, Sup't.

PUTNAM CO., IA., JUNE 19, 1841.

Dear Br. Springer: After my best respects, I will inform the brethren the Lord is still with us on Mill Creek circuit. On our last round, we organized two classes. We also held a two day meeting at Mount Pleasant Meeting House at which there were several conversions.—Our third quarterly meeting was the last Sabbath in May. At this we had plenty of help. The son and daughter of Br. J.D. Madearis united with the church on this occasion.

JOS. SIMPSON, Sup't.

MIDDLETOWN, MONON. VA., MAY 22.

Dear Br: We have closed our third quarterly meeting, for this circuit, at which we were assisted by Br. Simonton. Though we had no special revival, it was a good meeting; a refreshing season to the members of the church. One was received, which makes sixty-six since I last wrote. Many of those received are in the bloom of youth, and promise to be useful members of the church of Christ. But the church is not only increasing in numbers, but in piety. Also, there is a deep solicitude manifested for the enjoyment of all the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ.

Yours, respectfully,

THOS. J. ADDIS,
Sup. Middletown Ct.

The following resolution was passed by the quarterly conference of Middletown circuit:

Resolved, That the appointment of protracted meetings is in the Superintendent, alone, who has charge of the circuit or station where such meeting is proposed to be held.

HARRISVILLE, O., JUNE 22, 1841.

Br. Springer: As I have not given any intelligence through the Recorder of the state of things with us on the Georgetown circuit, this conference year, I embrace the present opportunity of saying that the Lord has not forsaken us as a people and a circuit. We have had a difficulty or two of rather an unpleasant character to contend with; except these we have had a pleasant and agreeable time, or season of grace and prosperity, thus far. The class at that place, which was thought by some in other days to be rather a hopeless case, has been greatly blest of the Lord, much revived and considerably increased in number, for the last four or five months. The state of this class at present is one of encouragement. We have had meetings of interest and have been favored of the Lord at other points of the circuit, as well as at Harrisville. We have religious prosperity and a comfortable state of things at nearly every appointment; peace pervades our borders, save in an instance or two. Our congregations are generally good, better than they were last year.

We organized a class of 5 members some 4 or 5 months ago (which now numbers 20) some 4 miles west of the Ohio river, on the road leading from St. Clairsville, to the flats of Grave creek. In this class are some materials of promising worth, which I doubt not will be an honorable accession to the circuit. In the neighborhood of this class, our Episcopal friends are numerous. No effort has been made, until this year, to establish the Protestant cause in the place. Nothing but good will and friendship was manifested until the organization took place. Since that time a little storm seems to have been gathering, and I fear some little opposition manifested from a source not anticipated by us. A man, who says he has been a reformer for more than 20 years, and is a minister of the gospel of some influence, in his neighborhood, seems to have been one of the main springs which led to the organization at least at the time it took place.—His professed friendship, solicitude & anxiety for an immediate action were all calculated to make the impression that he intended to be one of our number. But he is not with us nor like to be; and like Balak I fear is inclined to cast a stumbling block in our way. Man is a queer being at best, but of all queer beings that man is most so who can coolly and deliberately give the lie to his professed principle by his actions from day to day.

But notwithstanding all opposition the class appears encouraged to rely on Divine grace for prosperity and sustenance. So far as the public are informed, our ecclesiastical polity seems to take well with them. Several of whom have evinced their good will to us by liberal and generous proposals to aid us in building a suitable house of worship. So that I doubt not but in a short time we shall have a Temple to worship God in this neighborhood.

We have also organized a class of 12 members at Martinsville, on the Ohio, and are kindly favored by our Baptist friends with the use of their church in this place; may their christian liberality be abundantly rewarded by their Heavenly Father. Most of the members in this class formerly belonged to the Bridgeport class. The latter of which has been reduced to a low state by removals.

Our prospect for a permanent class at Martinsville, is quite flattering. We have some prospect of organizing one if not two other classes before conference; may the Lord speed us in His good work. Somewhere in sixty in all have been added thus far, but a goodly number of our valuable members have left this circuit and gone to other places this year.

My colleague Br. Wm. Browning, who has been travelling with me since the 1st quarterly meeting, is an interesting and agreeable partner on a circuit and one in whom the brethren of this circuit have more than realized their expectations.—He is faithful and sustains himself as a preacher, and has been instrumental in good on this circuit. But I must close, my letter is already too long.

Yours, in Christ,

GEORGE CLANCY.

ORIGIN OF PRINTING.

Perhaps our article on printing week before last, awakened more curiosity than it gratified. We will therefore, tell you a few things more.

There are various kinds of printing, which we shall not now speak of, such as calico printing, &c.

The art of printing on paper, with types and ink, so as to save the labor of writing was invented in Europe between 1430 and 1442. The Chinese had a mode of printing from blocks, at least 500 years earlier, but the rest of the world was not made wiser by their skill. The Europeans had the honor of inventing this art for themselves, ere the passage to the east by the Cape of Good Hope was discovered, and of course before they knew that China existed. But while the art of printing, in the hands of Europeans and their descendants, has scattered light upon almost every subject and every region, it has, like the spark struck out of the flint, left its own origin in the dark. Four cities have earnestly contended for the honor of having produced its inventor. The honor must be partially shared between them. An early historian tells the following story of Laurentius Coster, a Dutchman, who lived at Harlaem, in the south of Holland. "Laurentius, walking in a wood, near the city, began at first to cut some letters upon the rind of beech trees: which, for fancy's sake, being impressed on paper, he printed one or two lines as a specimen for his grand-children to imitate. This having happily succeeded, he meditated greater things (as he was a man of ingenuity and judgment,) and first of all, with his son-in-law Thomas Peter, invented a more glutinous writing ink, because he found the common ink sunk and spread; and then formed whole pages of wood, with letters cut on them." At first he printed on one side only of the paper, and pasted the opposite sides together, "that they might not, by their nakedness, betray their deformity."

There were other deformities in these first printed works, besides blank pages. As the letters were made of wood, fastened together in pages by strings, this is not strange.

His first work, in eight pages, contained the letters of the alphabet, the Apostles's creed, and three short prayers. There was no punctuation, the lines were uneven, and the pages varied in size and shape. Laurentius died in 1440, and his business was continued by his daughter's sons, two of whom perished in the civil wars in 1492.

The town of Mentz, near Frankfort, in Germany, presents the next claim to the honor of being the birthplace of printing. If the stories told of it are correct, however, its claim grew out of the knavery of a workman employed by Laurentius. It is said that on Christmas eve, while his master and family were engaged in religious exercises, this servant stole some types and other apparatus, and fled to Mentz, which was probably his native place. He there went to work, and in 1442, about two years after he left Harlaem, he published two little school books. We may reasonably suppose that he would need money, and this probably led to his acquaintance with John Faust, or Faustus, a wealthy goldsmith, who became his partner in 1443. It is doubtful whether he did more than supply money for carrying on the business of printing, and it seems from the following story, that he did that for speculation. Before we tell the story, however, we must remark that the letters in the first printed books were imitations of written letters.

"In 1462, Faust carried a number of Bibles to Paris, which he and his partner, Schoeffer, had printed, and disposed of them as manuscripts. At this time the discovery of the art was not known in France. At first he sold them at the high price of 500 or 600 crowns, the sum usually obtained by the scribes; he afterwards lowered his price to sixty, which created universal astonishment: but when he produced them according to the demand, and even reduced the price to thirty, all Paris became agitated. The uniformity of the copies increased their wonder, the Parisians considering it a task beyond human invention; informations were given to the police against him as a magician; his lodgings were searched, a great number of Bibles were found, and seized: the red ink with which they were embellished, was said to be his blood: it was seriously adjudged that he was in league with the devil: whereupon he was cast into prison, and would most probably have shared the fate of such, whom ignorant and superstitious judges condemned in those days for witchcraft. He now found it necessary, in order to gain his liberty, to make known the discovery of the art. The circumstance gave rise to the tradition of 'The Devil and Doctor Faustus,' which is handed down to the present time."

We must now go back and speak of Guttembuag, a citizen of Strasburg, in France. He is said to have practised printing, secretly, in that city, as early as 1436. In 1444, he joined Faust and the runaway servant, (about whose name there is some dispute,) at Mentz. Guttemburg soon displayed his ingenuity by making types of cut metal, instead of wood. The first result of the new invention, was an edition of the Bible, published in 1450, of which it is said, in the Edinburgh Encyclopedia, that, "for accuracy and beauty it would do honor to the art at any stage of its history." It was a second edition more beautiful and expensive still, of which Faust sold copies as manuscripts. The first book which had date printed on it, was a Psalter, or the book of Psalms, published by Faust in 1457.

In the following year, 1458, an important improvement was effected in the art. Peter Schoeffer discovered, after repeated trials, that letters might be cast in a mould or matrix, instead of being cut.

He privately cut matrices for the whole alphabet: and when he showed his master the letters cast from these matrices, Faust was so pleased with the contrivance that he promised Peter his only daughter Christina, in marriage, a promise which he soon after performed. But there were as many difficulties at first with these letters, as there had been before with wooden ones; the metal being too soft to support the force of the impression: but this defect was soon remedied, by mixing the metal with a substance which sufficently hardened it.

We have now followed the progress of invention to a height, from which it made but a slight advance for three hundred years. From this narrative, it appears that the following persons are entitled to share in the honor of originating the art of printing.

Laurentius Coster, of Harlaem, in Holland, was the first European discoverer of the art of printing on wood.

John Guttemburg, Jr., a native of Mentz, but citizen of Strasburg in France, was first inventor of cut metal letters, which he made at Mentz.

Peter Schoeffer, a native of Gensheim, and inhabitant of Mentz, was inventor of cast metal letters.

John Faust, of Mentz, was patron and promoter of the art, and thus, by his money, was enabled to reap nearly all the honor, which grew out of other men's ingenuity.

WRITING ON NEWSPAPERS.—The U. S. District Attorney in New York, has received from the Post Office Department a quantity of newspapers, with their margins filled with writing. He is directed to proceed against the individual aggressors according to the post office law.

Persons who have been accustomed to write to their friends on the margin of newspapers, to avoid postage, will see from the above paragraph, that such a proceeding is not only unlawful, but rather risky. —Mt. Pleas. Pa., Reg.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... JULY 7, 1841.

ANOTHER CINCINNATI MOB.—The following account of the late mobocratic movements in Cincinnati is from the Philanthropist, of the 30th ult. The editor professes to give a faithful account of the matter, deriving his information partly from the account of the parties themselves—partly from the evidence of by-standers, and partly from his own observation:

Thursday evening, a colored man came to the house of Mr. J. Burnett, on 5th street, near Vine, stating that he was from Kentucky, and that his master had given him a pass to come to Cincinnati. He remained at Mr. Burnett's till Friday morning.

Friday morning, while C. Burnett, his son Joseph and daughter-in-law, Mr. Lewis, (a man who was at work there,) and two young apprentices, were at breakfast, the colored man sitting in the room, three persons entered quickly thro' the store, and rushed in, as if in search of some one. J. Burnett arose and demanded their business, but received no answer. C. Burnett, suspecting that they intended to seize the black man, in order to divert their attention from him, cried out, "go ahead!" pointing to the yard. One of them happening to see the negro sitting in the corner, called out, when another turning his head, exclaimed—"that is my boy! seize him!"

No warrant was shown by any of the individuals—no permission was asked or given to search the premises—no word spoken as to their business, till this moment.

Confusion immediately arose—they were ordered to quit the premises, but rushed upon the negro. Mr. Burnett, his son, and Mr. Lewis interfered at once, and attempted to put them out of the house. C. Burnett seizing one, got his head under his arm, and had him completely at his mercy, but declares that he did not strike him. He drew him towards the door, and put him out, and immediately received a severe blow in the face. J. Burnett grappled the person (named McCalla) claiming the negro—a scuffle followed—the wife of J. Burnett, a delicate woman, laid hold of his shoulder to pull him away, but was struck two or three times by McCalla across the neck and shoulders with a notted stick—her cape was torn by him, and he pushed her with considerable force across the room. Her husband fell upon him with redoubled vigor—was thrown down—while prostrate, McCalla drew a pistol, pointed it at his breast, pulled the trigger, but it missed fire. Leveridge, a journeyman, who had been down stairs, and had run up on hearing the noise, here interfered and pulled McCalla off, and J. Burnett then flogged McCalla severely, and drove him out of the shop.

Meantime, the negro having been dragged away by a fourth man who came in, the fracas ended.

The disturbance attracted a crowd to the door who became greatly incensed when they saw the bleeding face of McCalla, and heard it reported that the Burnetts had been harboring negroes, and had resisted the peace officer, in his attempt to arrest a runaway. Besides the Burnetts are Englishmen, and this was used to aggravate the irritation already awakened.

The report spread over the city—a great number of low characters, and half-grown boys and respectable citizens, assembled about the store. Threats of violence were freely uttered. Sheriff Avery, by request, in the absence of the Mayor and Marshall on duty in Kentucky, appeared on the ground, and commanded the peace. The crowd seemed disposed to disperse, and the Sheriff, telling Mr. Burnett to protect his own rights, departed under the conviction that no further disturbance would take place.

On his departure, the crowd again closed up and beset the door—the street and market place began to be thronged—and violent menaces were openly made.

C. Burnett standing in the door, bade them on their peril enter the premises, threatening to shoot the first man who should attempt it.

Sometime before noon a very large stone was thrown with violence into the store, which C. Burnett immediately seized, and standing out on the pavement, held up, appealing to it as a proof of the cowardice of the mob. This greatly irritated the mobocrats. In accordance with the advice of friends the windows were then closed, and the doors shut; but one of the shutters was soon removed by the mob, and a few stones thrown, breaking the glass. They next let down the awning, when Mr. C. Burnett went to the door to prevent them, still bearing in his hand the large stone, which he intended to preserve, but which some say he designed to use as a missle. The stone was immediately wrenched from him, and he was knocked down. His sons, Joseph, Thomas, Alfred, and Mr. Lewis ran to his assistance, but were at once assailed by the mob and most of them knocked down A fight ensued, and they defended themselves as well as they could against such numbers, until at last they reached the house and closed the door.

The leading fact that the mob commenced the assault, can be established by the testimony of several persons who were lookers on.

T. Burnett was very much hurt, and Alfred Burnett a lad of 15 received a severe cut in his head. The rest were considerably bruised.

The wife of T. Burnett hearing that her husband was dying, ran over in great haste to the scene of violence, but before she could obtain entrance into the house, was roughly used and cursed by the mob.

C. Burnett, his three sons, and Leveridge, Lewis, and Erickson, an apprentice, were arrested in the afternoon, and carried before Esq. Doty—a mob greatly excited following.

The parties arrested admitted nothing but thought it best they should be committed, till the excitement was allayed. Esq. Doty, accordingly as they declined giving bail, which was demanded to the amount of $3,000, committed them to prison.

During the proceedings in the magistrate's office, the mob continued in a state of high excitement. Mr. Bunting in discussing some point connected with the case, being challenged, avowed that he was an anti-slavery man. For this he received a severe blow in the mouth, and was driven out of the office, a part of the mob following him; and at the corner of 3d and Main sts., was struck several times. Taking shelter in the Henrie House on 3d st., he was driven out, and found protection in a lawyer's office, opposite.

While the prisoners were on their way to the jail, it required a strong force to protect them. An attempt was made to lynch them, but the determined spirit of the constables prevented.

Five of them were bailed out of jail that night. It was thought best, that C. & J. Burnett should lie there till morning.

Friday night, the mob again assembled, with the intention of destroying Mr. Burnett's property. They were prevented by Esq. Doty and Gen. Hale, and finally dispersed by Sheriff Avery.

Saturday night, an abortive attempt was made to get up another mob, the object being not only to destroy the property of Burnett, but pull down the press of the Philanthropist.

PROTRACTED TEMPERANCE MEETING.—The Christian Advocate and Harris' Intelligencer of Pittsburgh, give animated descriptions of these meetings recently being held in that city. The Advocate of the 30th ult. says:

"The meeting is still in progress with evident signs of increasing interest. Up to this hour the enthusiasm beggars description. Our churches are in danger of being broken down by the immense crowds that throng them to hear the Missionaries from Baltimore, or other reformed drunkards of our own city, simply relate the thraldom they were in, the means of their deliverance, and the felicitous effects that they have experienced themselves, and witnessed in their families since. The excitement of a Methodist camp-meeting, in comparison with the temperance meetings now in progress in Pittsburgh and vicinity, must hereafter be regarded as a tame affair. Dr. Elder, the chairman of the committee to whom has been committed the management of these meetings, though quite youthful in his appearance, by the delightful interest he takes and the surprising excitement he exhibits, will be regarded hereafter as the Father Matthew of Pittsburgh. If it were not the thing is exceedingly popular with almost all classes of the community, we might be apprehensive tha grog-venders would rise in rebellion against a cause that is rapidly drying up the fountains of their gains.

In seven meetings, more than one thousand had signed the pledge, many of whom, until now knew not how to disenthral themselves from a habit which they knew had ruined thousands, and was fast ruining them. On Monday evening, the 24th, the chairman read a letter from a female who had been some fifteen years the wife of a drunkard. We could not be present, but learned it was a well drawn, though a most affecting picture, and produced a thrilling effect. Several houses, heretofore the very nurseries of drunkards, have renounced allegiance to the spirit that ruled them, and have hung out the cold water flag.

Since writing the above, the cause has gone "ahead" with unabated energy. The recruits now number seventeen hundred, between four and five hundred of whom were gathered in on Wednesday night last, and chiefly in Allegheny city."

MORE OF THE WILLIAM BROWN DISASTER.

A TALE OF HORROR.

The Boston Post of Saturday contains a most painful narrative in relation to the loss of the William Brown, and the scenes on board the long boat. It is given on the authority of John Messer, one of the crew who accompanied the mate, and who has not yet fully recovered. It will be seen that while he fully vindicates the conduct of Captain Harris, he describes that of the mate as barbarous and inhuman in the extreme.

STATEMENT OF JOHN MESSER.

I belonged to the mate's watch, and was below at the time the ship struck, therefore I am unacquainted with the particulars relating to the fatal collision, which caused the loss of the William Brown. We felt the collision below, but did not think of hurrying on deck, especially as we were not called. Nearly twenty minutes, I think, elapsed before we were called—and then the not unusual cry of all hands shorten sail, roused us on deck. The topgallantsails foretopmost studding sail, and other light sails were taken in, and the topsails clewed down and reef tackles hauled out. The captain then went down in the forecastle in order to ascertain what damage had been done, and upon ascertaining, he exclaimed—"My God, we can't save the ship, it's no use—clear away the long boat." The pumps had previously been rigged, and every effort used to keep her afloat, but without effect. The passengers also rendered every assistance in their power, and were willing to do any thing for the safety of the ship.

The long boat was cleared away, and provisions, water, a compass, quadrant, and several other articles were put on board of her. One or two of the passengers secreted themselves in her while she was yet on board, and was hoisted out in her. When she was in the water, the passengers made a rush, and I believe that several of them perished in their haste to get on board. In the meantime the stern boat was also lowered down; but as I did not see what transpired, I will not state anything upon hearsay. The boats both dropped astern, where they remained fast by their painters to the ship until she was on the eve of sinking, when they were cut adrift. The ship went down in about three hours, I think, after she struck. There were forty-two in number in the long boat.

At daylight, Capt. Harris told the mate the latitude and longitude, and advised him to steer N. W. The captain then took the names of the passengers and crew, after which the mate told him that the long boat was very leaky, and could not live. Some communication, which I did not distinctly hear, then passed between the captain and the mate, to which the captain replied, "I will not hear such talk."—The mate then distinctly said—"We must cast lots—we cannot all live—some of us must die, the boat is so leaky." The captain again remonstrated with the mate, urging him to do the best in his power before he resorted to such measures.

Before leaving us, the captain addressed the boats crew encouragingly, desiring us to keep our hearts up, not to quarrel or fight among ourselves but to be advised by the mate, and to do what he should desire us. He then bid us good bye, and in fifteen minutes or so he was out of sight.

During the whole of the day the weather was extremely cold, and the sea very rough. We rigged a drag with our oars, in order to keep the boat's head to the sea, and to break the force of the waves. Towards night-fall the mate consulted, in a low voice, with several of the crew, about lightening the boat. I was aft at the time, with my back against the stern. At last he said to me and another man, who was near me, "Well, I supposed, you have no objections to lending us a hand to lighten the boat." I inquired how he intended to do so? and while I was speaking, I heard a splash alongside, and the whole boat was in an uproar,—the work of death had commenced. The other man and myself both remonstrated against such cold-blooded proceedings, and said—"If we are to die, let us die fair—let us cast lots."—"Very well," said the mate, "they will throw you overboard next." I then drew my sheath-knife, and swore, that whoever should lay hand on me, should share my fate. The mate then called a tall negro, one of the crew aft, to toss me overboard, but when he saw my knife he went forward again, and lent the others a hand. My companion stuck close to me during the whole of the heart-rending scene, determined to defend himself to the last.

One old man, a native of Ireland, when about to be seized, fell upon his knees and entreated them to spare his life, and he would give them all he had. He then drew from his purse a number of sovereigns, and offered them to the crew, but they were thrown aside and himself passed overboard. A lad, about 18 years of age, requested time to say his prayers, which was granted, and when he concluded he said, "I am now prepared—I do not wish you to throw me overboard—I will go myself," and he stepped off the gunwale of the boat into the sea. Of all who were thrown overboard, not one, to my knowledge, succeeded in getting on board again. There were no hands cut off, nor any blood spilt; neither did any one excepting the young man mentioned, jump overboard voluntarily.

The unfortunate passengers offered no resistance; prayers and entreaties were all they used. "Oh spare me! spare me!" several of them cried even while they were half overboard. I will not attempt a description of this awful scene—it would melt a heart of stone. I believe there were sixteen thrown overboard.

The boat was bailed out after she had been lightened; she then rode very well, and made but little water. The following morning I discovered a sail, and communicated the fact to the mate, who said "By God, Jack, you're a lucky fellow; you have saved your life." The ship that picked us up, as is already known, was the Cresent. So strong was my indignation against the negro, that upon reaching the Cresent's deck, I seized a cleaver and threw it at his head.

All of the crew in the boat, excepting the mate and another man, were foreigners, or as sailors say, Dutchmen, that is, men belonging to the continent of Europe.

Upon our arrival at Havre in the Villa de Lyon, the American consul, when made acquainted with the facts, advised me and my companion to remain and give our evidence against the mate and the crew; but we declined, upon the ground that we conceived the testimony of the passengers sufficient. As he was not very urgent, we were liberated after an examination before the Board of Police.

After my health was somewhat recruited, I shipped on board the Angelo, Capt. Jaques, bound for Newburyport, where I arrived on Wednesday last. I arrived in Boston on Thursday, and have made this statement for the information of the public. JOHN MESSER, seamen.

Highly Important from the Far West—Arrest of Joe Smith, the Mormon Chief—Great Excitement among the Mormons.

We have received several despatches from that region of Illinois where the Mormons reside, giving some curious accounts of the arrest of Joe Smith, and the excitement among the Latter-day Saints.

According to all appearances, a civil war will soon break out in Illinois. The Mormons are all armed and equipped, with their Generals and other officers. Joe Smith was arrested on Saturday, the 6th ult. The following is from the Warsaw, Ill. Signal, of the 9th ult.

JOE SMITH ARRESTED—It is, doubtless, known to many of our readers, that Joe Smith, the Mormon prophet, was arrested on Saturday last, in Quincy, on the warrant of Governor Carlin, under the requisition of the Governor of Missouri. He was, however, brought up on a habeas corpus before Calvin A. Warren, Master in Chancery for Adams county; and Judge Douglass having arrived in the city just at the time, he ordered the Prophet to be taken to Monmouth, to be examined before him. The Judge arrived at this place on Sunday morning last on his way to Monmouth, where the Court is now sitting. We understand that a question has been raised as to the legality of the arrest, and the object of the examination is to decide the point.—The last we heard of the Prophet, he was in the custody of the Sheriff of Adams county and on his way to Monmouth

In addition to this, the Governor of Illinois has removed the Mormon General (Bennett) from office, but the Mormons still possess their arms at Nauvoo. The following is Joe's proclamation:

"TO THE SAINTS ABROAD.

"The First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints anxious to promote the prosperity of the Church, feel it their duty to call upon the Saints who reside out of this county, to make preparations to come in, without delay. This is important, and should be attended to by all who feel an interest in the prosperity of this the corner stone of Zion. Here the temple must be raised, the university be built, and other edifices erected which are necessary for the great work of the last days; and which can only be done by a concentration of energy and enterprise. Let it therefore be understood, that all the stakes excepting those in this county, and in Lee county, Iowa, are discontinued, and the Saints instructed to settle in this county as soon as circumstances will permit.

JOSEPH SMITH.

Nauvoo, Hancock Co., Ill., May 24, 1841.

We have also received the "Revelation given to Joseph Smith, Jr. 19th June, 1841," on which all the movements of the Mormons are founded. It is the most curious piece of half prophecy, half impudence that ever was read. We shall hereafter give an extract.

We learn that the Mormons are preparing to rescue Joe from the hands of the Phillistines—and it is highly probable that the next accounts will bring us descriptions of the scenes and deeds of blood. Wait a little.—N. Y. Herald.

Judge Douglass has decided against the validity of the writ upon which Joe Smith the Mormon Prophet was arrested, with a view of having him surrendered to the authorities of Missouri. The Governor has, however, caused the secretary of state to issue a new process, and to have it placed in the proper officer's hands for execution.—Alton Ill. Telegraph.

FROM FLORIDA—HOSTILTIES RENEWED. On the fifth ult. a train of wagons between Fort Pleasant and Fort McComb, on the Sewanee, was attacked by Indians within a few miles of Fort McComb, and the whole train taken. Dr. Tufts, who was riding in advance with five of the escort, soldiers of the 3d Infantry discovered the enemy in ambush, and was fired on ere he could retreat to the wagons. One of the soldiers was killed instantly, and another whose horse had thrown him, retreated across the road pursued by eight or ten Indians, when the Indians gave a shrill whoop and fled into the hammock. Dr. Tufts in his turn, charged forward in the direction of Fort McComb. The Indians allowed him to pass, but soon showed themselves in a position flanking the wagons, upon which they commenced a heavy fire, compelling the teamsters and every one in connection with the train, to escape as fast as possible in the direction of Fort McComb. The train was left entirely abandoned to the enemy.

A GLOOMY PICTURE.—A late English paper states that the depression of trade is now so great that there are no fewer than three thousand empty dwellings in the borough of Stockport. All the mills are now working only eight hours per day.

Rather set than follow example.

From the Phil. Courier.

The supposed Piracy Case—Curious History—Arrival of Captain Gorham and Crew at Charleston—Investigation and Discharge.

Our readers will recollect that last week we gave an account of a most mysterious affair, in the ship Charles, of Bath, Maine, having been found at sea, lately from New Orleans, wholly abandoned.

Preparations were at once made at New Orleans to pursue the supposed pirates, as great excitement existed there in consequence of the mysterious discovery. It will be recollected that the statement was made that the passengers, many of whom were French people, going from New Orleans to France, to purchase goods, had with them large sums of money. The amount on board is known not to have been less than $100,000, probably much more. The general suspicion of piracy does not appear to have wholly abated yet, notwithstanding the arrival of Captain Gorham and crew at Charleston, South Carolina.

They arrived at that port on the 18th ult., in the schooner Ann, that vessel having been struck by lightning off Cape Hatteras, and obliged to make haven.—Capt. Gorham gives a strange account of his abandonment of the ship. He says that the crew being exhausted by their labors at the pumps, and the leak still gaining on them, they resolved to leave the vessel.—The French ship Louis XIV. coming in sight at this time, the passengers, twenty in number, insisted on being transferred to her, as she was bound to Havre. This was accordingly done, and a few hours afterwards the Captain and crew were put on board the schooner Ann, bound to Portsmouth, N. H., but which vessel went into Charleston, in consequence of having been afterwards disabled, as we have mentioned, by being struck with lightning.

Capt. Hubbard, of the brig America, from Chagres, arrived at New York, states that on the 12th ult., in lat. 26, 44 N., lon. 69, 20 W., he spoke the schooner Ann, from Attakapas, for Portsmouth, N. H., with Captain Gorham and crew of the ship Charles on board. Capt. Gorham informed Capt. Hubbard that he abandoned his ship when sixty miles from the Balize, and ten days from New Orleans, with five feet of water in her hold. It was marked on the mate's slate, when the ship was found, that she continued to make water. He also said that he had thrown overboard about four hundred bales of cotton to lighten her.

It appears, from what Capt. Hubbard could hear, that Capt. Gorham and his companions were taken from the Charles by a Spanish vessel, and afterwards transferred to the Ann.

Several hours after the above was communicated to Capt. Hubbard, the schooner again ran down to the brig, and the same person, said to be Capt. Gorham, asked if they could be relieved of some of her crew. Capt. H. replied that he could not take any, as he had no room, but would supply them with provisions if wanted. No answer to this was returned from the Ann.

The schooner acted in a strange manner, and perplexed Capt. Hubbard very much. Finally, however, he told her captain that she must go one way or the other, as he desired to lay his course. A breeze then sprung up, and the next morning the schooner was several miles astern.

Capt. Hubbard also says that when he spoke the schooner Ann, he asked Capt. Gorham why he did not take to the boats when he left his ship, and was answered that there were not enough boats. It will be remembered that one of the boats was picked up with a live dog and a box of sardines in it, and nothing else.

There are some singular reports afloat concerning the previous career of Captain Gorham, of the ship Charles, which go to show, as the New York papers declare, that he is a consummate rascal.—His name is William Gorham, Jr., and he is a native of Portland, Maine.

About three years ago he went to Oswego, N. Y., and commenced business. He opened a store there, and went along swimmingly, till one unfortunate day his building mysteriously caught fire and was destroyed—and it was strongly suspected by the people and the insurers that the store was burned by Gorham himself. Shortly afterwards this same Gorham moved to Buffalo, where another unfortunate affair occurred. His wife and children were taken suddenly ill—the children died—and the wife recovered with difficulty. They had been poisoned, and the husband was arrested on suspicion; but the wife not appearing against him, he escaped. The next heard of him was when in command of the ship Charles, with his brother as mate. They are both young men, as indeed were all the crew, few of whom were over twenty-one years of age.

Frederic Gorham, who was on board of the Charles, is the brother of Capt. Wm. Gorham, Jr. They are both from Portland.

There is something very singular about this affair—a mystery that time only will clear up. It is said by Captain Hubbard that the only person on board the Ann, who spoke to him, was Captain Gorham, or a person who represented himself as such. What is more remarkable than all, is the tale of Captain Gorham, of his having thrown overboard four hundred bales of cotton, when there was none to throw over. New Orleans papers state the cargo of the Charles to have been 65,000 staves, 70,000 feet of lumber, a lot of heading, and wheel spokes. No cotton is mentioned.

It is very singular that good seamen would leave a ship, under the fear of her sinking, when she was loaded with staves and timber. It was the general opinion at New Orleans, that a number of extra hands were secreted on board the ship, who may have joined the crew in murdering and robbing the passengers after they left the Balize. This opinion they think, is wonderfully strengthened by the discovery of a vacancy in the staves on board the Charles, sufficient for the accommodation of fifteen men. The contradictory reports given to Captain Hubbard, strike people as very singular.

Captain Gorham was examined at Charleston, and on his examination he presented a certificate, purporting to have been signed by the passengers, that they had been put on board the Louis XIV., bound to France, at their own request, because they believed the Charles was in a sinking condition. Most people think that such a certificate would have been very singular especially if the event which it would go to prove, were all as specified, because it can hardly be supposed that any captain would have bethought himself of the precaution of procuring such a certificate, if he had acted honestly, and from the necessity of the case.

However, let the facts be fairly stated—and let us hope that all was as the captain asseverates. Our readers shall have the first developments of this mysterious affair. In the statements we give to-day, we rely wholly upon numerous other highly respectable prints.

The New York Journal of Commerce says:—"This name of Captain William Gorham, Jr, if the whole and exclusively ownership of it belongs to one man, is something of a treasure. For Capt. Wm. Gorham, Jr., master of the brig Susan Elizabeth, in coming home from Buenos Ayres, in 1839, went ashore near Bath, Maine, to the great damage of the underwriters in this city. The captain on that occasion acted of course, as agent for whoever it might concern, sold the vessel and cargo, put the money in his pocket, and has not to this day proceeded any farther in his agency."

At Charleston, Capt. Gorham stated that the blood found in the cabin of the ship was from having cut his hand in breaking off the neck of a bottle of porter, about the time of his leaving her, and the blood seen on deck, arose from the mate cutting his hand in making a thole pin. This may be true, but it seems very strange that both should have cut their fingers at that particular time.

Is it not indeed mysterious? How did it happen that in ten days, the Charles was sixty miles from the Balize? Give us more light. The tales as they now stand cannot be believed.

THE BURIAL PLACE OF GENERAL HARRISON.—A letter from North Bend to the editor of the Lebanon Star says: "I am at present engaged in preparing and putting in order the mound or burial place for the reception of the General. It is a very elevated spot, a short distance west of the dwelling house, and opposite the mouth of the tunnel of the White Water Canal, affording a very fine view of the Ohio river. We are building a vault on the top of the mound—clearing off the under-growth, leaving only a few scattering trees—fencing it in with a good, though neat and substantial fence; harmonizing in this particular with the life and character of him who is to repose within its pale. I think it quite likely the funeral will take place on the Fourth of July, or the day that may be kept as our national anniversary, for the 4th comes on Sunday. Of the time, however, the committee will make a public announcement."

Great Excitement in Illinois—The Mormons—Joe Smith Arrested.

A letter from Nauvoo, Illinois, to the editor of the Baltimore Patriot says:

"The excitement on both sides of the river against the Mormons is increasing very fast. The conduct of Joe Smith and the other leaders, is such as no community of white men can tolerate. It is the entire absence of all moral and religious principle that renders them so obnoxious to the Gentiles of all denominations, wherever they reside.

Joe Smith was yesterday arrested, between Nauvoo and Quincy, by the authorities of Illinois, on a requisition from the Governor of Missouri. May justice be meted out to him for his villainy.

Martin Harris, who was one of the witnesses to the book of Mormon, and who has been for some time lecturing in Illinois against the Mormons, was found dead last week, having been shot through the head. He was, no doubt, murdered."

GAS.—The authorities of Cincinnati, O. have passed an ordinance, which grants to Major Conover and his associates, the exclusive privilege of supplying the city with gas for 25 years, on condition, that he supply the city, for city use, gas light at two-thirds the lowest price charged in any city of the United States; that he shall expend $2000 on the object within six months; and that he shall lay 6000 feet of pipe within two years, on failure of which there is a forfeiture of the grant.

RESPITE.—Governor Seward has granted a respite to James L. Davis, sentenced to be hung in Buffalo, N. Y, on the 22d ult., until the 20th of August, to enable his counsel to apply to the Supreme Court for a new trial.

FRESHET.—The Canal at Lynchburg has been very seriously damaged by the most tremendous freshet ever witnessed there.

REMAINS OF GENERAL HARRISON.—The Baltimore Clipper of yesterday says:—On Saturday afternoon, between three and four o'clock, the mortal remains of the late President were brought into this city from Washington, in charge of the committee appointed to convey them to North Bend. From the depot they were transmitted to Barnum's Hotel, in a car guarded by eight U. S. Marines, and followed in solemn procession, by the committee and a few of our venerable citizens, costumed in black, wearing appropriate badges of mourning. The body was placed in a basement room of the Hotel, fronting on Fayette street. This was deemed most prudent by the committee, as they wished to keep it in the coolest place possible. It may be proper to remark that the arrangements from the depot to the Hotel were entirely under the supervision of Mr. Barnum himself, it being desirous to avoid show and parade. The body is enclosed first in a leaden coffin, which is placed in a mahogany one, and then in one of zinc, hermetically sealed. This is also enclosed in a coffin of walnut, with chloride of lime filled in between it and the zinc, which is very substantially made, and air-tight. Covering the whole in a rich black silk velvet pall, trimmed with gold fringe and hung with gold tassels. When the body was exposed to the committee at Washington a short time previous to its removal, it had undergone very little change. The features appeared as at death, except that the face was a little swollen.

On Saturday evening the U. S. Marines were relieved by the Independent Blues, who kept sentry by turns, pacing the pavement fronting where the remains were deposited, until one o'clock, when they were relieved by the Eutaw Infantry, who volunteered and kept guard until morning, when the National Guards took their place during the day. The first Light Division of Maryland Volunteers, under command of Brig. Gen. B. C. Howard are ordered out, and will escort the remains from Barnum's Hotel to the depot of the Susquehanna Railroad, whence they will be transported to York, Pa., thence to Columbia, thence by the way of canal to Pittsburgh, thence down the river to North Bend. Some of our military companies intend going as far as Columbia, in which case no charge will be made by the Railroad Company either going or returning, which privilege has been liberally granted by the President & Directors. For this generous act much praise is due to them.

CANADA CONFERENCE.—The Wesleyan Methodist Conference held their annual session in Toronto, Upper Canada, commencing on Wednesday the 9th ult. We learn from the Christian Guardian that the attendance was full, and not one had died in the course of the year. The former President, Rev. Thomas Whitehead opened the session with the usual religious exercises, after which the Rev. William Ryerson was elected President, Rev. A. Green, Secretary, and Rev. Messrs. Bevitt and Vaudusen, Assistants. Dr. Luckey, of the New York Conference, who was appointed in the place of Bishop Hedding to represent the M. E. Church in the Canada Conference, failed to attend, Six preachers were received into the Conference after the manner of receiving them in England, who with three others, were received on trial. The Guardian states that 1900 persons had joined the Church in the last year, and that "1250 members had been drawn away by the London Missionaries;" leaving still a nett increase of 650. The whole number of members at present is more than 17,000. The Conference had not adjourned when the Guardian went to press, but the most of the business was done and the preachers were acting in the most perfect harmony.—Pitts. C. Advocate.

ABOLITION PETITIONS.—Messrs. Botts and A. H. H. Stuart, members of Congress from this State, have severally published letters, explaining the reason of their voting for Mr. Adams' motion to rescind the 21st rule of the House, to be a desire to have the abolition petitions received, referred and reported upon, as being the surest method of quieting the agitation on the subject of Abolition, inasmuch as the course heretofore adopted has mingled with it the question of the right of petition, to which the best men in the country are devotedly attached. The Madisonian says: "The views of these gentlemen, in our judgment, are sound. They have long been the views of Mr. Clay, as we believe, and if they had been adopted at the outset a good deal of discussion, expense and bad feeling, would have been saved. Receive the petitions, or you will have endless trouble. Refer and report upon them, clearly and solemnly, and you will remove one of the principal causes of excitement and agitation."—Va. paper.

SUICIDE.—A man calling himself John Clark, committed suicide, by hanging, on Tuesday night last, in the barn of Edmund Robinson, of Turtlecreek township, in this county. No cause for this act is yet known. Clark, we are informed, had been working in the neighborhood for some one or two months, and appeared to be a man of good moral character, of becoming deportment and cheerful disposition; although at times he gave evidence of partial derangement of mind. He was about 27 years of age, 5 feet 10 inches high, sandy complexion. He came from Beaver county, Pennsylvania, where his parents reside; had been absent from home between three and four years, travelling and laboring as necessity required. His parents, he said, were wealthy; and although he spoke of his father and mother with affection he appeared unwilling to return to them.—Leb. O. Star.

THE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE.

WEDNESDAY, ... JULY 7, 1841.

It is stated that T. H. Benton declines being a candidate for the Presidency at the next canvass.

HARVEST.—The cutting of wheat commences this week. We heard of a field, a few miles off, which was cut on the 3d inst.

☞The bill appropriating $25,000 to the widow of the late President has passed both Houses of Congress, and will no doubt become a law.

☞The request of Brs. Norris and Wallace in relation to their Prospectus shall be complied with in our next paper, this being pre-occupied.

SHIN PLASTERS.—The corporation of Zanesville has issued a lot of shin plasters, redeemable in bank paper "three months after date." This redemption with bank paper "three months after date," we think to be rather a hard bore.

POOR-HOUSE.—John Roberts, John Peters, and Wm. Camp have been appointed by the Commissioners of Muskingum county, directors of the Poor-House for the ensuing year, and they have appointed John Burtch superintendent.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK.—The July number of this interesting monthly is received. Two splendid steel engravings—Sunday morning, and Sale of the Pet Lamb, and plate of the Fashions. Nothing can be more striking and affecting than the "Sale of the Pet Lamb."

SPRINGFIELD SABBATH SCHOOL.—An address was delivered on Sabbath afternoon to this school. It is reported to be in a better condition now than at any former period; to have near 90 scholars, and a regular attendance of 50 or 60. Our Episcopal Methodist brethren came out of their own district, and took some pains to get up an "opposition line," beside us, on the occasion, in accordance with their usual custom.

☞Br. Wallace, of the N. Y. Luminary, complains that our paper does not reach him latterly, and wishes to know the reason. We inform our esteemed friend that it has been regularly forwarded, and the cause of its failure to reach him is unknown to us. He will believe us to be sincere when we say that such are the kindly feelings we hold toward him, that we could not knowingly treat him with neglect.

☞The Episcopal Church building, on South Street, Zanesville, having been purchased by the English Lutheran congregation, the Episbopalians have commenced building a new Church on Sixth street, nearly opposite the Market street Baptist church. The corner-stone of the edifice was laid on Thursday morning last, with appropriate ceremonies by the Rev. Mr. Smallwood.—Zanes. Gaz. 30th ult.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST.—This branch of the Church of Christ, is making renewed efforts to be useful. They have established a paper, at De Ruyter N. Y. to aid their enterprise, which has reached its 69th No. We learn from this that some prosperity attends their labor. On the 3d ult. a church was established at Hounsfield, N. Y., of 47 members, and one at Watson a short time before of 36 members.

SWEET HOME.—The article we published, a few weeks since, under this caption, from the Christian Intelligencer, which purported to give an account of the origin of the impressive hymn commencing:

"An alien from God and stranger to grace," is pronounced by the editor of the 'Christian World' and the editor of the Methodist Protestant, to be a fiction. They both state the author of that elegant hymn to be Luther J. Cox, of the Methodist Protestant church of Baltimore; and that it was first published in Harrod's collection of camp-meeting hymns.

UTICA CONVENTION.—This convention met according to notice, being called by the Wesleyan Methodists of that place. Its object professed to be to make preparations for a more general convention, with a view to a union of the Seceding Methodists. Br. Bailey, of the 'Fayetteville Luminary,' and Br. Norris of the 'Olive Branch,' were both present, and took a part in its proceedings. The latter considers it a failure,—the former speaks most favorably of the meeting.

We agree with Br. Norris that there is little prospect of a general union of the Seceding Methodists, from the fact that some of the leaders among the Northern Secessions seem to have certain hobby principles of casuistry and polity, that, with them cannot be compromised. Among the rest is the principle of Congregationalism. This thing of removing our field of labor every two or three years is greatly in the way of some people. We are sorry to know that there are some highly esteemed ministers among us who would like to have our economy more suitable to their convenience on this subject; yet, we are glad to see that the laity are firmly opposed to any innovation in this particular. We were more than pleased to learn that the New York Conference, recently, put their decided veto on an effort to approach this point. We think we have abundant reasons for our opinion, in this matter, but have not time to exhibit them at present.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE.—Wheat rose on last Monday week to 70 cts.; Flour at retail at 4,00; Shorts to 10 cts. Wheat went up on Saturday last to 80 cts. and flour to 4,50. One of our principal millers, who has a large lot of flour in New York, informed us they could now sell at a handsome profit, but that they were holding on for higher prices, hoping to recover some of what they had lost by flour depreciating on their hands for two or three years back.

BALTIMORE, June 26.—Flour—Our report of the Flour market closed last week, with indications of a further improvement in prices; subsequent operations added to the light receipts have confirmed previous anticipations. Howard street flour was steady at $5,25, when an advance of 6¼ cts. was demanded by holders, and subsequently 12½, both of which prices were paid—thus extending the rates to 5,37½ for good standard brands, although but a few hundred bbls. were taken, and those on Thursday and yesterday. The car and wagon price is 5,12½.—The receipts continue very light and the tendency of prices is still upward. Holders of the small stocks of City mills ask 5,62½ a 5,75, without realizing either; the last sales were at 5,50. All the Susquehanna has been taken at 5,37½, on short time, with interest added.

The Home Market—There were about 300 head of Cattle in market this week; of which nearly 80 were sold at 6,50 for some inferior, to 7,50 for prime quality; 127 were taken to eastern markets, and 110 laid over. The price for Hogs continues at 4,25; operations light.—Lyford.

STEUBENVILLE, July 1.—There has been, within a few weeks past, a considerable advance in the price of wheat and of course in that of flour. At Steubenville, the price of wheat is 75 cts. per bushel. Flour 4,00.—Herald.

CINCINNATI, June 30.—Flour, 4,03; Wheat, 65 a 70; Corn, 20 a 25; Oats, 20.—Phil.

PITTSBURGH, June 25.—Flour is quick, and in demand. Sales at the Monongahela of 105 bbls. at 3,65 a 3,75, and 351 bbls. at 3,78, currency, and from stores 3,97½ a 4,00.

Grain—Wheat, 65 to 70; Rye 35; Corn 31; Oats 40c, per bushel.

Bacon—Plenty and dull; sales of 12,000 lbs. at 4½c, on time.

Coffee—Sales of the week about 800 bags at 12½ a 13c. per lb. on time.—Harris.

PHILADELPHIA, June 29.—Flour—The advance of 12½ cents on flour has been fully sustained, and sales to the amount of 2000 bbls. have been made at 5,12½ since our last report; good brands are now firmly held at 5,25. The stocks very light and the receipts small, with an increased demand.

Beef Cattle were in moderate request; 400 head were sold at 5,50 a 7,50 per 100 lbs. for common to good quality.—Bicknell.

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED—On 17th ult. by the Rev. James Culbertson, Mr. JAMES GEORGE to Miss SARAH WILEY, all of this county.

ITEMS.

A suit has been brought against one of the Banks that have accepted the provisions of the new Relief Law, to recover specie on one of the notes issued under that law. It is not yet decided.—Phil. paper.

EXPLOSION.—The Duncan McRae blew up on the Savannah river on the 8th ult. Two negroes were killed, and the captain and three men scalded. Cargo totally lost.

NEW CHURCH.—Two new Churches are about to be erected in Norristown, Pa., one by the Winebrenner, the other by the Methodist Episcopal Congregation, and a new Catholic Church is about to be erected at Detroit, Mich.

ARRESTED.—A counterfeiter, calling himself Wm. Mulleg, was arrested at St. Louis, on the 11th ult. He was caught in the act of passing spurious notes, on several of the western banks.

ACCUSATION.—The charge against Joe Smith, the Mormon prophet, is treason against the state of Missouri.

The reward of $5000, offered for the St. Louis murderers, has been divided among four persons. Ennis, the negro, who gave the first information received $1200.

The Canadas are in agitation again. The inhabitans are a motly groupe. Out of the uproar there something decisive must occur before long, Col borne finds it hot work to try to govern

Mr. Thomas Dunlap, the late President of the late Bank of the U. S., has recommenced the practice of the law in this city. That is the way men return to private life.—Phil. paper.

St. Louis has a population now of very nearly 30,000. It has grown very rapidly.

Beef is so high in Baltimore that many refuse to eat it.

The public debt of Mexico is over £34,000,000. Hard for so lazy a race.

FIRE.—On the morning of the 24th ult., between one and two o'clock A. M. a four story brick building, No. 247 Market street, Philadelphia, occupied as a Grocery, was fired as supposed by some incendiary, and burned down. One man was killed by the falling of a portion of the wall, and several badly hurt.

ATTEMPT TO MURDER.—We are informed by a passenger by the line from Baltimore yesterday, that a murder was attempted upon a young gentleman stopping at the Eutaw House, by a person who lodged in the same room. We refrain, at present, from giving the particulars.

ESCAPE OF CONVICTS—MURDER.—Eight of the convicts confined in the penitentiary, at Jefferson City, Mo., escaped from prison on the 14th ult., after murdering the overseer. The murder was the result of a conspiracy.

THE CROPS IN NEW YORK.—The editor of the Rochester Democrat, who has lately travelled through the western towns of Monroe county, and the northren and eastern towns of Genessee county, that the growing crops in that section have been much injured by long continued drought.—In some of the towns he estimates the probable yield of wheat at 50 per cent. less than the usual one.

A SNUG SUM.—According to the official return, the estimated sum to be repaid to the East India Company on account of the China expedition, is £625,293 7s. 9d.

WHALE SHIP.—The Wilmington, Del., Whaling Company's ship Lucy Ann, Captain Cox, is expected to arrive at Wilmington in about a month, with a cargo of 1400 barrels of sperm, and 1200 barrels of whale oil, valued at about $50,000.

LIVES LOST.—The Cincinnati Republican of the 21st ult. states that the steamboat Ambassador was run into last week, by the Vicksburg, and one man killed, and four others knocked overboard and drowned. The accident occured just before daylight, while many of the hands and deck passengers were asleep on the guards.

SHIPWRECK.—The New York Commercial says:—"Capt. Whitney, of the Br. ship Symmetry, arrived this morning, reports that on the 16th ult. when in lat. 42 37, long. 53 21, he boarded the wreck of the Br. Schooner Belvidere, lumber loaded, all her spars carried away, full of water, and some dead bodies were in the cabin.

TEMPERANCE.—Since the arrival at Pittsburg, Pa., of the Delegates from the Washington Temperance Society of Baltimore twelve hundred citizens of Pittsburg have joined the Temperance Association.

ACCIDENT.—On Friday, while some persons were engaged in taking down an old church at Morristown, N. J., the structure fell in, killing a man named Moore, and severely wounding several others.

MAIL ROBBERY.—The Ulster N. Y. Republican states that the steamboat mail bag between that place and Catskill was cut open on Thursday night last, rifled of its contents, and thrown overboard.

DROUGHT.—The Red River, La., Whig, says the weather in that region is excessively hot. The crops in many parts of the Parish are suffering very much for the want of rain, particularly on the plantations near town, and without we have at goodly quantity within a few days, they must be seriously affected. The corn, particularly, is suffering.

NO LYNCHING.—The lynchers seem to find but little favor in Chicot county, Arkansas.—The Times says that four men, who took upon themselves to chastise one Solomon Crosby, were tried for assault and battery, and the jury rendered a verdict of $12,000. A few verdicts like this will put a stop to lynch law.

OLDEST CLERGYMAN.—Dr. Abercrombie who died on Saturday evening, was the Senior Protestant Episcopal Cleryman of Philadelphia. He was universally esteemed for his amiability and kindness.

Marriage generally improves the character of woman, not only because it puts her under the best possible tuition, that of the affections, and affords scope to her active energies, but because it gives her high aims, and a more dignified position in society.

CROPS.—The Baltimore Patriot says, "the refreshing rains with which we have been visited during the last few days, have been of incalculable advantage to vegetation in the vicinity of the city, which was beginning to suffer from the effects of heat and drought."

THE STEAM-SHIP PRESIDENT.—The New York Express says: "The Insurance Companies, that underwrote on the cargo of the steamer President, have paid the full amount of the loss. This is conclusive evidence of what the underwriters think of her fate. The amount insured in this city, was thirty thousand dollars."

DEATH OF MAJOR GENERAL MACOMB.—We learn from Washington that Major General Alexander Macomb, Commanding General of the Army died suddenly from a fit on Friday of apoplexy.

Since the above paragraph was written we have seen a letter from the Adjutant General at Washington, announcing the death of Gen. Macomb—at half past 2. P. M. on Friday.—Phil. Chron.

PRESIDENT HARRISON.—The remains of President Harrison arrived in Baltimore at 2 o'clock on Saturday, escorted by a portion of the Marine corps, under the command of Colonel Henderson, and attended by the Cincinnati Committee. They were deposited in the City Hotel. They will be removed this morning westward, by the York cars and Susquehanna and Pennsylvania Canal to Pittsburg.

MARBLE IN VIRGINIA.—We learn from the Rockingham Register that a Mr. Viquesney has discovered marble of the finest quality in various parts of Rockingham county. Some that he has worked he finds equal to the finest Egyptian marble. It is susceptible to the finest polish, is of every shade, and some of it beautifully varigated.—Wheeling Gazette.

WHEAT IN MISSISSIPPI.—Some recent experiments demonstrate the practicability of growing wheat in Mississippi. Fine crops, it is said, have already been produced. The yield however will not compare with the product in the North.

An honest man need not feel the assaults of his enemies. Talent will be appreciated, industry will be rewarded, and he who pursues, in any calling, an open, manly, honest course, will in the end triumph over all enemies and build up for himself a good name, which shall endure long after his traducers shall have been forgotten.

THE WONDER-WORKING REFORMER.—It is stated that Father Matthew, in a recent progress through Ireland, made 2000 proselytes, while changing horses at Athboy.

SUNK.—The steam ferry boat Delaware sunk at Camden, N. J., early yesterday morning. The cause of the accident was the guard of the boat catching the wharf at high water, and from this she filled before it was possible to extricate her.

The quantity of Flour delivered from the Erie Canal at West Troy and Albany the second week in June, was 55,420 bbls; of Wheat, 6121 bushels.

THE FISCAL AGENT.—From the nature of the two projects now before the country for a National Bank and general Fiscal Agent, those of Messrs. Ewing, and Clay, and the peculiar pertinancy with which each is adhered to by its respective friends we should judge there is to be a nice nut for some of our constitutional lawyers to crack. Mr. Ewing has formed his plan upon the most generally acknowledged opinion, that the consent of the States must be obtained before such an institution, with branches scattered thro' the country, can constitutionally exist; while Mr. Clay has evinced a strong desire, bordering somewhat on determination, to urge the adoption of the plan reported by a majority of the committee on Finance, which is understood to be his own, without waiting for the States to say whether or not they are willing to receive branches of it. This is the difference between the plan of Mr. Ewing and that of Mr. Clay—the one affirming the necessity of appealing to the State Legislatures and the other denying it; necessarily involves the important constitutional question which has always stood in the way of a National Bank.

GEN. HARRISON'S FAMILY.—A Resolution has been passed by Congress giving to the family of General Harrison the amount of one year's salary, $25,000. Many visiters at Washington thought the amount was too small, and as a rebuke to the liberality of our legislators, held a meeting for the purpose of raising $100,000 to erect a monument at 'North Bend.'

We think that $25,000 is enough, and none too much. The mere amount in dollars & cents, however great, cannot repair the loss sustained by the family in the death of Gen. Harrison, still, as it is undoubtedly true, that during and after the election, Gen. Harrison displayed much liberality—and consequently involved the estate, it is no more than right and just that a proper respect should be paid to the circumstances of the family, and they be relieved from any distress or inconvenience arising therefrom.—New England Review.

THE LATE ELOPEMENT FROM PARIS.—The Polish cavilier who ran away a few days since with the Princess of Spain, the daughter of the Infant Don Francisco, has received the reward of his audacity by being honored with the consent of the Prince and Princess to his legal marriage with the head-strong and weak-hearted young lady. The only condition imposed by the parents is, that the happy couple are to be happy out of, and not in France. They are prohibited from crossing the frontier, and have all Europe open to them, with the exception of the Eden of Spain, and its northern limit, France. The Poles have become the rage at Paris, since this adventure, and every gentleman, with a "sky" in his name is deemed quite celestial.

RAIN AND STORMS.—For several days past we have had a good deal of rain, and on Tuesday a severe storm with sharp lightning, which we find has struck in several places. It struck Mr James McCully's house, Wood street, a house in Allegheny, prostrating a womon and tearing down the mantel, &c.; at Lawrenceville it struck several trees, a stable, and destroyed part of a glove factory at the old paper mill; at Wilkinsburgh it burnt down Mr. Edward Thompson's stable.—Pitts. Intel.

THE GLORIOUS TEMPERANCE CAUSE.—This heavenly cause goes on gloriously, triumphantly. In almost half a century in Pittsburgh we have never seen such a complete moral revolution, such triumphant marches in the great temperance ranks, all denominations, and both sexes press every night to our overflowing churches, and join their counsels, their wisdom and christian sympathies and union to lead the drunkard, the tipler or the temperate drinker, "to the feet of Jesus in their right mind." Every church where they have held meetings has been full, and they have several times had two meetings at extreme points on the same night.—ib.

We have taken some pains to ascertain the present and prospective condition of the crops in this section of country—and report as the result of our inquiries, that there will be a great deficiency in the yield of wheat. Some fields are already given over to pasturage.

Of Fruit there will probably be a small quantity, and no great variety.—Mt. Pleas. Pa. Reg.

LARGE HOGS.—Mr. George Baker, of Edgmont, Delaware county, Pa., slaughtered on the 10th of March last, a hog which weighed when dressed 879 lbs!

Mr. Philip S. Bishop, of Edgmont, Delaware co, Pa., also slaughtered, on the 30th of March, a hog which weighed, when dressed, 967 lbs! Those two hogs were about 2½ years old, and of common stock; both one litter. The litter consisted of twenty three. We challenge the Berkshire to beat this.—Gen. Farmer.

THE OLDEST BRIDGE IN ENGLAND.—The oldest bridge now existing in England is the triangular bridge at Croyland, in Lincolnshire, sometimes called Crowland, which is said to have been erected about A. D. 860. It is formed by three semi-arches, whose bases stand in the circumference of a circle, equidistant from each and uniting at the top. Nicholdson says, that this curious triune formation has led many persons to imagine that the architect intended to suggest an idea of Trinity.

Congress--Extra Session.

From the Philadelphia Daily Chronicle.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE TWENTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS.

Washington, June 25, 1841.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—Mr. Adams, from the select committee on the removal of the remains of Gen. Harrison, from the Congress burying ground, reported the following:

Resolved, That the committee from both Houses be authorized to superintend the removal of said remains from the Congress burying ground, in connexion with the committee appointed by the citizens of Cincinnati, for said purpose, and when this House adjourn, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The resolution was adopted and sent to the Senate.

Mr. Briggs moved that the same committee which reported the resolution be charged with its fulfilment.

Concurred in.

THE CASE OF MCLEOD.—The unfinished business, the resolution of Mr. J. G. Floyd, then came up.

Mr. Cushing continued his remarks, which were broken off yesterday by the adjournment.

Mr. Wise was opposed to the whole resolution in all its bearings. It was out of time. We were too much in the habit of exposing our diplomatic actions to the gaze of the whole world.

The House then went into a committee of the whole, Mr. Lawrence in the Chair.

The Distribution bill was then read by the clerk.

Mr. Johnson stated that it was not his intention to occupy much time in introducing the bill to the House, as it was a subject which had been long discussed in all parts of this country, and it was a subject of vast importance to all classes of our citizens.

[A message was received from the Senate, announcing their concurrence in the resolution in relation to removing the remains of Gen. Harrison, and the appointment of a committee on their part.

Also, announcing an amendment to the bill, an appropriation for the relief of Mrs. Harrison, which was a provision that so much as had been paid on account of his salary, should be deducted from the appropriation. The amendment was agreed to by the House.]

Mr. Johnson then continued his remarks.

Mr. Arnold moved that the committee rise.—Agreed to.

MCLEOD CASE.—Mr. Tillinghast went into a defence of the Secretary of State's course.

Mr. Holmes thought this Government had acted right and that this House ought to sacrifice party spirit, and trust to the enlightened individual now at the head of the Nation for the honorable settlement of this question.

Mr. Gordon then rose and asserted that New York did not agree with the Secretary of State, and addressed the House at length.

Mr. Wise moved to lay the resolution on the table. The motion was lost, yeas 51, nays 105.

The resolution, which expires by limitation to-morrow, fixing the hours of meeting and adjournment of this House was extended for another week, and the House adjourned at 3 o'clock.

SENATE.—Petitions were presented by Messrs Tallmadge, Barrow, Clay, Berrien, Wright, and Merrick, in favor of a General Bankrupt Law.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution offered by Mr. Buchanan calling for a list of all removals from office which may have been made since the 4th of March.

The question being on the motion of Mr. Mangum to add a list of all removals from office made between the 4th of March, 1839, and the 4th of March, 1841,

Mr. King moved a reconsideration of the vote of yesterday, by which the printing of the commercial statement was ordered, and the motion was laid over.

The Bill to incorporate the subscribers to the Fiscal Bank of the United States, was taken up for consideration, but before the discussion commenced Mr. Calhoun made some statements as to information which he had gathered from different sources respecting the opinions of the people of North Carolina on the subject of a Bank. He stated that Governor Dudley and the Speaker of the late House of Representatives were opposed to such a Bank.

Mr. Mangum re-stated what he had yesterday said on the subject.

Mr. Graham stated as the best test of public opinion, that at the recent election for members of Congress, eight bank members and five anti-Bank had been returned.

The bill for the relief of Mrs. Harrison having been read a third time, Mr. Benton called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, and they were ordered.

Mr. Pierce then made some remarks in opposition to the bill.

The question was taken and decided in the affirmative—yeas 28, nays 16.

A joint resolution was received from the House of Representatives directing the removal of the remains of the late General Harrison on to-morrow, and that the two Houses adjourn until Monday.

On motion of Mr. Bayard, a committee of five were appointed on the part of the Senate.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the bill to incorporate the subscribers to the Fiscal Bank of the United States. The second section of the bill was then read.

Mr. Berrien moved that the word "Augusta" be stricken out for opening books for subscription, and inserting "Savannah," which was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Tallmadge, "Springfield" was inserted instead of "Vandalia," Illinois.

The third section was then read.

Mr. Clay stated that the value of foreign coins as fixed in this section had been made from recent and careful essays.

Mr. Buchanan said he had intended to make some remarks this morning, but at the instance of the Senator from Kentucky, it was thought best to let the friends of the bill go through it, and then they would move their amendments.

Mr. Clay acceded to this course.

The residue of the sections were then read through, and a few verbal amendments were made.

Mr. Huntington moved to strike out "ten" and insert "five," so as to leave the Bank at liberty to issue five dollar notes.

Mr. Benton dissented from the proposition.

Mr. Clay, of Ky., was indifferent about the fate of the amendment, but as he thought it might promote public convenience, he would vote for it.

The question was then taken on the amendment by ayes and noes, and decide in the negative—ayes 21, noes 26.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—On a former day, a memorial had been presented by Mr. Fornance of Pennsylvania, from citizens of that State.

This petition, giving rise to debate, had been ordered under the rule, to lie over, and now came up in its order.

There were four motions pending.

First, the motion of Mr. Fornance, to refer the petitions to the Committee on Manufactures, with instructions to report a bill increasing the duties on imports.

Secondly, the motion of Mr. Holmes to refer it to the Committee on Commerce.

Thirdly, the motion of Mr. Atherton to refer it to the Committee on Ways and Means.

And fourthly, the motion of Mr. Lewis Williams to amend the instructions by instructing the committee "to inquire into the expediency" of reporting such a bill.

And the question being on the amendment of Mr. Williams, Mr. Lewis Williams moved to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. Fornance claimed the floor, and inquired if the gentleman from North Carolina could make that motion at that time.

The Speaker said Mr. Fornance was entitled to the floor.

Mr. Fornance said that all he asked in presenting this petition was an expression of the sense of the House at as early a period as was possible at this session.

The debate was continued at great length, Mr. Fornance having the floor, and was concluded by Mr. F. stating, that he felt thankful that the House had permitted him to state the reasons why he asked the committee to be instructed; the subject would admit, he thought, of farther discussion; but as the majority seemed very sensitive, he would not for the present say a single word more.

Mr. Lewis Williams moved to lay the petition on the table.

Mr. Fornance said the sense of the House might be obtained by that motion, and asked the yeas and nays, which were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas, 130—nays, 60.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Philadelphia Chronicle.

SLAVERY IN ENGLAND.—The English nation has always expressed itself sensitive on the subject of slavery, and held up to the world American slaveholders in the light of tyrants and brutes. It has abolished the institution in its West India colonies, maintains a fleet at a great expense on the coast of Africa, to prevent the trade, and seizes every vessel to which the least suspicion is attached. It is an old adage that "charity begins at home," and the government of Great Britain should carefully study, remember and abide by it. Ere one nation interferes with the domestic concerns of another, her hands should be pure, her escutcheon unsullied, and her intentions just.

There is, at present, no people on earth that possesses more slaves than the English, and certainly none are more cruel task masters. Millions and millions of the poor East Indians feel the weight of their cruelty, and are forced to bow down submissive in sorrow and servitude. Yet this is the people who are continually prating of freedom, the rights of man, and the equality of the human family.

The poet says "slaves cannot breathe in England"—a palpable falsehood, for they do breathe, feel the lash, and worry through a short existence in the land which professes to be the most polished, enlightened, and humane, of any on earth. Let her artizans—those who toil and labor for a mere subsistence, in her manufactories—the poor, decriped race, whose one unwearied round is that of suffering—let such speak, and they will tell a tale that should forever put a stop to the croakings of those who make such great pretensions to humanity, but who never practice what they preach.

The suffering and misery of those who work in the English manufactories, should claim the undivided attention of such as are so profuse of their villifying epithets when speaking of the United States. The work should begin there, and when the foul blot is removed from her shores, England may then, with honor, commence her charitable crusade in other lands; but until such is the case let her hold her peace.

The following, from the Cobourgh (England) Star, is a part of a report by one of Lord Ashley's committees of inquiry into the state of the manufacturing establishments. The barbarities practiced upon the unhappy children who are forced to work in these dens of misery, 15 hours a day, are heart-sickening, and we venture to say, can find no parallel, even among the most cruel, hard-hearted, and cold-blooded, as the English term them, African slave dealers:

No. 1.—"Eliza Marshall, lives at Leeds—worked at Marshall's factory. Am seventeen years old. Father dead. Sister and self did what we could to support mother. Have cried many an hour in the factory. Could scarcely get home—sometimes had to be "trailed" home.—I have an iron on my leg, and my knee is contracted. Worked in great pain and misery. I was straight before. Sister carried me up to bed many a time. The surgeon says it is with long standing at the mill, and that the marrow is quite dried up, and will never be formed again."

No. 2.—"Stephen Binns stated, I have worked in Mr. Marshall's factory. The work produces deformity. It lames the children. The work exacted from the children is all that can possibly be done. It cannot be done without resorting to flogging. It is an offence for any one to speak to another. The water used for hot spinning is heated to 110 or 120 degrees. The children have almost continually to plunge their hands and arms in that water. The heat of the rooms and the steam almost macerate their bodies, and their clothes are steamed and wet.—If they fall sick, they are turned adrift directly—without wages—without provisions. If a girl complain of ill-usage, she is discharged immediately, without any redress. The present system is ruining the rising generation. It is sacrificing the children for a paltry consideration!"

No. 3.—"Samuel Downe. I was ten years old when I began to work at Mr. Marshall's mill at Shrewsbury. We began at 5 in the morning and worked till 8 at night. The engine never stopped, except 40 minutes at dinner time. The children were kept awake by a blow or a box. Very considerable severity was used in that mill. I was strapped most severely, till I could not bear to sit upon a chair without having pillows; and I was forced to lie upon my face in bed at one time, and through that I left. I was strapped on my legs, and then I was put upon a man's back and strapped, and then I was strapped and buckled with two straps to an iron piller and flogged. After that the overlooker took a piece of tow and twisted it in the shape of a cord, and put it in my mouth, and gagged me. We were thus beaten. We were never allowed to sit down. Young women were beaten as well as young men."

No. 4.—"The overlooker, examined, says, he walks round the room with a stick in his hand, and if a child fall down over his work, he touches that child on the shoulder, and conducts it to an iron cistern which is filled with water. He then takes the child (heedless of sex) by the legs, and dips it overhead in the cistern, and sends it to its work. In that dripping condition the child labors for the remainder of the day. That is the punishment for drowsiness!" * * * * "We have a vast number of cripples. Some are crippled from losing their limbs—many from standing too long. It first begins with a pain in the ankle; after that they will ask the overlooker to let them sit down—but they must not. Then they begin to be weak in the knee—then knock-kneed—after that their feet turn out—they become splay-footed, and their ankles swell as big as my fists. I know many deformed in the way described."

A BRILLIANT STUCCO WHITE-WASH.—Many have probably often heard of the brilliant and lasting whitewash upon the east end of the President's House, at Washington city. The following is a correct receipt for making it:

"Take clean lumps of well burnt lime, (say five or six quarts,) slack the same with hot water, in a tub, (covered, to keep in the steam,) pass it in the fluid form through a fine seive; add one fourth of a pound of whitening, or burnt alum pulverized; one pound of good sugar; three pints of rice flour, made into a thin and well boiled paste, and one pint of clean glue, dissolved by first soaking it well, and then putting it in a small kettle which should again be put into a larger one filled with water, and placed over a slow fire. Add five gallons of hot water to the whole mixture.

"This wash is applied where particular neatness is required, with a painter's brush. It must be put on while warm, if upon the outside of the building—if within doors, cold. It will retain its brilliancy for many years. There is nothing of the kind that will compare with it. About one pint of this mixture will cover a square yard upon the outside of a house, if properly applied. If a larger quantity than five gallons is wanted the same proportions must be observed in preparing. Coloring matter may be added to give it any required shade."—Gen. Farmer.

TO KEEP OUT SKIPPERS FROM BACON.—As this is about the time when our friends are beginning to smoke their meat, it may do them some good to inform them that a small bit of brimstone about the size of a chinquepin, (dwarf chesnut,) thrown into the fire once a day, will eventually prevent skippers and bugs from getting into the bacon. This information we have from a friend whom we highly esteem, and who assured us that he so fully tried the efficacy of this plan, that he wished us to make it generally known. He added that no uncommon smell or taste is imparted to the bacon. We deem this information of great importance to those who have bacon to cure; and also to those who have bacon to buy.—Salis. Watchman.

EDUCATION.—Man educated will ever make a better citizen than one in a state of ignorance; every reasonable creature should be rendered capable of considering and reflecting on what relates to himself and the social rights of his fellowmen. It is not necessary that he should be taught foreign languages, or abtruse sciences; he may be instructed to know his place in society; and the duties annexed to it without being made a learned man. Let him be taught that his happiness depends on honest and moral conduct; on the cordial performance of his duties in a civilized and well regulated country.

FAMILY POISONED.—A gentleman and his wife's sister, and three children, were all poisoned at Salem, New Jersey, on Monday last, by partaking freely of pudding baked in an earthen vessel; 'tis supposed that in baking the pudding it imbibed from the glazing, (which is done with red lead,) its deleterious qualities, which is a subtle and fatal poison, and persons cannot be too cautious in the use of their culinary utensils, or the consequences of such carelessness will be deadly repaid.—Medical aid was promptly called in, and all of them were considered out of danger on Wednesday evening.

ANOTHER WORLD CONVENTION.—At a meeting held at the Chardon street Chapel, Boston, a resolution was adopted to appoint a committee of twelve persons, to call a World's Convention 'to consider the subject of Human Rights in all its bearings—to define them—to collect facts relative to the present condition of mankind in respect to them—and to consider the causes of their violation and the means of their restoration and protection.'

PETITON TO CONGRESS.—A petition to expel the Hon. J. Q Adams from the House of Representatives, was presented by that gentleman on Saturday last. The petition came from Baltimore, and purported to be signed by John Houston Fairbain and others. Mr. Fairbain has published a card which he disavows having signed said petition.

WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY.—The receipts of this Institution last year, were about $79,000. A professorship has been created, called the "Fisk Professorship of Moral Philosophy and Belles Letters."—There are about 150 students connected with the University.

A GOOD STORY.

WHEN YOU TELL A YARN BE CONSISTENT.

Mrs. W., consort and help-mate of Mr. W., merchant of New York, was a very economical woman, and, if the eulogist was not mistaken, had a very strong apron.—The circumstances narrated by the friend of Mrs. W., were as follows:—Mr. W. was a merchant in affluent circumstances, did a very heavy business, and conducted all his affairs with the utmost regularity.—Every department of business was completely systematized; every family expenditure was restricted to regular daily appropriations, and no surer is the sailing master of a ship to make his observation, work his traverse, and ascertain his exact latitude and longitude every noon, than was Mr. W. to have his accounts nicely balanced, and ascertain his exact whereabouts in business every night. But wise, prudent and punctilious as he was, he could not withstand the temptation to overtrading during one of the great expansions; and when the revulsion came, he found himself embarrassed beyond all his efforts to extricate himself. He had stood firm as a rock while many of the most reputable houses tumbled to ruins around him, he could not collect money due him from his best customers, and there was one remaining note of ten thousand dollars, that would fall due in a few days, and he could devise no way to meet it. The note came from the bank, but three days remaining and every resource failed. The first of these three days was spent in fruitless attempts to borrow. The second was as fruitlessly spent in trying to force a sale of goods. Nobody had any money to purchase goods at any price. Failure presented itself before him with all its frightfulness.

The day of grace arrived, and horror was depicted in his countenance. Mrs. W. knew nothing of his troubles, and on perceiving him evidently in great distress of mind, she insisted on knowing what was the cause of his trouble. It was folly to conceal his ruin from her, and he condescended to make her acquainted with the cause of his misery. How much, she inquired, will save you from failure?—Ten thousand dollars, he replied, will pay my last note in the bank; but for want of this I must suffer the disgrace of having my note protested, assign my property for the benefit of my creditors and suffer my name to go on the world as a bankrupt. Is this all? said she. Why, bless me, dear Mr. W., I can supply you with that sum without going out of the house. Not waiting to hear the question he was preparing to ask, she tripped up stairs, and in less time than I have occupied in telling the story, she returned with seventeen thousand dollars all in change, which she had saved within a few years from the daily allowance of market money!

All who heard the recital of this circumstance by the friend of Mr. W. were highly delighted with it, save one sharp-nosed, slab-sided yankee, who would not believe, though an angel had told it; he had applied the test of figures to it, to ascertain its probability. As he finished his calculation and was in the act of returning his pencil to his pocket, he burst into a roar of laughter. All eyes were turned upon him, and the narrator demanded what he meant by such uncivil deportment. "Nothin' at all, stranger," said the calculator, "only I was thinkin' what a tarnal strong apron that ere woman must a had on to bring seventeen thousand dollars worth of change down stairs. I've cyphered it out on this here paper, and it will weigh jist half a ton, if there aint a single copper among the whole on't."

COTTON MILLS DESTROYED.—The Rocky Glen Cotton Mills, situated between Fishkill and Fishkill Landing, N. Y., were destroyed by fire on Sunday morning last, between two and three o'clock. The mill was built about two years since, at a cost of about $140,000, including about $60,000 worth of machinery, all of which was destroyed. Nothing but the books and the goods were saved. It was considered the most splendid factory in the Union, and was owned by a very wealthy company; among the members of the company are P. H. Schenck, J. J. Astor, P. Hone, G. Howland, &c. About 300 operatives will be thrown out of employ by this unfortunate event, of whom seven-eighths are females. The property was insured for $85,000.

EFFECTS OF FOLLY.—A young man in Buffalo, in a boasting vein, one day last week, undertook to lift a small cannon, lying on the wharf; by so doing, he overstrained himself, and sustained such internal injury as to cause his death in a few days.

Dr. Lucky having declined to accept of the Missionary Secretaryship of the M. E. Church, Rev. Charles Pitman of the New Jersey Conference was elected to that office by the recent New York Conference.

TIME APPOINTED.—The Governor has appointed Friday, the 6th of August, for the execution of Cropper, the man recently convicted of murder at Chester, in Delaware county, Pa.

DROWNED.—Robert Simpson, one of the engineers of the steamship Acadia, was found drowned in one of the docks at Boston, the morning before the Acadia sailed.

Dr. Eldridge is at large.

WYANDOTT MISSION.

To the Rev. E. R. Ames, Corresponding Secretary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of the Western Conferences.

Dear Brother: From the time the Indians gave their negative answer on the selling question, about one year ago, and the commissioner left, it was supposed their minds would be at rest on that subject, and we flatter ourselves that their attention would be hereafter more undividedly fixed on the subjects of religion, science and agriculture. The question, however, was quieted but for a momentary duration, and consequently our prospective progress was soon at an end. In about three weeks the nation in council is to give an answer whether they will, or will not, sell their lands on the conditions now proposed. What will be the result I know not; but, on the whole, am inclined to think if they were well situated in the country selected for them west of the Mississippi that it might be for the best.

The offer now is for government to take their land and do the best with it they can; and in return for it to give them as much land there, if a suitable quality can be found to pay each individual for their improvements here; pay all their debts, to be at the expense of their removal, and pay them an annuity of seven thousand dollars, so long as they remain a nation. This is quite an inducement and perhaps will be accepted. The greatest obstacle in their way is their attachment to the home of their childhood, and the graves of their fathers. If the plans formed by President Harrison, forming them in the west into a kind of Indian empire, and elevating their views and standing, and raising their desponding spirits to desire a rank among the nations of the earth, by the introduction of proper laws and regulations, be carried out, they may perhaps be saved; otherwise it is to be feared they soon will all have passed away—not "victims to civilization," but to the avaricious disposition of uncivilized white men. In less than six months three of their number have been murdered by the whites, merely for the sake of robbing them, and their murderers have escaped. Among the murdered ones is our beloved Sunr-mun-de-wat, late a chief, and a licensed local preacher. In his death the church have to mourn the loss of an able counsellor and a faithful christian friend. But he is gone, and that too as a swift witness against his inhuman murderers. We attended his funeral, and mingled our tears and sympathies together, while I tried to preach from, "There the wicked cease from troubling, and there the weary be at rest." The Indians are, many of them, considerably disheartened; but the christian ones are still trusting in the Lord as their only hope.—May He bless, protect and save them.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the hackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

AN INQUIRY, &c.

Statement of the Doctrine of an Unoriginated, Infinite and Eternal Prescience, as it is currently and implicitly received by a very large proportion of the Christian World.

NO. VI. CONTINUED.

THE NOTION OF A CERTAIN PRESCIENCE IN RELATION TO MORAL ACTIONS, AND THE FINAL ISSUE OF HUMAN LIFE, INCONSISTENT WITH HUMAN RESPONSIBILITY, AND REPUGNANT TO ALL MORAL FEELING.

A theological system, the principles of which, acted upon, would dissolve all society at once, and render it impossible for two human beings to live together, cannot possibly be true, but must of necessity be false. The modern doctrine of personal and absolute predestination, is evidently deduced from the notion of a certain and eternal prescience of all moral actions: and it must be confessed, that if the premises be tenable the conclusion is inevitable, and that the legitimate separation of the one from the other may bid defiance to the ingenuity of man. But the modern predestinarians, like the ancient fatalists, are not able to carry their theological speculations into the economy of common life, nor even into the management of their ecclesiastical affairs; neither are they plead an overruling necessity for their own faults, or the crimes of others. Their theological speculations, and their religious principles are at open and irreconcilable variance with each other. Like the ancient fatalists, they enact laws, and administer discipline, which if their speculations were correct, would be as idle and chimerical as legislating for the sun, or regulating by discipline the rotation of the seasons. Their own practice, therefore, is a sufficient refutation of their doctrines.

Among the many miserable subterfuges to which the retreating advocates of an eternal prescience are driven, there is one which pretends, that what is certainly foreseen will certainly take place but it will not necessarily transpire. Will the author of this meagre sophism only have the goodness to inform us, how a certain issue may be secured except by an infallible causation? Is it possible that an event may transpire otherwise than as it is foreseen and predicted, then it must of necessity follow, either that the prediction was conditional and the issue contingent, or that the prescience which foresaw it may prove to be short sighted, and the prediction that foretold it may turn out to be false: but if it be not possible for the issue to transpire otherwise than as it has been predicted, then must the certainty of the issue be secured by an infallible causation. Will the advocates of this baseless theory have the goodness to define the precise difference between an event necessarily coming to pass and only certainly taking place? Is not the difference purely verbal? And even if the thing were hypothetically conceived, wherein would the certainty be less inevitable than the necessity? If the world could only be informed how any event may certainly take place, and not necessarily transpire, and how a certain issue may be secured without an effectual causation, and how an absolute certainty may be compatible with any opposite possibility, the present important question would be set at rest for ever. A satisfactory solution of these difficulties are desiderata above all price.

The discovery of longitude,—the quadrature of the circle,—the perpetual motion,—the inexhaustable lamp,—and the ne plus ultra of Alchymy, alias, the philosopher's stone, would be only the productions of a driveller in the occult sciences, in comparison of an apocalypse like this. But to accredit such an hypothesis, we must obtain a new revelation from heaven, and a reversion of the laws of creation and providence, and a new modelling of the human intellect, and a re-edification of the human heart: we must witness a series of miraculous interposition that would beggar the adventures of Don Quixotte, outstep the imaginary creations of the Arabian Nights, and leave all the mythological and poetical metamorphoses of Ovid, panting in the rear. We must have a revelation to assure us that cognate ideas may be essentially and eternally alien from each other,—that the effect may have no philosophical connexion with the cause, and the cause no connexion with the effect: we must have a miraculous separation of causation and issue, and the miraculous production of opposite possibilities.

Perfect and universal orthodoxy, in theological speculation, is an intellectual improvement, which perhaps no uninspired person has ever yet attained: and if christianity were only able to extend its benefits to those persons whose religious creed should be found, in every iota, to be perfectly accurate, it is not likely that many descendants of fallen Adam would ever attain to salvation. But it is one of the brightest glories of the gospel of Jesus Christ, that in numerous instances its agency on the moral feelings triumphs over a thousand discrepancies and errors in speculation: and it is a fact, as pleasing, as it is conspicuous, every benevolent observer, that in a goodly number of those persons who hold the doctrine of moral necessity, the sovereign principle of piety in their hearts, serves as an effectual antidote to the demoralizing tendency of their creed; which in its legimate, and unrestrained, and untimate consequences, would of necessity exterminate all morality and religion from the face of the earth.

Many Antinomians in speculation, there is good reason to believe, are in spirit and in practice truly orthodox christians. There is however, not a small number of christians, who cleave to the doctrine of an eternal prescience, with a sturdy tenacity, while the reject the doctrine of a personal and eternal predestination, as being utterly subversive of moral freedom and responsibility.—But how they will get rid of an infallible causation, while they believe in the absolute certainty of the issue, is extremely difficult to explain; the notion of an eternal prescience must always hang like a ponderous millstone around the neck of their creed, and every witling in argument, will be able to tapple them over into a bottomless abyss of contradiction and absurdity; in vain will they contend for the doctrine of prescience, while they reject the doctrine of predestination; every argument which they can bring forward in support of the former, will apply with equal force in support of the latter; every weapon which they can employ against the predestinarian, will be turned back upon themselves with a keener edge, and with a redoubled force; every antagonist will oblige them to acknowledge, that certainty in the anticipation, must imply and equal certainty in the issue, and an equal infallibility in the means. Nothing but the rejection of an eternal prescience can provide a solid foundation for the doctrine of human liberty and moral responsibility; nothing but the rejection of prescience can redeem, in theory, the moral freedom of man, or the moral character of the governor of the world.

It has been very speciously, but sophistically argued, that our objection to the doctrine of an eternal prescience, and the infallible certainty of all moral actions, and the final issue of human life, is purely a matter of moral feeling and sympathetic aversion. That it is not matter of moral feeling only, the foregoing arguments will, I conceive, sufficiently demonstrate. But even moral feeling alone, is no very despicable standard of moral and religious truth; for it is in many cases, far more worthy of our implicit dependence, than mere speculation, and hypothetical theory. Let me ask my readers whether the enactment of laws, and the administration of justice, by the ancient heathens, were not purely matter of feeling, of moral feeling, and in direct opposition to their theological creed? And let me ask, if their sympathies were not correct, and their speculations erroneous? And is not the conduct of modern predestinarians in rejecting the doctrine of reprobation, while they retain that of election, matter of moral feeling, and totally irreconcilable with their religious speculation? And is not the conduct of necessitarians in offering salvation to all men in preaching on the duties of practical christianity, and in administering christian discipline to the elect, purely matter of feeling? And, above all, is not the conduct of those christians, who reject the doctrine of necessity, in relation to all moral actions, and the final issue of human life, while they believe in a certain prescience of those actions, and the final issue of life, a matter of moral feeling and sympathetic aversion? And are not all these sympathies correct, and all the speculations to which they are opposed erroneous? The argument on both sides is precisely the same, it is feeling alone that makes the difference.

It is a notorious fact, it is a conspicuous and glorious truth, that our hearts are more orthodox than our heads, and that what many persons have been pleased to dignify with the specious appellation of faith is but mental sophistry, or vain credulity, because it outrages those moral sympathies, which have been planted in our hearts, by the great and benevolent Author of our being. And let me farther demand of my readers, whether our moral principles must not always be a surer guide to truth, than any hypothetical speculation, which has no support in the moral intuitions of the human mind? To what cause is it to be attributed? Is it to the native and universal illumination of the human mind by the spirit of God? Or is it the property of the christian religion to do more for the heart than even for the intellect of man, and to produce greater rectitude of moral feeling than precision of speculation; or is it, that moral principles are more intuitive and demonstrable, than any mental analysis, or theoritic speculation? To whatever cause it may with the greatest propriety be attributed, whether to any or all of the foregoing suppositions, the fact is indisputable, that common sense is more worthy of our dependence than theory and speculation, and that moral intuition is generally a surer and safer guide than any mere abstract analyzation can possible be.

This grave and momentous inquiry, is indeed a matter of moral feeling; the doctrine of an eternal prescience, is in truth an object of sympathetic aversion. For, however the question may be modelled, or disguised, it is the same thing, under every form, and in every attire: whether it be denominated fate by Pagans, or necessity by Supralapsarians, or certainty by modern predestinarians, or prescience by anti-predestinarians; it is the same in its real meaning, the same in magnitude, and the same in its legitimate consequences; prescience implies certainty, certainty implies necessity, and necessity implies the grossest fatalism and the most Atheistical renunciation of the agency of God in the government of the world. Against such revolting conclusions, what generous or righteous feeling of the human heart does not rise up with indignation and abhorrence? All my moral sympathies and my social affections, all my sense of justice, and all my love of mercy, all my desire of happiness, and all my dread of misery, exclaim, tell me not of being damned with an absolute certainty, and not by any absolute or fatal necessity, tell me not, that although the Deity foresees I shall certainly perish, it is nevertheless possible I may yet be saved.

If my destiny, my eternal destiny, be the object of a certain prescience, it must be the subject of a certain issue, and under the control of an infallible and fatal necessity. If it be known it must be certain, if it be certain it must be necessary, if it be necessary it must be inevitable; and every effort to escape it would be chimerical and vain. If the issue be certain, the causation must be secure: All casualty must be past; and fatality, eternal fatality, must reign alone. There is no ground for hope. There is no possibility of deliverance. I have no motive to exertion, nor any inducement to move forward or backward, to the right hand or to the left. My soul sinks down into a hopeless despondency. I have no other expectation than the blackness of darkness for ever. If this be christian orthodoxy, surely a man must be a desperate believer to receive it. Such an implicit credulity must require the entire prostration of the human intellect, and of every thing that is noble or generous in the human spirit. If such execrable dogmas are to be regarded as the tests of christian faith, no wonder it should have gone forth into the world, that christian piety is implicit credence; that there are many things in the christian system, which it would be dangerous to examine with too much nicety; that certain doctrines must be desperately believed in spite of our intuitive convictions, and every moral sympathy of our nature; that religious principles must be believed without investigation, and be taken into our creed as the unresisting child receives the nauseous potion of the apothecary, videlicet, with his eyes fast closed, and his mouth wide open.

ON BAPTISM.

NO. II.

Mr. Editor: In my first number I sent you a few thoughts on infant baptism which deemed conclusive, at least for the present, I now come to a subject that forms one of the most prominent marks of distinction in the Baptist community, that of the mode or form of administering baptism. One of the arguments of our Baptist friends is rested on the primitive meaning of the word baptism. And they also attach peculiar importance to the radical import of the term; I shall therefore first bestow a few remarks on it.

The word baxtu (bapto) from which baxtisu (baptizo) is derived, signifies to dip, to dye, to color, to wash. The derivative baptizo amongst christians, has generally been used to signify the sacrament or sign of grace by which the merits of the Redeemer are applied to the soul. Although this is the general meaning, yet we find that in the scriptures it was used in various senses. It appears sometime to have been used in relation to the lustrations or purifications practised by the Jews, in the form of sprinkling with blood, with oil or with water, of washing and bathing, &c., as we learn from St. Paul to the Hebrews ix. 10, speaking of the Jewish ceremonies he says (divers baptism) and justifications of the flesh, &c.—Likewise in Mark vii. 4, speaking of the Pharisees—unless they be washed (unless they are baptised) they eat not; and many other things there are, &c. The washing (the baptisms) of cups and pots, and of brazen vessels, and of beds. See also Luke xi. 38. And the Pharisee began to say, thinking within himself, why he was not washed (baptised) before dinner. From these examples it evidently appears that the radical sense of the word was not the invariable signification of it; for the words dip, plunge, or immerse would by no means express the meaning to be conveyed in the above examples.

Our Baptist friends bring forward the baptism of our Saviour in the Jordan. They infer from the text he went up straightway out of the water, that Jesus was previously submersed in the water. I admit that this may have been the case in this instance; but the words, going down into the water, and coming up out of the water, do not necessarily imply being submersed or entirely put under the water, or it might be said of Philip when he baptised the Eunuch, that he was also submersed. Our friends say the evangelist pointedly declares that he did it in the water. For example Matthew iii. 6.—and were baptised of him in Jordan confessing their sins. Now they ought not to suppose that we are all so weak as to believe that the word Jordan meant water. I should say the evangelist's declaration was not very pointed. It is very well understood that it was the water of Jordan that was used; but that John's baptising in Jordan is an evidence that it was done in all cases by immersion is a matter in dispute, and on very good grounds, as I shall presently show. And there went out to him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptised of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins. Mark i. 5. Then went out to him Jerusalem and all Judea, and all the country about Jordan: and they were baptised by him confessing their sins.

The duration of Johns ministry has been variously estimated at from nine to eighteen months, from the data we have in the New Testament. In those days came John the Baptist preaching in the desert of Judea. It would appear that he commenced his ministry about the thirtieth year of his age and continued it until shortly after Jesus went up to Jerusalem to attend the paschal of the Jews which was at hand, when he was apprehended by Herod and thrown into prison. The whole space of time included between these two events can hardly be shown to have exceeded nine or ten months; in which space of time it would appear that he baptised the people of Jerusalem and all Judea and all the country about Jordan. Now the population of Palestine at that time is estimated at about six millions. If we suppose however that only the half of these were baptised by John, the daily number of baptisms must have amounted to between one and two thousand. If these had been administered in the modern form, every one knows, that it would have required more than a human frame could bear; for supposing him to have baptised at the rapid rate of one per minute, the whole twenty-four hours of the day and night would not have been sufficient.—Here then is a difficulty and I defy my friends to obviate it and maintain that St. John the Baptist submersed every one he baptised. But the difficulty vanishes when we observe that among the Jews there was another form of baptism, such as we find administered by Moses in the desert when he took blood and sprinkled it on the people, Exodius xxiv. 8. For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people, according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats with water and scarlet wool and hyssop and sprinkled both the book and all the people. Hebrews ix. 19. Is it not probable that this was the form observed by John in baptising his millions? Is it possible he could have done it in any other, in the short space of nine or ten months?

Our Baptist friends in endeavoring to refute the argument of their opponents in the case of jailor at Phillippi, who was probably baptised in prison with all his family, they say, "But the evangalist, as though he knew that there would be cavillers in the world, gave us plainly to understand that he was not baptised in prison; for he tells us that he (the jailor,) took them (the Apostles) out of the prison the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes, and was baptised: and when he had brought them (the Apostles) into his house, he sat meat before them, and rejoiced, believing with all his house." I shall now quote the text as it reads in Acts xvi. 33,34. And he took them the same hour of the night, washed their stripes, and was baptised, he and all his, straightway. And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house.

The reader will perceive a considerable degree of disparity between the version of our Baptist friends and the text. We find nothing in the text to convey the least shadow of words like the he (the jailor) took them (the Apostles) out of prison: but they say the evangelist gives us plainly to understand, &c., for he tells us, &c. The writer of the Acts of the Apostles tells us no such thing. There is nothing in the above text to warrant the belief that St. Paul and the jailor's family left the prison house at all, notwithstanding the words, and he brought them into his house. The word oikos, a house, here used in the Greek text, sometimes signifies a chamber, and here more than probably means an apartment of the prison occupied by the jailor and his family. But it is not probable that the Apostle left the prison house at night, when from a principle of integrity he would have considered such an act as undignified and improper, which is shown in the very fact of his refusing to leave the prison, next morning, until the magistrates dismissed him honorably.

Another argument adduced by our Baptist friends in support of their favorite doctrine is the text, Acts viii. 38, 39. And they both went down into the water, Philip and the Eunuch, and he baptised him. And when they were come up out of the water, &c. The precise spot where this baptism took place cannot at this day be pointed out; but St. Luke informs us that it was toward the south, unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert, Acts viii. 26. Now it is well known that the desert forming the southern boundary of Palestine affords but few streams of water, and those generally small rivulets issuing from springs which are soon again drank up by the sand. It is therefore not probable that Philip found there a body of water sufficiently large and deep wherein to immerse the whole person of the Ethiopian. But here is a point that affords an opportunity of bringing this matter nearer home and of clearing the difficulty which they find in reconciling the common mode of baptism, with the words down into the water and up out of the water. They say: there are persons who endeavor, by preaching and writing, to persuade the people that the Greek prepositions, apo, en and eis, in those passages, were not correctly translated into English; or that they may be rendered from, at, to, unto, &c.; and are as follows: And Jesus, when he was baptised went up straightway from the water, and they went down to the water. Now if this were all true, it would certainly alter the case very much, and would favor the mode of pouring or sprinkling. Here they candidly acknowledge that if this were all true the case would be changed. Now if I can make it incontrovertibly appear that it is all true, not only that those words may be rendered from, at, to, unto, &c., but that they are actually so rendered in many places in the New Testament, then I will expect that they will change their mode of reasoning on this point; and, in order to be consistent with their own words, admit that the mode of pouring or sprinkling is not unscriptural.

In the accounts given of our Saviour's baptism, Matt. iii. 16, and Mark i. 10, we find the word apo translated out of. In the account of the Eunuch, Acts viii. 38, the word eis translated unto, and verse 39, ek translated out of. In Matt. iii. 6, in the Jordan we find en translated in as also in Mark i. 5. Now all that our Baptist friends, or any one else will have to do to satisfy themselves on this point, will be to take up a Greek Testament and refer from the translation to the corresponding words in the original, and compare the above Greek prepositions with the translations given of these identical words in the following instances. I have said that the word apo generally means from. Thus we find it translated Mark i. 9. Jesus came [apo] from Nazareth to Galilee; Acts viii. 26, from [apo] Jerusalem to Gaza; Matt. xxiii. 34, from [apo] city to city. I may here also remark that in the three latter texts, to Gallilee, to Gaza, to city, the proposition eis is used. Mark iii. 8, and from [apo] Jerusalem, and from [apo] Idumea, and from [apo] beyond Jordan. In short the instances where apo is differently translated are few.

Next is the word eis; I have already shown that it has been translated by to; but refer to the following texts, Acts xxvi. 14, and when we were all fallen to (eis) the earth. John xi. 38. Jesus therefore cometh to (eis) the tomb of Lazarus. John xx. 3. Peter cometh to (eis) the sepulchre. Next is en. The primary signification of it is in, but we find it translated by the various words, at, with and by. Refer to Luke xii, 4, the tower fell at (en) Siloe; to Rom. viii. 34, at (en) the right hand of God; to Matt. iii. 11, and Luke iii. 16. I indeed baptize you with (en) water—he shall baptize you with (en) the holy Ghost. To Matt. xxii. 36. Thou shalt love the Lord with [en] all thy heart, and with [en] all thy soul, &c.; to Luke iv. 1, was led by [en] the spirit into the wilderness. Numerous more instances might be quoted, with regard to ek, I would refer to John vi. 23, other ships came in from [ek] Tiberius; to Acts vii. 4, go forth—from [ek] thy kindred; to Rom vii. 24, who shall deliver me [ek] from the body of this death.

It is unnecessary to adduce more instances; for every one of my candid readers must be prepared to admit that, without a great violation of rule, the following readings could be adopted. And Jesus when he was baptised went up straightway from the water, &c. And there went out to him all the land of Judea and they of Jerusalem and were all baptized of him at the river Jordon, &c. And they both went down to the water both Philip and the Eunuch, &c. When they were come up from the water, &c. * The text, John iii. 23. And John was also baptizing in Enon, near to Salim, because there was much water there, is sometimes quoted in favor of their system. The reason of the Baptist having selected Enon in preference to his former abode, Bethabara, appears to be the very fact that there was more water in the vicinity of Enon that could be applied to common use, and a great multitude were constantly flocking to him. This was a desideratum and one that could not be answered at Bethabara in the desert as the water of Jordan, some seasons of the year, is turbid and not fit for use. For the same reason the site for an encampment or a great public festival is fixed in the vicinity of abundant streams of water both for the uses of men and their numerous beasts. This text then does not show that the much water was desirable for baptism; because for the sake of quantity he need not have left the Jordan.

Now the attempt to prove our Saviour's baptism of suffering, that of the Holy Ghost on Pentecost, and that of the Israelites in passing thro' the Red Sea, all to have been effected by immersion does not appear to me to carry with it sufficient weight to merit any remarks further than have already been bestowed on the subject in general. As to Tertullian, he was a priest of Carthage in Africa where the climate is warm, and where baptism by immersion prevailed, as it does yet in the Greek church. All this is no disapproval of the form in which it was administered in other countries and different climates. And there never was nor ever will be a dispute arise on this subject between the Latin and Greek churches; for they mutually agree that either form is equally valid, the only difference being a matter of discipline. There is one more scriptural fact I would adduce, which of itself must most decidedly stand opposed to their mode of baptism. It is that mentioned Acts ii, 41. They, therefore, that received this word, were baptised and there were added to them in that day about three thousand souls. They endeavor to get over this difficulty by saying the word does not inform us that they were baptized on that day, but we wish to know what is meant by being added to them. But they reply if it even were so [that is, that they were baptised on that day] it could have been easily accomplished. For instance there were twelve Apostles and seventy-two disciples, making a number of eighty-four administrators. Each administrator would not have had more than thirty-seven to baptize, which I am satisfied, could have been done in less time than half a day. We will suppose then that these eighty four persons all took part in the administration of the ordinance, and that each need not have been employed more than half a day in this particular duty with its attendant circumstances. Thus supposing only half the number employed at a time there must have been forty-two places in, or in the vicinity of Jerusalem adapted for immersing.

Let us examine the fact, there were three bodies of water in the vicinity of Jerusalem, the pool Betheseda, the brook Kidron and the pool of Siloam; others, with the exception of artificial baths there were none in or about Jerusalem.—The pool of Betheseda, not far from the temple could not have been used for this purpose for three reasons. 1st. It received the impurities from the sacrifices of the temple so as to render the water unfit for such use. 2d. The porches about it were occupied by a great multitude of impotent folks, of blind, halt, and withered, waiting for the moving of the water, John v. 3. There would naturally be a great impediment, so much so that forty-two persons could not have approached the water, much less have introduced a large multitude. 3d. The pool of Betheseda was in possession of the Levite priesthood, the mortal enemies of our Saviour and His disciples as well as those ordinances. This is sufficient to convince us that the pool of Betheseda was not resorted to for baptising.

But there were other two waters. 1st. The brook Kidron. This was but a trifling stream, often quite dry, and was the common receptable of the filth of the city, which was occasionally carried off by floods of rain, and it could have afforded no fit place for administering baptism by immersion. Lastly the pool of Siloam was within a mile of the city. This also appears to have been of irregular duration and adapted to the purpose of baptising by immersion. It need not be supposed that the baths were used for this purpose as they were generally in possession of a class of persons the least favorable to men of that humble distinction in life, known as poor and simple fishermen and their followers. The nearest waters, that probably would have answered this occasion for baptism by immersion, are those of the Jordan, upwards of thirty miles from Jerusalem. I leave the surmise to yourselves in what manner those three thousand converts were baptised in one day. To immersion every difficulty is opposed. Admit affusion or aspersion and they all vanish.

There is but one more argument that I would adduced on this subject, and it is not the least potent. It is the consent of all nations, wherever christianity has been received, to the administration of this sacrament by affusion or aspersion, as there can be no historical record shown ascribing its introduction into the church subsequent to the Apostolic age; as its validity was not disputed for fifteen centuries, and as it is in perfect accordance with scripture and the economy of the christian church, we are in duty and conscience bound to ascribe its introductian to the Apostles themselves, and receive it as a Divine institution.

The English words went up are expressed in the original by (anebe) precisely the same used in Luke xix. 4. Climbed up in the case of Zacheus; and the word may justly signify the act of ascending a river bank: and the (apo) here translated out of, in a majority of cases signifies simply from. Thus the passage might with propriety be translated ascended from the water.

A LAYMAN.

* I suppose our Baptist friends will also admit that the case is very much altered and favors the mode of pouring or sprinkling.

QUESTIONS PROPOSED THROUGH THE WESTERN RECORDER.

We give the questions here proposed to accommodate our correspondent, but have not time at present to answer.—ED.

1. Why is one man's will to do well, and another's to do evil?

2. If God willeth not the death of the wicked, [His will being superior to man's] with infinite power to establish it, and thus perfect the Divine plan, why are not all saved?

3. Can a person do any thing contrary to their will?

4. Did the hardening of Pharoah's heart by God, or His raising him up for the very purpose, for an instrument in His hand for the oppression of the Hebrews, lessen Pharoah's sin in the least?

5. How could Pharoah or others rid themselves of what God said should come upon them, as His words pass not away?

6. Is it right in every case, or are we bound by any law to tell the whole truth?

7. As a man cannot see the kingdom of God till he is born the second time, shall we infer that those who die in infancy are lost?

8. Is the spirit of war in accordance with that of Christ?

9. Is the soul once renewed by grace, or in other words born again, [which is the second birth] subject to a second death? INQUISITIVENESS.

Mr. Editor: Among the many interesting articles which have appeared in your paper, I particularly appreciate the essays of "John" on "Prescience," &c. They evince much research and close thinking. The views advanced are in accordance with the opinions I have heretofore entertained upon that subject. If his future essays are equal to those which have appeared, I should be much gratified to see them in pamphlet form, and would take pleasure in exerting myself to give them circulation.

AGRICULTURAL.

From the Western Farmer.

BERKSHIRE HOGS.—It is certainly to the interest of every farmer so to manage his business, as to obtain the greatest possible value in return for his expenditure in money and labor. It has frequently been asserted by those who have had experience in raising Berkshire hogs, that the same quantity of food given to them, will produce double the amount of pork, than if fed to the ordinary breeds. Many farmers who are unacquainted with them, look upon these statements with a suspicious eye, and ask for facts to sustain them. We hope our readers who have experience in the rearing of any improved breeds of animals, will make careful experiments in order to be able to ascertain the advantages to be derived from them, and communicate the results of their experience for the benefit of their brother farmers. As pork is a very important article of export from the West, and in many sections of the interior the almost only article the farmers produce to sell, it is therefore very important that they possess such breeds of hogs, as will afford the greatest return in pork for the food given them. The following statement may throw some light on the subject:

John Jessup, of Hendrics Co., Ia., fattened and sold last fall, thirteen half-blood Berkshire pigs, whose average weight when between nine and ten months old, was 273 lbs. gross. The heaviest weighed 316 lbs. They were weaned when about two months old, and kept during the summer in a clover field and the lot of twenty (thirteen only being fattened) were fed with the whey from ten cows, and one peck of corn per day. They had no additional food until thirteen were put up to fatten, when they with others were fed with corn and water only for seven weeks—the quantity of corn they consumed not ascertained. They were sold to a drover at 3 cents per lb. gross, and were so fat, that many supposed they could not be driven to market—but they travelled well and all arrived at Madison, about 100 miles in safety.

Let the reader compare the above with his own experience. Many droves of hogs were taken to market last fall, which at eighteen months did not average over 250 lbs. gross. J. S. W.

THE FIRST METHODIST PREACHERS.—At the commencement of Methodism, they were chosen by Mr. Wesley on account of their knowledge of scriptures, and powerful, though not often highly cultivated minds. Samuel Bradburn, a man whose life, published, would be one of the most interesting and even amusing books, was remarkable for his strong mind and unwearied labor. In wit and humor, few men excelled him; and the early annals of methodism are brightened by the sparkling of his fastidiousness. "See (said he on one occasion, to one of the first chosen preachers,) see the good that Methodism has done?" "Yes, [was the reply,] it has done a great deal for us." Something in this displeased Bradburn, for he immediately said, pointing to a Mr. Marsden, "For us!" "Why, yes; you were a cobler," said the preacher in question; "it would have been more civil to have said, a boot and shoemaker." "Yes," added Bradburn; "but I did not call myself a tinplate worker, but simply a tinker." Such were the men which Wesley made his first itinerant preachers. The writer of this has seen and conversed with many of them; among others, with three of whom the above story is told; and it must be acknowledged that they were a class of great mental power—rough sometimes, and perhaps a little uncouth, but energetic, self-denying, indominal. The were often, too, men of great personal strength, and there is current an anecdote of one who was much annoyed on one occasion, by the profanity and impertinence of a gigantic butcher. For some time he bore patiently with the man's ribaldry; but at last his feelings were outraged, and walking up to the fellow, he took him by the collar and the waistband of his breeches, as though he had been a little child, and hung him up by the latter to one of the meat hooks in his own shop, where he remained dangling till the exhortation was concluded.—Church of England Review.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... JULY 14, 1841.

Missionary Intelligence.—The following is extracted from the "Herald," by the Watchman of the Valley, and shows what is doing at the missionary establishment under the care of the Presbyterian Church:

The Herald contains interesting communications from Syria and the Holy Land, from Smyrna, Greece, Southern Asia, Madura, Mahrattas, and the Sioux and Ojibewa Indians.

Mr. Thompson gives a glowing description of his tour of exploration in Syria: a country abounding in mineralogical wonders, splendid scenery and natural fertility, but bearing every where the marks of neglect, poverty and degradation. The missionaries, who had taken up a temporary residence at Jerusalem during the war in Syria, returned to Beyroot in January; and "the openings for labor in all departments were becoming more numerous and promising on every hand." Three Jesuits had arrived from France to establish schools. The Pacha was quietly retiring with his troops.

From Constantinople the intelligence is very encouraging. Mr. Dwight was holding three meetings a week, with brighter prospects of success than at any former period. A converted Nicomedian priest at Constantinople was doing the work of an evangelist in primitive style—literally preaching the gospel from house to house. The mission sold books last year to the amount of $300. The good effects of the persecution they had suffered were becoming more and more manifest; the confidence of the Missionaries in the watchful care of a superintending Providence was greatly strengthened by this fact; the spirit of inquiry was spreading on every hand; and the Armenians were laying aside their fear and holding free intercourse with the Missionaries.

In Greece, Mr. King is prosecuting his labors as usual. Mr. Benjamin, at Athens, has translated and published five books in modern Greek, the past year, amounting to 1,894,000 pages, besides seven other books, including Wilberforce's Practical View, Alleyn's Alarm, Gurney on the Sabbath, Foster's Appeal to Youth, and the Child's Book on the Soul, which were translated and nearly ready for the press. The mission families at Ariopolis were much in favor with the people.

At Broosa, there is an interesting state of religious feeling—manifest tokens of the presence of God's spirit moving on the hearts of the people. Two or three had given pleasing evidence of a saving change; a number more were seriously inquiring; the feeling gradually extending; the hearers of a preached word increasing.

From Ezroom, Mr. Jackson writes of inviting openings of usefulness, and a wide field of missionary labor.

Of the Nestorians the account is similar to what we published in the Watchman some weeks since. The introduction of the printing press had excited not a little wonder at this new mode of multiplying books.

Madura is a branch of the Ceylon mission, which Mr. Spaulding of that mission explored nearly seven years since. Of the changes and improvements among that people which he witnessed on his recent visit to them he gives a glowing description, so enchanting was the effect of the contrast on his mind. "The difference to my own feelings is almost like a dream—like the enchantment of your 'American West,' where forest disappear, and cities shoot up as if by magic. 'A high-way is there,' the way of holiness is commencing, the eyes of the blind are opened and the ears of the deaf are unstopped; The wilderness and solitary place are glad for your messengers; and as I meditate on these things, I cannot forbear to call out, 'strengthen ye the weak hands, say to the fearful heart, be strong and fear not.'"

The Missionaries make earnest appeals to American christians for aid. "Oh that we could take some candidate for the ministerial office, now pursuing his theological course in enlightened Christian America, and conduct him through the streets, and to those new heathen schools! Could we bring to his view their condition now, and their prospects for eternity, whould he not say, Here am I, send me. Oh that we could convey to the minds and hearts of our beloved land the impressions which this day's scene has produced upon our own!"

In China the prospect is also encouraging.—The Missionaries think the war is at an end: that a peaceful intercourse between the belligerants will be renewed; and that the cession of the island and harbor of Hong Kong to the British, according to the stipulations of the treaty, will greatly facilitate the operations of the press upon the nation of China.

From the Sandwich Islands, Mr. Armstrong writes: "Rum and Romanism together allow me but little time to sit and study. We are called now to take the open field, guard every point, and spare no effort to foil the enemy. Some thirty-five members of this church have fallen in consequences of rum; most of them however, profess repentance, and a desire to return to duty. The exploring squadron is now here, and Captain Hudson is exerting a most happy influence. He addressed our church a few days ago, with good effect, and made some pointed remarks on the subject of intemperance. Oh that the Pacific were full of such men—missionaries would meet with fewer difficulties, and be relieved of many a heavy burden."

Southern Africa presents also an open, an inviting field for Missionary labor. Umpandi, the chief of the Zulus, gave the Missionaries a welcome reception, anxious to cultivate friendly relations with the whites. A marked change has taken place among the Zulus; the king and people are willing if not desirous for Missionaries.—There are two important tribes of people bordering upon the Zulus, the chief of one of whom the Missionaries have here, is anxious for a Missionary already.

Boston Monthly Concert.—This meeting attended by the Secretaries of the Board from the Missionary rooms, is regarded as the fountain head of the most recent Missionary intelligence. The communications on the first Monday in June were of a highly interesting character. The Nestorian Missionaries are cheered on their labor of love by the continued indications of divine favor and success. "The Press," Mr. Perkins writes at the date of Nov. 21—"is the lion" at Ooroomiah, a subject of equal delight and astonishment among all classes of people. To the Nestorians it is interesting as a curiosity; while to Missionaries it is no less so, as a "bow of promise, indicating the approach of untold blessings by the multiplication of good books." The Mohammedans are asking, "when will you make books for us also?" At the earnest solicitation of the Mohammedan Prince, they have received his brother, who is also a Prince, as an apprentice to the Printing art, who is now helping to print the Christian Scriptures. The schools embrace 478 Nestorian pupils, taught by 34 Nestorian ecclesiastics, who instead of opposing and thwarting the Missionaries, are like Aaron and Herr, holding up their hands. There is a waking up of piety among them. Two are specified as giving good evidence of decided piety.—Many hundreds of the people, usually more than a thousand, including many of their clergy, hear the gospel from our Ministers every Sabbath, at their various places of preaching. They sometimes receive the warmest expressions of gratitude from the people for their labors among them. But for the mission, they say, half the village would have become Papists.

In Syria, the Missionary cause is in a very critical situation. The Maronites continue to be enraged against the mission, and especially against Butrus, a convert from their number, formerly noticed—a second Assaad—who was confined to the mission family to save himself from their persecuting fury. The prospects of the mission are good, if "foreign influence does not disturb its operations." English influence now predominates there. The Druses look to that power for protection. The Maronites and other Roman Catholic sects are looking to France for the same purpose; and the members of the Greek Church, who are numerous in Syria, hold a similar relation to the Russian power. "The three powers may therefore be expected to play off the several sects against each other, as interest shall prompt them: and there is some reason to suspect that such a game is now in progress."

At Constantinople, the mission is still prosperous, the native converts manifesting all the warmth of a convert's first love.

From West Africa, the annual report for 1840 has been received. The mission is prosperous in all its branches. The ivory coast, 400 miles in extent, accessable, along which fifteen vessels from the United States are trading.—The Niger is accessable to Missionaries, who may ascend that river in British steamers sent out expressly to navigate its waters. Great good is expected by the Missionaries from the execution of Buxton's plan for the civilization of Africa. The Board have already appointed two Missionaries for the river Niger.

The Amistad Captives were among the subjects noticed at the Concert above named. Much anxiety has been expressed to have a mission established at their native country, Mendi. Whether the Board would attempt it or not, must depend on information relative to the nature, location, accessibility, etc. of the country, of which they were not at present possessed. Dr. Anderson intimated that its situation might be such that they could not establish a mission there, without discourteous interference with English Missionary operations. [For one, we cannot but think the establishment of a mission at Mendi, by the American Board, if practicable, of immense importance, for two reasons. 1. Americans, the Deliverers of Cinque and his friends, will have a hold of the confidence of this people, which it would require any other Missionaries, years to gain. 2. A mission by the Board, accompanying these captives to their country, would create an interest in its operations in the hearts of all those who have felt deeply interested for the fate of this captive crew, and thus extend the influence and confidence of the Board.]

The news from Bombay, and the Sandwich Islands, communicated at the same meeting, we omit for want of room.

The Rev. Mr. Cookman who was Lost in the President.—There is now too sad a reason to fear that this eloquent divine has found a watery grave, with all who were on board the steamship President; and it cannot be otherwise than of melancholy interest to learn anything of his past and impressive history.

It is known, that for two or three of the last sessions of Congress, he has been Chaplain to the Senate, and was highly respected and beloved by a large circle of friends, as well as by all the members. He has left behind him a wife and a large family of young children, whose situation will be truly deplorable. Mr. Cookman's object in visiting England was to see an aged parent. On the Sabbath before he left Washington, he preached a most impressive sermon in the Representatives' Hall, and took an affecting farewell of those for whom he had so long been accustomed to minister at the Capitol. The House was crowded in every part, and never did we see an assembly more deeply touched than by his chaste and pathetic eloquence. The prayers of thousands followed him on his voyage; and his numerous devoted friends and admirers still cling to the slightest circumstance that affords them any hope for his safety.

Mr. Cookman, we think, came to this country from England, when but a boy. Here he was educated. Here he has labored most zealously for the great cause of religion, virtue and morals; and as a reward for the great estimation in which he was holden, he had just been appointed a delegate from this country to the churches of the land which gave him birth.—Besides, after an absence for a quarter of a century, he was going to lay his head once more on the anxious bosom of a devoted mother, in his fondest anticipations of filial love and affection. But he has sunk beneath the waves of the Mighty Deep. And should we not feel in the fulness of our hearts, that the ways of God are past finding out, and that He who made the Heavens and the earth ordereth all things for good? Yet we may shed a feeling tear to the memory of one whose earthly desire appeared to be, to render happier and better all who came within the compass of his useful and unremitting energies.

A Wreck—Possibly a Part of the President.—The ship North Bend, Ferdinand A. Croker, master, arrived at New Orleans on Monday, June 21, from Boston, passed a wreck on the 3d ult., which in the opinion of the Captain and some intelligent passengers on board, may have been a portion of the wreck of the ill-fated President. The following was entered in the log book at the time: "At half past 12 P. M., (3d June,) passed the broad side of a large vessel; her deck beams burned off in the centre and canted up, so as to present two iron daggon knees, which evidently made fast the lower deck of some large vessel. Her water ways were painted red, and the upper part of the iron knees showed her to have been a three deck vessel. Her water ways were apparently new and not long in the water."

Transportation from Pittsburgh.—Messrs. Taffe & O'Conner, of Pittsburgh, announces that they will transport from that city to Baltimore or Philadelphia on the following terms, viz: bacon, tobacco, pork, lard, cotton and wheat, 62½ cts. per 100 lbs.; and flour at $1 per bbl.

Who's got the Gout?—Our gouty friends will be glad to learn that Dr. Reid, an eminent physician in Great Britain, has discovered that there is a perfect cure for the gout by the application of sal volatile, rubbed with the hand, on the gouty member.

The William Brown.—Another seaman of this unfortunate vessel has arrived at Boston, and given to the editor of the Morning Post his account of the lamentable transaction in the long boat—which we copy. It will be seen that this statement differs very essentially from that of Messer, which we published yesterday. It strikes us that the details given below are much more probable and in accordance with the circumstances than any heretofore given.

It is painful to us to bring this afflicting subject again before our readers, but it seems to be a part of our public duty.—Phil. Chron.

STATEMENT OF WILLIAM MILLER.

I belonged to the starboard watch, and was on deck at the time the ship struck the ice. As Capt. Harris' account of her loss is strictly correct, I will not here repeat it, but shall confine myself to a plain statement of what transpired on board of the long-boat.

She was very deep, the upper part of her gunwale being barely twelve inches clear of the water. The night was pitch dark, the wind high and cold, and every few minutes we were drenched with the passing sprays which drifted on board.—The boat was very leaky, and required great exertions to keep her afloat. At times it was very difficult to get at the well, owing to the passengers, who literally stowed themselves in bulk under the thwarts, so much so, that we were frequently compelled to remove them by force in order to get at the water.—While we were fast to the ship some of the passengers assisted us to bail, but when adrift, they were so benumbed with cold as to be quite helpless. They huddled together like sheep, endeavoring to keep each other warm.

When it was day, Capt. Harris, in the jolly-boat, pulled alongside, informed the mate where we were, and advised him to make the best of his way to Newfoundland. The mate said it was impossible to make any headway, the men being unable to work the oars, owing to the crowded state of the boat. I heard neither the captain nor mate utter a syllable about casting lots or lightening the boat. The cook, a negro, requested the captain on his arrival at Philadelphia, to report that he was lost in the long-boat. Capt. Harris then pulled near to us, and took a list of our names. Upon leaving us he said—"I hope you will all behave like men, and do what the mate tells you, and you will do right enough." He then left us and in ten minutes was out of sight.—The mate had some of the provisions and water served out to all hands without exception, and used every means in his power for the safety of all on board It required great caution and exertion to keep clear of the ice, with which we were surrounded. The sea, however, was smooth; and had the boat been tight, notwithstanding the incessant rain and hail we might have made arrangements that would have rendered the boat more seaworthy.

During the whole of the day, I do not recollect having heard the mate in consultation with any of the crew, about lightening the boat, or any such subject. He seldom spoke, except when he ordered something to be done. That he could have consulted the crew without my knowledge, is possible, for I was sometimes busily engaged bailing, and doing other necessary work. About sun down we again had some provisions and water served to us with the same impartiality as before. When night set in, it was bitter cold; the sky looked dark and threatening; the passengers huddled if possible, closer together; hardly a voice was heard, except when we called upon each other to take turns at bailing the boat. About midnight, a tremendous squall burst over us, accompanied with a severe hail shower. The passengers, who had heretofore been partially quiet, in order to avoid the severity of the storm, created some confusion, and in their fruitless attempts to seek shelter, unfortunately forced the plug out of its place. The water rushing in through the opening with great rapidity, and neither threats nor entreaties could induce them to get out of the way, so as to enable us to stop the leak.

The sea was making a fair breach over us, and the boat seemed to settle in the water. It was a trying moment. Our lives hung upon the mate's decision. Had he faltered we should have gone to our long home in a few moments. After using every exertion himself to replace the plug without effect, in consequence of the obstinacy of the passengers, he exclaimed, "My God! it must be so—lighten the boat, men." Those passengers who were nearest the plug hole were then passed overboard and the plug replaced. The mate ordered the men to stop when he thought all danger past, and even prevented with his own hands, the throwing overboard of two or three who had been seized for that purpose. The young man who said his prayers was never seized for the purpose of being thrown overboard—he might have remained on board. A man and his wife said they were willing to walk overboard together, if the mate thought it necessary for the safety of the boat. To this he replied, that it was not necessary, and he pulled the man down by the coat into the midships of the boat. There was no blood spilt. The whole affair did not occupy three minutes.

Some suppose the women were spared on account of their sex—it was not so.—Had they been near the plug hole, they would undoubtedly have been passed over the side. There was nothing, to the best of my knowledge, preconcerted. It appeared to me to be the work of a moment. Had we not been struck by the squall, nor the plug knocked out, I believe the mate would never have ordered a single creature to be disturbed. His conduct from the moment we left the ship until we were picked up, appeared to me to be impartial. He worked harder than any of us, and when provisions were served out he fared no better.

When the boat was lightened, we commenced bailing, and continued without intermission until day-light. The sea had risen with the squall, which was soon followed by a strong gale, and we shipped several heavy seas, which almost swamped the boat. In the morning, we found the bodies of two men lying in the bottom of the boat, who had died during the night. I doubt not that several of those who were passed over when we were struck with the squall, were dead, as they must have been entirely under water. When we were seen by the Crescent, she was under close reefed topsails, all her other sails being handed.

As the account of our having been picked up and carried into Havre is already known by the public, I will close my statement, expressing my firm conviction that under the circumstances, the mate did what was absolutely necessary.—There was no time for casting lots—those who were in the way only were thrown overboard. I had no hand in the affair myself; neither was I requested by the mate or any of my shipmates to lend them a hand. The above is a faithful account of all that I, individually, know of this melancholy affair.

WM. MILLER.

This is the testimony of another of the seamen saved in the long-boat, and goes still farther to prove the hard heartedness and inhumanity of those who had the boat in charge. In speaking of the women, he says, "had they been near the plug-hole, they would doubtless have been passed over the side." Can this be called humanity? What! consign weak and defenceless women to the merciless billows of the ocean when there were stout hands and able bodies of the other sex on board, whose duty it was to protect them! Shame on such brutality.

She would not hold her Tongue.—A Female Orator.—In the New Hampshire Legislature on Mouday, soon after the House was called to order, Miss Abigail Folsom, of Rochester, N. H., who lately figured in an Anti-Slavery Convention in Boston, rose in the gallery and addressed the Speaker, in a loud and distinct voice, as follows:

"Mr. Speaker, I have come here with a message from God. I come to warn you against the appointment of select committees, to legislate for the people, for they are not of God, and cannot stand."

The Speaker here interposed, and ruled her out of order. She declared that until God ruled her out of order she should speak, and continued her remarks until she was borne out of the House by the door-keepers.

Mr. E. Little of our city has submitted a plan a National Bank, which certainly shows that he has decided financial skill. He would found it on a National fund, the proceeds of the public lands, shares at $10 each, and an annual subscription of the Government equal to both the first named. It should be a fiscal agent, and be managed by two boards—viz: a Board of Currency and a Board of Discount—the first to be appointed by the President, the last by the States. The proceeds to be yearly divided among the States.—Philadelphia paper.

The Insane in our Country.—There are at present sixteen hospitals for the insane in the United States. These accommodate about 1,800 patients, of whom a majority belonged to the old incurable class, before they were removed to the hospitals. By the census of 1840, ascertained at the department of State, the number of insane and idiotic reported in the United States, is 17,181; the population is 17,013,379, which gives one insane person to 990 inhabitants.

Wheat Crops.—From all that we can learn from the farmers and our exchange papers, the crops of wheat in Allegheny and Washington counties will scarcely yield an average one.—Pitts. Int.

Our General Business Directory.—We have printed 96 pages of this work, and the remainder, is being printed as fast as it can be done to be correct. Persons at a distance, and the towns and cities to be inserted, and all cards intended for the work, must be forwarded without delay.—ib.

Low Freights.—We are informed by one of our commission houses, that all kinds of freight at the present time is extremely low, both on our river and canals. Almost all kinds of Goods are transported to Philadelphia and Baltimore at about 75 cts. per 100 lbs. and flour at 37½ cents per barrel, and river freights proportionately low. Unusual facilities are thus afforded to those wishing to transport heavy goods low.—ib.

Laughing Fineable.—A young fellow, it is stated, was fined $3,75 for laughing at the mishap of a damsel, who accidently fell as she was tripping to church. Her father, having failed to elict under what statute laughter was fineable, paid the costs. The magistrate probably thought he deserved punishment for the imprudence and want of sympathy which the act displayed.

Murderers Caught.—It will be remembered that about three weeks ago we published in the Chronicle an account of a murder perpetrated in Berks county, in this State, supposed to have been committed by two of the victim's neighbors. An unfounded story has been circulated by some of our contemporaries that the murderers had been arrested near Baltimore, which we are authorised to say was without the slightest regard to truth. The correct version of their arrest is as follows:—Immediately after the murder had been committed, two friends of the murdered man, whose name was Conrad Christ, started in pursuit of the supposed murderers, and traced them from place to place, until they arrived at Dayton, Ohio, where they were arrested, and brought back to this State. They arrived yesterday, at Reading, and were safely deposited in jail to await their trial. We learn that they have divulged enough to convict them without trouble. Great credit is due to the gentlemen who started in pursuit, Messrs. Rennoe and Beutz, who so admirably worked their plans, after a travel of some fourteen hundred miles, as to bring to justice two unmitigated scoundrels, whose sole object in committing the foul and unnatural murder, was money. It is supposed the villains succeeded in carrying off with them, some four or five hundred dollars of the murdered man's property. Their trial will take place at the August term of Berks county court, to be held at Reading, and we doubt not but they will receive their full deserts.—Phil. Chron.

Look to this Parents.—"If he had brought me up properly, I should not have been here,' were the last words of Peter Robinson, who was hung in New Brunswick. (N. Jersey,) for the murder of Suydam.—This monster in the form of a man, had been permitted while a boy to do pretty much as he pleased. Like too many in the present day, he was subject to no restraint. Instead of being made to work, he was allowed to lounge through the week and to fish on the Sabbath—and as might have been expected, he has come to a disgraceful end. What must be the feelings of the father's heart, when the felon son reproaches him with being the author of his crime or ignominy?

Parents, remember the dying words of Robinson; "If he had brought me up properly, I should not have been here."

Very Proper.—The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States acknowledges the receipt of one hundred dollars, enclosed in an anonymous letter, postmarked New York, June 9. The writer states the same to be for "duties long due." The amount has been placed in the Treasury. Townsend Sharpless, a dry good merchant, of our city, last week received an anonymous letter, covering $15, which the writer says is his due. We have no doubt, after this, we shall receive a great number of letters, enclosing nice little sums, which are most honestly and honorably "our dues."—Phil. Cour.

Attempted Robbery and Murder.—A drover, of the name of Utterback, was waylayed in Grant county, Ky., a few days since, by a couple of well known desperadoes from Cincinnati, who cut his throat and attempted to murder him. Before they had effected their purpose, two strangers appeared in sight, upon which the robbers fled precipitately to a horse buggy. They were pursued and taken, having obtained but two dollars and a half from the victim. Mr. Utterback was living, but the physicians thought he could not live many hours. His windpipe is severed, and he is otherwise shockingly mangled.

A Destructive Fire at New Orleans.—The N. O. Bee of the 21st ultimo says: "Last night at half past 11 o'clock a fire broke out in Canal street in a house occupied by Mr. Woodsworth, which consumed the building in a few minutes. The flames soon extended to the adjoining buildings forming the range from the Basin to Franklin street, fronting Canal street, which were all destroyed. Several tenements on Basin and Franklin streets were also destroyed. The whole number of houses consumed is from eight to ten."

A Sad Warning.—A correspondent of the Boston Post, writing from Buffalo, says,—"Our city was thrown into considerable excitement yesterday, by the arrest of a young gentleman of the bar for forgery. Part of his connexions are said to be highly respectable: and he has within a few months united himself to one of the most beautiful and accomplished ladies in the city. The cause which led to this singular and fatal step was pecuniary embarrassment, brought on by extravagant living."

The Pittsburgh Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church will commence its annual session in Pittsburgh, on the Erie Conference on the 28th. It will be seen by a notice in this paper, that a committee has been appointed by the citizens of this town to memorialize the Pittsburgh Conference on the subject of the N. W. Virginia Academy. We understand the gentlemen composing said committee are making arrangements to be in Pittsburgh at the commencement of the Conference.—Clarksburgh Whig.

A few days since we paid a visit to the cocoonery of the Silk company in this place, and were much delighted to find them feeding about one million of worms, that appeared quite healthy, and no doubt, will yield the usual quantity of silk.—ib.

A Rebellion in Arkansas.—The New Orleans Bee mentions one of the grossest and most atrocious violations of law that ever occurred, as having recently been perpetrated in Philips county, Arkansas. The regular term of the Circuit Court being about to be held in that county, much property being advertised to be sold, and many executions to be levied, a petition signed by about two hundred names was addressed to Judge Baker, praying him not to hold the court. That functionary, in the honorable discharge of his duty, proceeded to Helena, and was on his way to the court, when the Hall of Justice was forcibly taken possession of by twenty armed men, who barricaded the door, refused possession to any person, and threatened the Sheriff with death in case he attempted resistance. The Sheriff made a requisition upon the Colonel of the county for fifty men to enable him to suppress the rebellion. After this he resigned, and the Coroner immediately followed his example, so that, there being no officer to enforce the laws, and the power to appoint a Sheriff, pro tem. devolving on one who was himself among the insurgents, the holding of the court was wholly prevented, and Judge Baker returned to Columbia. The rebels had possession of the court house at the last advices, and no attempt had been made to dislodge them. This is absolute high treason to the State of Arkansas, and should be punished in the most signal and severe manner.

The Idler in France.—The London Globe states that the Countess of Blessington is about to publish the continuation of her travels abroad, under the title of "The Idler in France." As a production of one of the most graceful and gifted female writers of the present century, it will doubtless be looked for with much interest. It will comprise, we understand, many interesting sketches and anecdotes, connected with La Haute Societe, French as well as English, and will convey a vivid picture of her ladyship's impressions during the memorable three days which terminated in placing a new sovereign on the throne of France. During this exciting period, and while the two contending parties were still struggling for mastery, it is reported that the noble authoress had the courage to traverse the streets of Paris with only one attendant.

The Coal business of the Schylkill Region is enormous. At the late business convention at Harrisburgh, Mr. Bannaer, the enterprising publisher of the Miner's Journal at Pottsville, submitted a statement, which shows that the capital actually belonging to those carrying on the extensive business of mining, is eighteen million one hundred and seventy-four dollars. This estimate is wholly independent of the iron ore with which the lands, for a distance of 26 miles, abound—and which, it is estimated, would raise the price to quite double the sum named. There are 130 miles of rail road already constructed to aid in the successful operations of mining and the transportation of the coal to market. These are only items in the great resources of this great State.

Trial for Manslaughter.—Andrew Freeberger was tried at Baltimore, on Friday last, for killing Francis Walker, by a blow with his fist. Walker had interposed to prevent a fight between Freeberger and another individual, and unfortunately got into a quarrel himself, which ended in his death. Freeberger, at the time was under the influence of liquor; the jury acquitted him, and immediately on his release he went and signed a temperance pledge, determined to run no more risks by an improper familiarity with improper drinks.

Shocking Rail-Road Accident.—The Norwich, Ct. Courier, says, that Mr. John Armstrong, while detaching the freight cars from the locomotive on the rail-road at that city, on Tuesday week, was thrown upon the track, and his head was instantly severed from his body by the whole train passing over him. A Mr. Palmer also fell under the train while endeavoring to rescue his friend, and one of his legs was crushed off just below the knee. A Coroner's jury after careful inquiry absolved the conductors from all blame.

Postponement.—President Tyler has issued his proclamation postponing, indefinitely, the sale of public lands advertised to take place at Chicago, Ill., on the 9th of August. This is done in consequence of urgent representations from the settlers, of the injury which will result to them by insisting on the sale at that time. Government agents and speculators who have been anticipating a rich harvest will find themselves mistaken.

Indian Corn.—According to the census returns, the annual crop of Indian Corn of North Carolina is thirty-four million of bushels. In the production of this important item, therefore, North Carolina stands second on the list—the annual crop of Tennessee, which is the largest in produces, being upward of forty millions of bushels.

An Old Newspaper.—The Newport Mercury of Saturday announces that number completes eighty-three years since the paper was first published in that town (June 12th, 1757) by James Franklin, elder brother of Dr. Benjamin Franklin.

The income of the Bishop of London, as Bishop, is £11,700 a year. It is to be hoped he gives liberally to the poor.—They have enough who need in England.

MUSKINGUM COUNTY.—The "Gazette" gives names of James Henderson, for the Senate, Gen. Watkins, James Karnes, Lewis Ijams John Stillwell, for the House, as suitable didates to be ran at the fall election by the igs. The "Aurora" says it is probable the Democratic party will have no ticket.

☞The Fayetteville Luminary, the organ of "Reformed Methodist," is pretty severe on Norris, of the Olive Branch, for his strictures the Utica Convention.

☞President Tyler officially informed Mrs. rrison, at North Bend, of the appropriation Congress, of $25,000 for her benefit. To ich she replies with sentiments of gratitude.

The Memorial is said to be out 200 feet in length, and signed by a large tion of the oldest business men of the place.

SOUVENIR AND REPOSITORY.—We have received e numbers for June 19, and July 3, of the "Ladies' Literary Repository," and the number for ne 26th, of the "Literary Souvenir." These mbers are illustrated with a variety of beautiful cuts explanatory of the laws of nature, and e works of creation. These excellent literary orks are edited and published by A. B. F. ildreth, at Lowell, Mass., the former similonthly at $1, the latter weekly at $2. Our estern Yankee readers who may be partial to a terary and miscellaneous paper from their nave land, cannot do better than to patronize Mr. ildreth.

UTICA CONVENTION.—This convention, to which e alluded in our last, "recommended that a nion of Seceding Methodists and other christans, be effected upon the following principles," z:

1. That each society or church possess power herent in themselves to form such rules and gulations as are necessary for carrying on the orship of God: but may delegate so much powr as they think proper, on a plan of representaon, for the general good and the promotion of e work of God among them; the representatives, hen in conference assembled, to station preachrs of their own body, and also such as may be recommended by the Quarterly Conferences as proper persons to engage in the pastoral work; and uch appointments shall be as far as practicable, n conformity with the wishes of the preachers, nd the circuits and stations signified through heir delegates. But wherever there are mutual agreements between preachers and people, the Conferences shall never disturb those relations: evertheless this shall not be so construed as to o away with an itinerant ministry.

2. That no person is to be a member of any ranch of the association, who is a slaveholder, or n apologist for slavery, either in word or practice, or any person who is in the manufacture, sale or se of spirituous liquors except for medicinal or mehanical purposes.

3. That no inequality of rights or privileges is o be allowed in any society on the ground of either ondition or color.

The first resolution, above recommends that his new church in contemplation, should be retricted from interposing its authority in severng the relations between congregations and minsters where they mutually agree, &c., but adds, "this shall not be so construed as to do away with an itinerant ministry." Now this part of the resolution to a person who understands the subject, is rather laughable than otherwise. The following resolution would not be more ridiculous; "Resolved, That Abel Brown shall have both his legs cut off six inches above the knees, nevertheless this resolution shall not be so construed as to prevent the said Abel from walking."

We admit the congregational mode of government is scriptural. So is the itinerant mode where the people adopt it. God seems to recognize the right of His people to govern themselves after any mode they think best, that is not opposed to the essential principles of morality and religion. When on one occasion they chose a king He did not interpose His authority to prevent it, but simply advised them of the consequences of such a government. We consider therefore the whole question of Congregationalism and Itinerancy a question of expediency. If the question be refered to the convenience of the ministry then a congregational mode should be adopted. But if it is to be refered to the welfare of the church, then, in the present state of society, an itinerancy is called for; with the present facilities of the church, generally, no Methodist secession, in our opinion, can succeed without it.

ARRIVAL OF THE REMAINS OF GENERAL HARRISON.—The remains of General Harrison, accompanied by his son John Scott Harrison, the Cincinnati committee, with a detachment of the Marine Corps, arrived yesterday at 2 o'clock, accompanied by our Mayor and Pittsburgh committee, who meet them at Sharpsburgh. About 3 o'clock the largest mass we ever remember to have seen in Pittsburgh, collected at the head of Liberty and Penn Streets. The procession being formed, headed by the Military, under the command of Col. Trovillo, Col. Denny and the Marshalls, with Maj. J. M. Davis and aids, and officers of the U. S. Army and Navy, our Clergy, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh Committees, the Officers and Soldiers who served under Harrison, the Mayor, Recorder, and Police of Pittsburgh and Allegheny, with a vast number of our citizens attended and marched through our city to the Steamer Raritan, where the remains were deposited, and she immediately departed for Cincinnati. There must have been from 15,000 to 20,000 citizens and spectators, and the Fair of our city, with the children and youth, crowded every house, window, and the streets, and the doors and business houses were principally closed; we have never seen such a solemn procession since that at the funeral of the immortal Washington. The firing of cannon, the tolling of bells, and solemn music, and the countenances of all classes of our citizens, betokened their grief and sympathy for the remains of one of her most respected, virtuous, and honored citizens.—*Pitts. PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE, July 14.—Flour 4,50; wheat 80 cents.

BALTIMORE, July 3.—Flour—The price of Flour has still further advanced, and sales of standard brand of Howard street have been made from store at 5,62½ a 5,75 per bbl., not exceeding about 300 bbls., at the latter, and those on Thursday. Holders continue to demand 5,75, but the article was rather flat yesterday. The wagon and car price is 5,50. Millers, having generally been grinding to fulfil contracts, the stock of City Mills was in consequence prevented from accumulating: we are therefore enabled to report only one sale, which was made early in the week, at 5,75. About the same time parcels of Susquehanna sold at 5,75; and fresh ground Lancaster county is now held at 6,00, but we have heard of no transactions at this latter rate.

The Home Market.—Of about 200 Beef Cattle offered on Monday, 150 sold at 6,50 a 7,25 per 100 lbs. the remainder laid over. The above prices establish a decline of 1,00 per 100 lbs., on recent rates, as the quality for which the highest price quoted was paid, was very prime.—Lyford.

NEW YORK, July 1.—Flour—Prices of Western Flour, have further slightly advanced, and at our present enhanced quotations, holders are firm. Common brands Genessee may be quoted at 5,43¾ a 5,50; Ohio, via canal, 5,25 a 5,37½, and Michigan, 5,18¾ a 5,31¼. There is no Ohio, via New Orleans, in first hands.

New York Cattle Market, June 28.—Beeves—At market 1137 head of Beef Cattle, including 250 left over last week—800 come from the South, the balance from this State.

The demand for Beef being moderate, and the supply large less prices were submitted to; 887 head were taken at prices varying from 5,50 to 7,50—average 6,50 the 100 lbs.—New World.

PHILADELPHIA, July 6.—The receipts of Flour continue limited and prices have again improved. Sales for shipment of over 4,000 bbls. at 5,19 a 5,25 for fair brands Penna. early in the week, subsequently at 5,25 a 5,37½, and 5,50 for fresh ground and Brandywine. Sales for city use at 5,25 a 5,75 for first choice brands Penn'a. and 5,12½ a 5,25 for Western.

Beef Cattle were in moderate request, and 400 head were sold at 5,50 a 7,50 per 100 lbs. Large droves have passed through this city during the last month, from the western and southern parts of this State, intended principally for the New York market.—Bicknell.

PITTSBURGH, July 2.—Business is dull and little doing, except for leading articles for immediate consumption or use.

Flour and Wheat has advanced, the arrivals by wagons and boats during the week is about 4000 barrels, and ready sales yesterday and to day at the river, and from wagon at 3,87½ a 4,12½ and from store at 4,25 a 4,37½ per bbl. Wheat commands 75 to 80 cts.

Bacon—is plenty and dull—few sales.

Coffee—A fair stock and good sales, about 500 bags at 12½ to 13½ cts.

Tea—Holders firm and constant sales at, from 60 to 85 cts, according to kind and quality.

Sugar—Firm, sales in hhds. at 7½ a 8 cts and bbls. 8¾ to 9 cents.—Int.

MASSILLON, July 1.—Flour $3,87½.

Wheat—There appears to be a still further rise on Wheat, it is quoted now at from 1,00, to 1,10 cents per bushel. What has brought about the rise we are not able to say, except it is competition, it being higher here than any place on the canal. It has, however, given a new impetus to business which we all feel.—Gaz.

CINCINNATI, July 6.—Flour, 4,00; Wheat, 65 a 70; Corn, 20 a 25; Oats, 20.—Phil.

STEUBENVILLE, O., July 8.—Wheat 75 cts. per bushel, Flour 4,00 a 4,25 per barrel.—Herald.

ITEMS.

THE ART OF FLYING.—Mr. Jacob F. Heston, a respectable resident of this county, has constructed and patented an invention, which he calls a Flying Machine, and which, when brought into successful operation, will no doubt excite universal attention.—Phil. paper.

What we have been expecting from the enterprising of this age.

FLOUR AND GRAIN IN NEW YORK.—The New York Commercial of Saturday says:—"The market has continued firm throughout the week, and common brands Canal now command 5,60. Ohio 5,31½ a 5,50; Michigan 5,25 a 5,37½, according to quality and condition, and Georgetown and Howard street, 5,50, being an advance of 12½ cents all round on the prices of Saturday last.—Bicknell.

The Frederick County (Md.) Bank has given "notice that having recovered the whole of its own issues, stolen from its vaults on the 22d of May last, with the exception of $1542, with all the State Banks, certificates and private check, taken at the same time, it has this day resumed Bank operations. Its own notes will hereafter be received for all debts due the bank, and will be paid out at the counter as usual.

A London paper informs us that 75 persons, mostly Greeks, while crossing the Marizza, at Adrianople, on a temporary wooden bridge, on the 21st March, fell into the river, and 72 of them were drowned.

Indiana has not been able to pay the interest on her State bonds. Illinois, Arkansas, and Michigan, promptly met theirs.

The Moyamensing Bank, Philadelphia, has been sued for not redeeming its notes according to the provisions of the new Relief Bill.

It seems to be pretty generally understood that the Hon. John Sergeant, has declined the mission to England.

We have nothing definite from Congress yet. In the Senate the bill to establish a new National Bank is under discussion. Mr. Clay and his friends are anxious to establish branches in the States without asking the consent of said States, and Messrs, Preston, Rives and other Senators, argue the propriety and policy of first obtaining the consent of the States. It is probable that this difficulty will be reconciled or compromised. If so, a Bank Bill will no doubt become a law.—In the House the great question is the distribution of the proceeds of the Public Lands. But little progress has been made thus far. The probability is that Congress will be in session at least a month longer.—Bicknell.

IMPORTANT DIFFERENCE.—The revenue derived by the British Government, through the postage on letters by the Cunard steamers, is about £20,000 a year. They formerly lost twice that amount in support of the old Halifax and Falmouth line.

DESERTED.—Our citizens are fast leaving us for the different watering places, causing our streets to present quite a deserted and lifeless appearance. Some in search of health, some looking for pleasure, but the greater part to free themselves from the ennui and listliness that the heat produces in the human system.—Phil. paper.

THE TOMATOE.—This luscious and wholesome vegetable has made its appearance in our market but the price asked for them, is rather too extravagant for our pocket, asking twelve and a half cents for three small ones.—ib.

CREW OF THE WM. BROWN.—The National Gazette states that John Messer, alias Norton, and Wm. Miller, two of the seamen of the ill-fated William Brown, who were in the long-boat, and have had published statements of that sad occurrence, were together in this city, on Tuesday. Messer was known on board the ship, and in the boat by the name of Norton. Why not examine them before a magistrate to ascertain which of the two is correct in his statements?—ib.

THE WHITE HOUSE.—On Monday the 5th July, the President's House was hospitably open for the reception of his friends, and many of them, of both sexes, residents of Washington and strangers, availed themselves of the opportunity to pay their respects to the Chief Magistrate.

The following article from a late Republican, contains information of much interest. We received an intimation, a few days since, in a letter from a gentleman at Washington, that it is correct:

We learn from good authority that Col. Johnson has succeeded in treating with the Wyandotts for the purchase of their lands and ultimate removal west of the Mississippi.

This tribe, consisting of about 700 souls is the last remnant of the Indian race within the borders of our State. If our recollection serve us, the Wyandotts originally claimed to be owners of all the soil from the lakes to the Ohio, and from Pittsburgh to the Great Miami River. They were familiarly known as the grandfathers of the Western tribes. The first to possess, they are the last to leave. Those beautiful hunting grounds of their fathers, where a century ago a white man had never trodden, are now entirely occupied by a different race, numbering more than two millions of souls.—Cin. Repub.

FOURTH OF JULY.—This day coming on Sunday, was celebrated in this city on Saturday the 3d. Though on that day our city was not enlivened by any military display, yet it was not altogether passed over in neglect. It could not have been more appropriately celebrated than it was, by the Sabbath Schools of the Methodist churches. On the morning of the 3d the teachers and scholars of the Methodist Protestant Church, assembled, and after marching through our streets, headed by the Rev. Mr. Dalbey, took a ramble on the hill opposite this place, and partaking of refreshments provided for the occasion returned home. On the afternoon the school of the Methodist Episcopal Church also assembled, under the care of the Rev. Mr. Babcock, and after parading through some of the principal streets, retired to a shady spot upon Mr. Wells' hill, where after the Declaration of Independence was read, an address was delivered by Mr. Edwin C. Wilson.—Stubenville Her.

THE CROPS.—The long continuance of dry weather has caused a good deal of damage in this and the adjacent counties, among the crops. The potatoes will be few and poor; and the oats scarcely worth harvesting. Corn has suffered a great deal; but would still recover if we would have a good rain within a few days. So protracted has been the drought, and intense the heat, that potatoes have actually burnt up in the ground.—Alton (Illi.) Tel.

CROPS.—The Bedford, Pa., Inquirer of the 17th inst. says—Our farmers were beginning to anticipate failures, but the recent rains in this region will revive their hopes again—they have just come in time to make the crops. The corn we are told looks remarkably well.

THE CROPS.—The Westmoreland, Pa., Intelligencer, states that the wheat crop in that section, is almost an entire failure.

The celebrated DeTocqueville has gone on a political mission to Algiers. Are we to expect a work on democracy?

THE WRECKED STEAMER.—The New York Commercial copies the account of Captain Sawyer, in relation to the wreck of a large steamer at sea, and says:

"It is suggested, and with apparent probability, that in this encounter on the waste of waters we have a final and conclusive intimation of the fate that has befallen the steam ship President.

"It must be remarked, however, that the wreck of a burned vessel, supposed to be a ship, and cotton loaded, had before been fallen in with, more than once, at points not very remote from that indicated by Captain Sawyer. The London Shipping Gazette of May 17th, contained a report from the Jessie Ritchie, arrived at Falmouth, that, on the 7th of April, a wreck was seen from, and visited by the captain of that vessel, in Lat. 28 N., Lon. 72 W., found to be North American built, from four to five hundred tons, lying on the starboard side and burned to the water's edge.

"Unless Captain Sawyer is positive and right about the fragments of wheels and machinary, in the wreck seen by him, the presumption is that his wreck and the one seen from the Jessie Ritchie were the same."

NOTE.—It will be recollected that the boilers of the President were below deck, and where the boilers usually are in river steamers, there were state rooms.

NOTICE TO POSTMASTERS.—By instructions from the Post Office Department, all Post Offices in the State of Michigan, in Indiana north of the National Road, and in Ohio, with the exception of the counties of Hamilton, Butler, Preble, Montgomery, Warren, Clermont, Brown, Highland, Clinton, Greene, Madison, Fayette, Adams, Scioto, Pike, Ross, and Pickaway, will be supplied with all kinds of Post Office Blanks by application to the Postmaster at Columbus, Ohio.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the Phil'a. Chronicle.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER

FROM ENGLAND.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP

BRITANNIA,

AT BOSTON.

The Royal Mail Steamship Britannia, Capt. R. B. Cleland, arrived at Boston, Saturday morning, at about 7 o'clock. She sailed from Liverpool on the afternoon of the 19th, and has made the passage in about thirteen and a half days. She experienced some rough weather, but what is very comfortable for this season, saw no icebergs.

The Britannia and Caledonia both made very quick passages out from Halifax.

The Great Western was spoken by the Britannia on the 27th June, nine days out.

We have received advices from the principal parts of Europe, fifteen days later than those brought by the Columbia.

Captain Drew, the leader of the gang of pirates who destroyed the Caroline at Niagara, came passenger in this steamer to Halifax. She brought sixty-two passengers in all—forty-one to Boston. There was a better feeling in the Liverpool cotton market. In the week ending 18th ult., 26,100 bales had been sold. There was decided improvement.

Nothing of the President. It is now settled that she will be never heard of again.

The health of the Queen was bad. Some alarm was felt in consequence.

Active movements were making all over England, Scotland, and Ireland, for the next elections. Much excitement prevailed.

In Syria, more troubles have broken out, and some Turkish troops had been driven back by the mountaineers.

In Crete the insurrection is complete, raising recruits, distributing arms, and furnishing men through the Archipelago.

GREAT BRITIAN.—The British Parliament continued in session with no definite prospect of adjournment. There was considerable political agitation in the newspapers.

DEFEAT OF MINISTERS.—At half past three o'clock, on the morning of June 5th, the House of Commons declared, by a majority of one, that the present Ministers of the Crown do not possess the confidence of Parliament, and that their continuance in office is at variance with the spirit of the constitution.

For Sir R. Peel's motion, 312; against, 311.

When the cheers which followed the announcement had subsided, Lord John Russell said he would take until Monday to consider what course he would pursue, for the vindication of Ministers.

On Monday, he intimated his intention to advise a dissolution, whereupon Sir Robert Peel agreed not to oppose the supplies.

The Ministry have been beaten by a majority of 18, on the Criminal Law question.

The Queen will not dissolve Parliament in person, but by commission.

THE PRESIDENT STEAMER.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—In answer to a question from Lord Strangford, Earl Minto said the government did not think it expedient to send any vessel after the President Steamer. The noble Earl also threw discredit upon the conjectors raised respecting the large steamer seen in St. George's Channel, hinting that some of the reports respecting the President, originated from speculators.

There has been some serious riots at Nottingham, and the military had been called out. A correspondent of the Globe says—My last account took the election up to Monday night, when Sir John Hobhouse and Mr. Larpent were stated to be in Nottingham and addressed the electors. The high state of feeling which exists was evinced on Monday night, when the Yellow Flags were torn down by the Blues, and Mr. Larpent himself struck as he was proceeding to his hotel. On Tuesday, the bands and flags of both parties were out, and some conflicts of a most serious nature ensued. Many were severely injured and several stabbed in the contest. Towards evening it was evident that more would be done than had.

The first demonstration of it was from the Blues, who with a shower of stones smashed the windows of the Review office, the Radical paper. One man was immediately apprehended by the police in the act of throwing an immense hedge stake at the window, and conveyed to the police office. The Review and Journal offices were threatened by each party with something worse than stones, and wherever the police appeared they were most shamefully beaten. The Mayor's windows were the last broken, and they were smashed by the Tories. It being ten o'clock at night, and the civil force being entirely worn out, orders were given for the military to be called out. The 3d Dragoons arrived at full trot, and the streets were immediately deserted. Police and soldiers guarded the buildings and patrolled the town all night, and quelled several disturbances.

The London Observer says that the very important event of her Majesty's accouchment may be expected at the end of September, or early in the month of October.

FRANCE.—A strong sensation is produced in all the departments of France by the refusal of the corporations of several cities—Grenoble, Nantes, Rheimi, Perpignan, and others, to assist in the survey ordered by the Minister of Finance, for the purpose of increasing the receipts given by the house, window, and furniture taxes.

This source of discord promises to become very serious.

SPAIN.—The Spanish Territory has been invaded by 1500 Aldudes. The affair was under discussion in Corres.

TURKEY.—Constantinople papers give the alarming accounts of the politics of European and Asiatic Turkey.

AUSTRIA.—There was a rumor in Paris, that Austria had just concluded a contract for a loan of 75,000,000 of florins, of nearly 180,000,000 of francs, at 5 per cent. but at what price, or with what capitalists, is not learnt.

THE EAST.—It is stated that the Turkish government had made all required concessions to Mehemet Ali, and that the long pending eastern question was finally adjusted. But the latest Paris and London Gazettes convey a different impression.

Extracts from English papers received by the Britannia.

A Belgrade correspondent writes on the 2d ultimo to the Augsburgh Gazette—The Turkish soldiery continue to exercise all their violence against the Christians, and the Pacha of Nissa does not seem to treat them with more leniency. He is enrolling troops and making other preparations, but his future intentions are not known.

PORTUGAL—Lisbon.—Another Ministerial crisis had occurred at Lisbon, on which the opposition has finally defeated by 45 votes to 38. But another question had arisen of more serious character, in consequence of the Finance Minister, Baron Togal, having refused to agree to certain projects of the Special Finance Committee.

The difficulties occasioned by this state of things coinciding with the dispute about the organization of the national batallions, had led the ministers to tender their resignations. The Queen has sent for the Duke of Palmella.

The Augsburgh Gazette in an article dated Poaen, states that the person who carried off the Spanish Princess Isabella, and whom the French journalists dignified with the title of Count, is the younger brother of M. Adam Garowski, of the Government of Kalisch, in the kingdom of Poland. His sister is married to Count Mullinen.

The Precuisent of Antwerp says, on the authority of letters from Holland, that a marriage between the Prince de Joinville and the Princess Sophia, daughter of the King of Holland, may be considered as agreed upon.

For the Western Recorder.

MANCHESTER, MICH., JUNE 28, 1841.

Dear Brother: The Lord is still blessing our labor in Michigan. We have now more than two hundred members here. We have a class in Pittsford of forty members, another at Grasslake of thirty-four, and the work is spreading so fast, and far, that I am not able to take charge of it. We have a number of faithful laborers who are doing much for the cause here; we think that Michigan will be able another year to supply itself with preachers.

I would wish to know of you whether the Ohio or the Pittsburgh Conference is to take charge of this work another year? As the brethren here are entitled to a delegate, we want to know which conference he is to attend, and where the ministers are to be recommended who wish to travel. On these points you will please to inform me, as you were at the conference, and know what the understanding between the two conferences was.

Yours, &c., C. C. CHAPMAN.

In reply to the interrogatories, above, we say that we know nothing of any understanding between the Ohio and Pittsburgh Conferences in relation to this mission, though there may have been some correspondence between them on the subject of providing a missionary to attend to the calls from Michigan. As this Territory belongs to the Ohio Conference, we give it as our opinion that whenever she signifies her ability and wish to provide for this mission, she is entitled to the care of it; but, until then, it devolves on the Pittsburgh Conference to provide therefor, she having established it. Of course the delegate should attend the latter conference, and the ministers should be recommended to that body. It would probably be expedient and proper for the Ohio Conference, at her approaching session, to express her sentiments on this subject: So that the responsibility of providing for this section of the work may be regularly transfered, if desired, against another year.

For the Western Recorder.

The undersigned, being in attendance at the quarterly conference of Sandusky circuit, were by vote of said conference officially requested to publish through the Recorder, the subjoined resolution respecting an individual who has lately palmed himself upon an unsuspecting portion of community as a minister of our church, greatly, we fear, to the injury of our cause.

Resolved, That it be duly certified to all whom it may concern, that SENECA D. FISH was not a minister nor member of the Methodist Protestant Church at the time of his leaving these parts, and had not been for a year; and that abundant evidence has this day been adduced before this body that he is a base impostor, grossly unworthy to be received or tolerated as a minister or professor of the christian religion.

MUTUAL RIGHTS

AND

Ecclesiastical Reform.

IT has been suggested by those whose opinion is worthy of regard, that a periodical work in pamphlet form, devoted principally to the interests of the Methodist Protestant Church, and to an examination of reform principles advocated by the ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, previous to the formation of the Associated Methodist Churches, now known as the Methodist Protestant Church, would meet with approbation and support. Solicited to test the validity of this opinion by experiment, the only ordeal by which matters of this kind can be definitely settled, the subscribers propose a monthly publication under the above title.

The first object of this work will be to collect and preserve, in a convenient and durable form, the principles espoused and defended by those who sought to reform the polity of the M. E. Church, and check the mal-administration of her itinerant ministers. While the plan of the work will admit essays on church government generally, we shall confine its columns more particularly to bring before the public a succinct view of the commencement, progress and consummation of events that lead to the secession of many ministers and members from the Methodist E. Church, and ultimately established the separate organization of the Methodist Protestant Church.

The present period seems to be a favorable one in view of bringing before an intelligent and candid public the controversy that existed between the friends to a radical and scriptural ecclesiastical government, and the Bishops and hierarchy of the Methodist Episcopal Church.—The undue excitement produced by interested persons in that communion, to divert the public attention from the merits of the pending controversy, has now subsided—and the influence of those persons being now neutralized, because of their motives and conduct being generally known, and the public mind being prepared for a dispassionate examination of the subject, points out the necessity and expediency of the proposed publication.

The work will be published simultaneously in Boston and New York, once a month, in the octavo form, to contain some thirty pages, elegantly printed, with good type and fine paper. The price will be two dollars a year, payable in advance, or on the reception of the first number, which will be put to press as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers are obtained to warrant the expense. Any person obtaining six subscribers, and forwarding the money, will be entitled to the seventh copy.

Persons holding subscription papers will please return the names of subscribers as soon as practicable. It will be admitted by all who have taken an interest in the objects contemplated by the subscribers, that as a Church, we owe it to ourselves and the community at large, that we should present matters in their true light, that after we are gone, posterity may judge between us and our opponents in view of the truth and justice of our course. Many of the writings of the early Reformers have gone out of print—the protests against unrighteous clerical assumptions ought not to be lost. Let then, a simultaneous effort be made at once, by our friends, and we shall send forth an antidote to the poison that has afflicted many.

MISCELLANEOUS.

RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPERS FOR THE BENEFIT OF CHILDREN.—It is a great mistake in those who think none but adults can be benefitted by reading religious newspapers. True the parents ought to take a paper for their own instruction and edification. So they should for the improvement of their sons and their daughters, and for their servants and others under their roof. But those little buds just opening should not be forgotten. Children who are just beginning to read and reflect are often delighted with a newspaper.—Put one in their way that contains good religious matter, and you not only aid them in learning to read, but you give them a taste for good reading. You instruct them in divine things. And some interesting truth may by this means make an impression never to be removed from their minds. It is true there are many small and valuable papers published expressly for juvenile readers. But we have persons in all our families whose capacities demand more solid instruction, and whose minds should be stored with truth conveyed with language on a level with every ordinary capacity. This will lead on the youth beyond their youth to manhood; and from the nursery to the open world and active life. As the youthful mind is ever on the advance, we should ever sit before them such books and papers as are suited not only to their present age, but to ripe years. This will serve to develop the powers, and set the mind on stretch for ideas and subjects which should occupy their thoughts, and interest them as they advance.

I therefore give it as my deliberate opinion, that while small children may be essentially benefitted by the reading of juvenile papers, they, and certainly those of riper years, should have access to a good religious paper. Every family should take one. I would take one for the benefit of my children even if I should never look into it myself. It is very inconsistent for parents to take pains to send their children to school and to meeting and still not give them a religious paper at home. Think of it ye parents; and for a small sum make your children rich in useful knowledge.—Christian Herald.

DEAD LETTER OFFICE.—The dead letter office in the Post Office Department is a great curiosity. The dead letters are returned to the General Post Office with the quarterly accounts from the 13,000 post offices which now exist. Five clerks are employed in the dead letter post-office. The envelops are taken from the packages by one clerk, who ties a string round the contents and casts them into a basket. The next clerk assorts them and compares them with the post bills, sending the letters to a clerk to be opened. On opening, the letters containing no valuable enclosures are thrown into a basket and destroyed. Those containing valuable enclosures are returned to the offices where they were mailed, and sent to the owner if found. If not claimed, all money is placed in a separate fund and the account recorded, so that it can be paid to the owner at any future period if claimed. They open about two hundred and fifty thousand letters per quarter. There are now several cart loads in the office, unopened. The work of opening and assorting is very tedious and laborious.

THE GREAT MAMMOTH CAVE IN KENTUCKY.—Dr. John Croghan, the proprietor of this wonderful Cave, situated in Edmondson county, Ky., has opened a house or place of public entertainment within about a mile from its mouth! where he accommodates visiters with lodging and meals. A member of Congress says in a letter with which we have been favored, "This great curiosity is destined to become a place of fashionable resort." The following are the Rules and regulations.

1st. No person will be permitted to enter the Cave without a guide, or during his continuance therein to separate from him. 2d. Nothing found in the Cave is to be taken away by visitors. 3d. Visiters are particularly charged not to break the formations in the Cave, or to disfigure the walls or ceilings by writing of names, or otherwise. 4th. Visiters are requested to report to the managers any misconduct or neglect on the part of the guides. 5th. Charge for guide to the Cave, for five hours or less, first visit, $1. 6th. Every subsequent visit not exceeding five hours 50 cents. 7th. Children and servants half price. 8th. Boarders after the third visit, may accompany newly arrived visiters without charge.

N. B. Skiffs at all times in readiness at the river and lake within the Cave.

Rates of Fare at the Cave House.—Boarding $7, do. within the Cave $14; breakfast, dinner or supper, 50 cents each. Children half price. Lodging single night 25; horse fed 25 cts; per night 50 cts; per week $2,50. Wines of various kinds, and of the best quality, at the usual rates. Fowling pieces and fishing tackle will be furnished to visiters, which if lost or damaged, must be paid for.

N. B. Accommodations are furnished exclusively to visiters at the Cave.

FLIGHT OF BIRDS.—The rapidity with which birds move from place to place, is one remarkable circumstance attending them. The hawk, and many other birds occasionally fly at the rate of not less than one hundred and fifty miles an hour.

A falcon, belonging to Henry IV. of France made its escape, and in twenty hours afterward was found at Malta, one thousand three hundred and fifty miles distant; so that, as hawks do not fly by night, he must have hourly flown 75 miles even supposing him to have been immediately discovered at Malta, and the days to have been the longest.

The flight of birds is a sort of augury, though a very different sort from that believed in by the superstitious of antiquity. It has no connection with the offices or fortunes of men, but it tells what kind of season prevails in those climes whence the visiters come. The early appearance of the winter birds is a sure sign of an early winter in the northern countries; and the early appearance of the summer ones is equally sure sign of an early spring in the south.

IMPROVEMENT IN MAKING GUNPOWDER. Mr. Mayer, mining superintendent at Gegenback in the Duchy of Baden, has discovered that colophonium (resin) mixed with gunpowder in proportion of an ounce to a pound, doubles the strength of the powder, so that in blasting, one ounce may be used instead of two, and with greater effect. The gunpowder and resin should be immediately blended. Mr. Mayer made this discovery accidentally, from putting a piece of paper on which there happened to be sealing wax into his gun, the effect being as if he had used a double charge, he was knocked down by the recoil. This he imputed to the resin.

William Penn was born in London in 1664, and died in Rushcomb, in England in 1718. He established the colony of Pennsylvania, which took its name from him. It was granted to him in consideration of debts due his father, for services done to the crown. He afterwards purchased it of the Indians, and ever treated them with perfect fairness. He resided most of the time in England, and governed his colony by the assistance of deputies. About the commencement of the Revolution, the inhabitants of the colony paid him $370,000 for it. The character of Penn is truly amiable, benevolent and humane; and his labors were devoted to the good of mankind.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE QUARTERLY CONFERENCE OF THE YOUNGSTOWN CIRCUIT.

Resolved, 1*st.* That we regard slavery as a moral evil of the greatest magnitude; a henious sin against God and man, that ought immediately to be repented of and abandoned.

Resolved, 2*d.* That the prejudice against color so inveterately cherished by so many of our brethren, is most offensive to God; it wickedly pours contempt on His work, and quarrels with the alotment of His providence; is cruel to the colored man, and is a main support of the system of slavery.

Resolved, 3*d.* That the apparent sanction put upon slavery in the discipline of our church, by making a distinction in rights on account of color, and by admitting those guilty of the practice to the ministry and to the membership of the church, ought to be entirely withdrawn.

Resolved, 4*th.* That slavery being contrary to the morality of the Holy Scriptures, is a proper subject of church discipline, and members who persist in the crime, or in the support and defence of it, may, and should be expelled as for other immoralities, but the same patience, and meekness and persevering efforts to enlighten and reclaim, should be employed as are requisite in reference to evil customs which have been long suffered to prevail, and in relation to which the public mind is not fully enlightened.

Resolved, 5*th.* That we respectfully recommend to the circuits and stations in the Pittsburg district, to take measures to have a convention of anti-slavery ministers and members of the church, held at the place of the next meeting of the next session of the Annual Conference or the Monday preceding.

Resolved, 6*th.* That we do most sincerely detest the principle and practice of amalgamation or a matrimonial union of whites and blacks: and that nothing be so construed in the 2d Resolution as to favor the principle of amalgamation.

W. B. MILLER, Chairman.
T. W. Stephens, Secretary.

SHARON, PA., MAY 25, 1841.

Br. Springer: Having been much afflicted at the time of the last Annual Conference, and my affliction continued so that I was not able to go to my circuit till in April, when I reached the circut I found Br. Inskeep in tolerable good health, having had considerable success in his labors on his charge. I have gone twice round the circuit, find it to be a beautiful country—many kind friends, and some good meetings.—But still there are some things to mourn over. I would say to the brethren and friends on Coshocton circuit, I have not forgotten you, but remember with gratitude and pleasure the happy seasons we have enjoyed together. I have occasionally enjoyed the privilege of sitting together with christians in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. I am striving to live for the day when all the faithful shall have a place of glory eternal in the heavens.

THO. W. STEVENS.

CLERMONT CT., O., JUNE 26, 1841.

Br. Springer: I wish, if you please, to make it known through the Recorder, that our 4th quarterly meeting for this circuit, will commence on Saturday, 7th August, 11 o'clk. at Bethesda Chapel. It is intended to protract the meeting for 5 or 6 days. This meeting is designed as a substitute for a camp-meeting for the circuit, as the brethren believe more real good will be done at such a meeting held in the house, than if held in the woods. It is much desired that the members of the church, within the bounds of the circuit, will be in attendance and endeavor to sustain the meeting as much as possible. It is absolutely necessary, that the official members of the circuit, unstationed ministers, stewards, exhorters, class leaders, should for the respectability and service of the church, be there at the commencement of the meeting. Among other important business to be transacted, at the quarterly meeting, will be the election of a lay delegate, to attend the approaching conference of ministers and lay delegates in Springfield.

The discipline of the church requires that the stewards make the best effort to raise the allowance of Itinerant ministers who labor on the circuit and stations, and in addition to this, during the last quarter, to take up collections at the different congregations on the circuit, called a conference collection, intended to make up the deficiencies of those preachers who do not get their full amount of pay on the circuits where they have labored. But in case the stewards fail in their duty, it devolves upon the minister to attend to the same. It is very desirable, in view of the general prosperity of the church that the stewards on the circuits and stations would attend to this disciplinary regulation.

The stationed and unstationed ministers in Cincinnati, and those on the adjacent circuits, the President of the district if in convenient distance, and conference missionary are respectfully and earnestly invited to attend.

There will be also a protracted meeting at Withamsville, to commence the last of July, expected to last 3 or 4 days. Any of our ministers who can attend, I hope will do so.

Any of the superintendents of neighboring circuits, who desire ministerial aid from this circuit, will please to keep their eye on the above dates, 31st of July and 7th August, and not fix their meeting on those days.

Some of the superintendents do not publish their quarterly meetings only one or two weeks before the time, and then call out for help, and then behold, the minister called on, has a quarterly meeting at the same time. This will explain why the writer was not on Highland circuit, when called for on the 16th of May. He makes this statement, because he had made a promise.

If a company from Eagle creek circuit, or any other place, think proper to come and encamp near Bethesda chapel, during the progress of the meeting, they will find the same services, that are usual at camp-meetings—Prayer meeting in the morning, and preaching from two to three times a day, and the brethren in the vicinity will render all the help they can to make such comfortable, besides entertaining as many friends and strangers in their houses, as will be convenient.

May God in his infinite goodness, bless all well meant efforts to promote his glory, and pour a flood of salvation upon all his people.

Yours, respectfully,
R. T. BOYD.

PROTECT THE BIRDS.—"An Old Farmer" writing in the Norristown Register, says—"It is my belief, and has been for years past, that the farmers' crops of corn are more destroyed by worms than they would be if birds of all descriptions were left alone by gunners, who run over the farm and destroy both grass and grain. It is a hardship, the farmer cultivates his land, the worms destroy his corn, and the gunner his grass, his grain, and his fences." A thousand more well attested facts might be stated to show the value of birds; but more are not necessary. Let every farmer and every one who is interested in the labor of the farmer, (and who is not?) do what he can to protect them, and the face of the country will no longer present the appearance of scorched and blasted wilderness, but will produce their "fruit in season."

BEAVERS.—Such is the sagacity of beavers, that a tribe of American Indians considered them as a fallen race of human beings, who, in consequence of their wickedness, vexed the Great Spirit, and were condemned by him to their present shape, but, that in due time they will be restored to their humanity.—They allege that the beavers have the power of speech, and that they have heard them talk with each other, and seen them sitting in council on an offending member The lovers of natural history are already well acquainted with the surpassing sagacity of these wonderful animals, with their dexterity of cutting down trees, skill in constructing their houses, and their foresight in collecting and storing provisions sufficient to last them during the winter months; but few are aware, I should imagine, of a remarkable custom among them, which more than any other, confirms the Indians in believing them a fallen race. Towards the latter end of autumn, a certain number, varying from twenty to thirty, assemble for the purpose of building their winter habitations. They immediately commence cutting down trees, and nothing can be more wonderful than the skill and patience which they manifest in this labor. It is curious to see them looking up watching the leaning of the tree when its cracking announces its approaching fall, to observe them scampering off in all directions to avoid being crushed.—When the tree is prostrate, they quickly strip it of its branches; after which with dental chisels, they divide the trunk into several pieces of equal lengths, which they roll to the rivulet across which they intend to erect their house. Two or three old ones generally superintend the others, and it is no unusual sight to see them beating those who exhibit any symptoms of laziness; should, however, any fellow be incorrigible, and persist in refusing to work, he is driven unanimously by the whole tribe to seek shelter and provisions elsewhere. These outlaws are, therefore, obliged to pass a miserable winter, half-starved, in a burrow on the banks of some stream, where they are easily trapped.—The Indians call them "lazy beaver," and their fur is not half so valuable as that of the other animals; industry and precoyance secure them provisions and a comfortable shelter during the severity of the winter.

ADVICE.—Be honest and continue poor, young man, while others around you grow rich by fraud and disloyalty; be without place or power, while others beg their way upward; bear the pain of disappointed hopes, while others gain the accomplishment of theirs by flattery; forego the gracious pressure of the hand, for which others cringe and crawl. Wrap yourself in your own virtue, and seek a friend, and your daily bread. If you have, in such a course grown gray with unblenched honor, bless God and die.—Heinzelmann.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

"CHILDREN SHOULD NOT ASK QUESTIONS."

Lucy was sitting with her mother by a cheerful fire one morning, when a hard rain kept her from school The mother was silently employed with her sewing, while the sprightly little girl, about eight or nine years old, was amusing herself with looking over some pamphlets and periodicals, which lay among the books on the table.

'Ma,' said Lucy, at length, 'I have been looking through these names in the Missionary Herald, and Bible and Tracts reports, which uncle B. lends you and Pa to read, and I cant't find Pa's name any where in the account of the money that is given, why don't he put his name down, uncle B. does, and Mr. R. and Mr. G., and so many gentleman?'

'I suppose my dear,' said the mother, as the little girl continued turning over the leaves of the pamphlets, 'your Pa doesn't wish to have his name published to the world with the amount of his charities.'

'Well ma, then why don't he put something into the plate when we have collections taken up for the missionaries, and the different societies which our minister recommends? The plate comes to our pew with bills and half dollars, and two shilling pieces in it, and I never see Pa put any thing in.'

'Your father, Lucy, can't afford to be giving continually to so many different objects.'

The thoughtful and intelligent little girl looked up again from her books, and cast a glance around upon the splendid furniture which adorned the parlor. She could not understand this reason, and thought, no doubt, 'my father might at least afford to give to some of them.'—She was silent for a time, but again asked, 'Ma, why don't you go to some of the societies where the ladies meet and sew? or why could'nt you make some pretty articles for the fair, such as aunt B. makes.'

'I hav'nt time to attend to the societies, or to make such articles,' said her mother, without raising her eyes from the elegantly wrought collar, around which she was placing a costly lace.

Lucy was again silent, and laying down her book looked intently in the fire. By and by she asked, 'Ma, how long have you and Pa belonged to the church?'

'Lucy,' said her mother, pleasantly, 'little girls should not ask so many questions.

'Well,' said Lucy, 'I do wish to know whether Pa gives any money to the societies, for ever since I heard Mr. ———'s text last Sunday, 'the silver and gold are the Lord's,' I have been afraid Pa keeps too much of it!'

SCHOOL BOOKS.
Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the hackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

AN INQUIRY, &c.

tatement of the Doctrine of an Unoriginated, finite and Eternal Prescience, as it is curtly and implicitly received by a very large portion of the Christian World.

NO. VII.

DOCTRINE OF A CERTAIN AND ETERNAL PRESCIENCE, IN RELATION TO ALL MORAL ACTIONS AND THE FINAL ISSUE OF HUMAN LIFE, NOT CONSISTENT WITH THE MORAL AGENCY OF GOD, AND NOT COMPATIBLE WITH HIS ETERNAL EXISTENCE, AND NOT TO BE RECONCILED WITH THE RIGHTEOUS GOVERNMENT OF THE WORLD.

the popular notion of an infinite and eterprescience be true, there is no kind of moral cy in existence, either created or uncreated, an or Divine. The doctrine of eternal prence, annihilates in theory the moral agency od, with the moral freedom of the human d. For if every thing in the purposes and actions of God, and every thing in the voliand the conduct of men; if every thing h is at present contained in the whole emof created and uncreated existence; and if y thing, which may ever hereafter, possess kind of existence, either positive or relative, ven now, in reality, and in truth, the object n eternal and infallible prescience, then it t of necessity follow, that all moral agency, ther human of Divine, is nothing more than ature of the human fancy.

every future occurrence, as well in the con- of God, as in the actions of men, be the ob- of a certain and infallible anticipation, then t the infinite Jehovah be as destitute of morreedom as a mechanical automaton, or as an n of unconscious and inanimate matter.—ery future event be infallibly anticipated, the actual occurrence of every future issue t be equally infallible; for although the antition would not create the issue, yet it must ecessity imply both the certainty and the inbility of the issue; and the infallibility of issue, would be as absolutely inseparable from infallibility of the anticipation, as from the llibility of the causation by which the issue secured.

he modesty of the advocates of an eternal prence, in disclaiming for their beloved doctrine causative power, and fatal necessitation, is an imperfect copy of the worthy example of lord god the Pope; who, in the plentitude of infinite condescension, has made himself the y successor of an illiterate fisherman, the prosed devotee of all the christian churches, and taken to himself the obsequious and grovelling of the servant of servants. Would not old kliff's obsolete rendering of the apostolic tibe the most appropriate epithet by which er the Pope of Rome, or the doctrine of an nal prescience could possibly be designated? nave of the Lord Jesus Christ!

ut, to return to the question of eternal prence, as it may be found to bear upon the morgovernment of the world. The advocates of doctrine of the certain and final perseverance he Saints, have most ingeniously argued that would imply a severe reproach on the Divine rnment, to suppose, that God would ever be ated to bestow the blessing of His grace upon person, whom He foreknew would be certainnfaithful in the use of it, and would, in the e, be eternally miserable. This argument is, doubt, perfectly tenable, and such as no man fairly and fully refute. For to suppose that would bestow the blessings of His grace upon man, under a certain prescience, that it ld not ultimately secure his salvation, but ld infallibly serve to augment his guilt, and ggravate his eternal misery, would be in ef, to renounce every principle of wisdom, and lness, and mercy, in the government of the d. But now, let us fairly try the effect of solid and irrefragable argument, on the doce of an eternal prescience, and we shall pros e that hideous monster at a single blow.—l here let me only ask my reader, whether the ator of the world, the eternal Parent of the an race, would not employ as much integrity ur creation in our redemption, and whether would not have as much regard to utility and iency, and to the ultimate happiness of His tures, in the one as He would in the other?—le would not convert any man in vain, would create any man in vain? If He would not ow the blesssng of His grace upon any man er a certain prescience of final misery, would He bestow the boon of existence, under a certain prescience of His eternal misery? If He would not bestow inefficient grace, would He bestow a useless and miserable existence?

If the doctrine of eternal prescience be true, then, in relation to all that will be eternally miserable, the real evil of the case would lie in their being created under a certain prescience of their eternal destiny and not in any subsequent occurrence; for no subsequent occurrence, whether of conversion or of non-conversion, whether of penitence or impenitence, could possibly alter their certain and eternal destiny. No man can reconcile it with the goodness or with the justice of God, that He should bring any creature into existence, under the certain prospect of misery, and especially of eternal misery. Of such a being, it can never be said that "He is good to all, and His tender mercies are over all His works."

The doctrine of prescience, in relation to the finally impenitent, is as utterly incompatible with every notion of righteousness, in the great Author of our being, as the most unconditional and eternal reprobation can be. But even, if it were to be conceded that a righteous and benevolent creator, upon the certain prescience of final and eternal ruin, in any creature, that He was about to bring into existence, would rather forbear the act of creation, than bestow existence under such a certain prospect of misery; yet such a supposition would evidently involve a palpable contradiction, a forbearance that would be absolutely impossible The creation of such a being would be as eternally infallible as his distruction could be, and all contingency would be as totally inapplicable to the one, as it would be to the other.

An event that is the object of a certain and infallible prescience, must be absolutely and eternally incapable of failure in its anticipated issue, neither can it be in the power of an omnipotent being, to defeat or prevent its ultimate occurrence, or to effect any kind of commentation in its final result. If, therefore, the doctrine of an eternal prescience be true, there is an end of all moral freedom in the agency of God, as well as of all moral freedom in the human mind; and there can be in reality no moral agency in existence, either in the Deity, or in any of His creatures.

The doctrine of an eternal prescience is not only inconsistent with the moral agency of God, but is equally incompatible with the efficient exercise of every Divine perfection. Admit a certain and infallible anticipation of the final issue of human life, and then tell me, what it is possible for any or for all of his natural and moral perfected to do in altering or defeating, the anticipated result. Could even an eternal prescience itself, inform the Deity how He might alter the anticipated issue? Could infinite wisdom devise any successful expedient? Could infinite power do any thing towards altering an issue that is certainly and infallibly anticipated? Justice might poise her scales, and brandish her flaming sword, but she would not be able to strike one successful blow. Mercy might yearn with piety, and burst into tears, but she would not be able to put forth a single hand to save. The wailings of Divine compassion would be as unavailing as the hysterical shrieks of the frantic mother, on seeing her innocent and helpless babe, committed to devouring flames, or precipated to the bottom of the deep.

On the assumption of an eternal and infallible prescience, the moral government of the world would be only a wanton delusion on popular credulity, a tissue of endless contradiction and absurdity, a frightful monster of the human fancy. On the assumption of such an hypothesis, all the prerogatives of government would be completely annihilated:—the hideous chimera of prescience, usurps the throne of the Almighty and dashes His crown to the ground. But the doctrine of eternal prescience, not only robs the Deity of the prerogatives of His government, but it destroyes, in the theory, His perfections and His being.

No man would be able to reconcile the idea of eternal prescience with that of eternal existence; because they mutually exclude and destroy each other. If the whole of eternity be at this very moment before the broad and blazing eye of this infinite and immutable prescience, then it must not only be prescient of the last act and the last volition, but it must be equally precient of the first act and the first volition of the Deity; because the whole of every thing, must of necessity, comprehend all its parts. Now let the advocates of this equivocal doctrine, only make their election out of the following alternatives: Does that eternal prescience, for which they so earnestly contend, take cognizance of the first act and the first volition, and of the last act and the final volition of the eternal Jehovah? If the prescience for which they contend does include the whole of the Divine conduct from everlasting to everlasting, then it must of necessity apply to all its parts, nor is it possible for any single act or volition to escape its unbounded cognizance; it must be as prescient of the first, and as prescient of the last, as it is scient of any intermediate occurrence. Either the prescience for which they contend does apply to the last act, and to the first act of the Deity, or it does not. Now make your election: for if it does apply to the first act and to the last act of the Deity, then there is an end to eternity, but if it does not include the first and the final act of the Deity, then there is an everlasting quietus to the doctrine of eternal prescience.

Eternal prescience and eternal existence, can never be reconciled to each other. Every rational man, who will maintain the doctrine of an originated and eternal existence in the Deity, must abandon the notion of an eternal prescience to the perversion of ignorance, and the voracious credulity of Pagan superstition, from whence it sprung. Every consistent and ultra believer in the doctrine of prescience may push forward his speculation to absolute Atheism; and if the abettors of this theory do not speculate themselves into an utter disbelief of a Deity, it is because their moral intuitions, and their christian principles happily serve as an antidote to the infidelity of their creed.

It would be exceedingly unjust to impute to the persons who maintain the doctrine of an eternal prescience, all the consequences that might be legitimately inferred from those premises; but it is perfectly fair, in argument, to deduce all the consequences, however revolting, that may be possibly deduced, from any premises, the falsity of which we are endeavoring to expose. The very singular opinion, that God may possibly know the final issue of human life, but may not choose to make Himself acquainted with so revolting an issue as that of the eternal destruction of a human being, is, in my view of the case, quite as fertile of mental incongruities, contradictions, and absurdities, as the notion of an actual and certain prescience, or even that of an absolute predestination, and it is, if possible, far more revolting to every sense of moral justice in the government of the world. That the acquisition of knowledge in human beings may be voluntary, is beyond all dispute; but then it must be equally evident that all knowledge in the Deity, must be involuntary in its acquirements. It is not possible for God to be ignorant of any thing that is knowable because it is no more possible for the Deity, to be unacquainted with any thing, that is accessible to His infinite mind, than it is for Him to lay aside the possession of His eternity, or His infinite, or any of His natural or moral perfections. And in relation to the moral argument of the case; if the Deity could foresee, with certainty, the final issue of human life, and upon discovering that any creature, if created, would be certainly and eternally miserable, and had the power of preventing such an issue by withholding the gift of actual existence, and yet He could find no inducement, either to cast His nativity, or interpose between him and a certain and inevitable destruction; what could we think of the moral principles, and moral sympathies of such a dormant and inexorable Deity? Can any thing be found in the pages of heathen mythology, that would be half so hateful, as such an unfeeling, unmoveable, wreckless and inexorable being.

A Deity, that could be insensible to the miseries of His creatures, and too indolent to make Himself acquainted with their real condition, can never be identified with that benevolent being, whose active goodness extends to all, and whose tender mercies are over all His works —a benevolent creator, could never acquit himself of the blood of any creature, whose eternal misery He had it in His power to prevent, or of the misery of any being, whom He should create under a certain prescience of everlasting destruction.—Every groan of such a miserable creature, must be, in the conscience of his guilty creator, a worm that would never die, and a fire that would never be quenched.

The doctrine of eternal prescience, would, as far as theory is concerned, render the eternal Jehovah infinitely more guilty, than either fallen Adam, or apostate Satan; and would mingle the creator and His creatures together in one common and eternal hell. The advocates of the doctrine of prescience, have attempted to turn this argument back upon ourselves, by insinuating, that we believe the Almighty has created beings who are eternally misereable, and that we believe it is certain that many beings whom He has created will be certainly and eternally lost. We do indeed believe that the Almighty created the devil and his angels, and they will be certainly miserable: but we do not believe that He created them under a certain prescience of their eternal misery. And how will they make it appear, that God created either men or angels under such a prescience? Or that any human beings will be certainly and eternally lost? For if the salvation of every human being, who is now in a state of gracious probation, can be a matter of absolute certainty, an absolute certainty cannot be predicated of an opposite possibility. If the possibility of salvation may be predicated of every child of Adam who is now under probation, then the certainty of eternal destruction may not be truly predicated of any single individual of our species.

It has been argued that our Lord has said "wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in there at." But it does not follow from these words, that any human being will be certainly and eternally lost. Are not the facts recorded in the foregoing scripture, as plain as any thing can possibly be rendered? And are they not matter of public notoriety every day? Can any person observe the course of the present wondering without perceiving with his own eyes, that the gate is wide which leadeth to destruction; and that many, alas—very many persons, are actually going in there at. This monitory portion of holy writ, does indeed describe the actual condition, and habitual practice of mankind, and does formally predict the certain issue of such a course, but it has no more to do with the doctrine of an eternal prescience, than it has with the heathen doctrine of metempsychosis.

There is a great deal of empirical divinity afloat on the wide ocean of theological literature, shoals of illegitimate conceptions, the mere spawn of ignorance and superstition, or the in cestuous productions of latent insanity and religious veneration. Many thing have been foisted upon the religious world, as motives to inforce an implicit submission to the disposals of providence, the incongruities of which are not even suspected, because they have been associated with some devout feeling; but of their truth were only for once to be questioned, their fallacy would very quickly appear. As for instance, upon the loss of children, or the premature death of relatives and religious friends, their survivors have been consoled by suggesting that it is possible if they had been spared longer in the world, they might not have been so well prepared for death, or might have turned out to be wicked characters, and therefore the Deity on foreseeing such an issue may have removed them in mercy to His heavenly kingdom, and that He has thereby taken them away from the evils to come. But it ought to be remembered, that the evils to come, of which the prophet speaks are not the crimes which the Deity foresaw the righteous would commit, but the persecutions that awaited them at the hands of the wicked. Indeed such a system of government as the foregoing hypothesis implies, would entirely defeat the purpose of a moral probation which must be that of ascertaining who are proper subjects for heaven, because it would imply that such persons, if they had had a more ample and adequate trial, would have turned out to be utterly unfit for the abodes of eternal felicity and glory. Probation, in such a case, would be so far from effecting any complete testation of character, that it would be nothing more than a mere politic manœuvre, which would entirely defeat all the purposes of justice and righteousness, in the probation of human beings.

The advocates of eternal prescience, apart from eternal predestination, are obliged to have recourse to the same arguments, in defence of the doctrine of prescience, as their predestinarian brethren are accustomed to employ, in defending the doctrine of predestination; and it is as notorious as it is amusing, to observe, with what instinctive facility they will fall back into the deep and dark intrenchments of religious mystery, where they are equally impregnable to the sappings of their own reflections, and the artillery of opposing argument. No man ever professes to receive the doctrine of eternal prescience any more than that of eternal predestination, as a matter of entire comprehension, or of rational conviction; every believer of that doctrine will acknowledge apparent incongruities and contradictions; but then he presumes that those contradictions are only apparent, and not real; he will acknowledge that to his unaided comprehension the doctrine appears as a solecism—but then he presumes at the same time, that the whole is intelligible and perfectly coherent to the infinite mind of God. He therefore regards it as a duty to believe the doctrine, not because the evidence of its truth is adequate to produce any rational conviction, but because he esteems it as being mandatory on his conscience, as though christian faith required the entire prostration of his intellect, as the only adequate test of christian obedience. But where, I ask, is such a portraiture of christian faith to be found in the Bible? I know that many devout and well-meaning christians have quoted the following scripture as implying the duty of an entire prostration of all our rational faculties, in the act of receiving the gospel, and especially in that reception of christianity which is availing for the salvation of the soul. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool that he may be wise. 1 Cor. iii. 18. But no person can seriously believe that the object of converting its disciples into real fools; the apostle might indeed have been such in the esteem of the world, and might have been represented as such by those false teachers with whom he had to contend: and those christians who were faithful to this apostolic admonition, would no doubt, become fools in the esteem of such persons, but they would in reality and in truth, and in the sight of God, become wise thereby. Christian faith is never, in any single scripture, represented as being at real variance with wisdom, nor is it even possible to produce any single example of the kind. Revelation enlarges the sphere of human reason, and extends the limits of rational conviction—but it never proposes any premises, the possibility of which does not, at the same time, render obvious to the human mind. It is, indeed, a wearisome employment to pursue the vermine of error through all the doubling and sinuous intricacies of theological sophistry and logical evasions. Nothing but an ardent love of truth, a fearless interpidity of spirit, and a vigorous feeling of christian charity can urge forward the labor of investigation, and keep the pen alive and active. The progress of rational conviction will of consequence be slow; a superstitious reverence of ancient things, however erroneous, an unwillingness to light the torch of intellect at an opposing fire;—education, and habit, and a thousand other hindrances, stand in the way where error forms the prominent feature of any religious system, few of its advocates will ever be brought to a full conviction of its fallacity, and an open renunciation of the system. The gangrene of error and superstition may be checked and arrested, but few of the corroded parts will ever be restored to perfect soundness; they must be either lopped off from the trunk, or only left to wither away; but new shoots will put forth their foliage, and spread themselves out into all their amplitude of growth, and they will shake the abundance of their fruit on the ground beneath. The copious showers of knowledge and righteousness are now descending from the skies: the river of religious truth begins to swell and quicken its lazy course; ignorance and error, and superstitions of every description which have been sleeping upon its stagnant surface for ages, may refuse to float with the stream; and may cling to every trembling osier, and to every tangled root of forms, and systems, and usages, and establishments; but the tide of knowledge will roll on, and carry the waters of life to every nation, and kindred and tongue, and people. Superstition and implicit credence have laid as heavy burthens upon the christian world as ever the traditions of the elders laid upon the Jewish people And the language of the gospel, to the one as well as the other, is come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

To me it is more than evident, that if the leaven of fatalism be not entirely purged from the christian creed, it will never cease to pursue its secret and insiduous fermentation until it have leavened the whole lump. If christianity do not disown fatalism, fatalism will exterminate christianity. The creed of a christian ought to be swept and purged from every particle of fatalism, as a man would cleanse and fumigate a house after the plague. For in sober reason, there is no more affinity between christianity and fatalism in any of its forms, whether of necessity or certainty, or prescience, than there is between light and darkness, or between error and truth.

For the Western Recorder.

———By health the peasant's toil
Is well repaid. * * * *
Rome's unconquered legions urged their way,
Unhurt, through every toil in every clime.
———By soil the placid nerves
Grow firm, and gain a more compacted tone.

Labor—exercise and industry are required of us all, and without a compliance with this requirement we fail in discharging the parental duty we owe to our families—in the duty we owe to society—to the State by whose laws we are protected, and to the Creator, whose imperious requirement of industry at our hands cannot be disregarded with impunity.

In the purer ages of Rome labor was greatly respected, and industry was regarded as a great and cardinal virtue. Then it was that the voice of the Roman Republic called Cincinnatus from the plough to the throne. Then it was that Theodosius was elevated from the useful and honorable labors of his farm to the throne of the Eastern Empire. Then it was that the great Fabricus and Camillas were familiar with the implements of husbandry; and then it was that a candidate for the Edileship in Rome was indignatly rejected because of a contemptuous allusion to labor. This was Rome in the days of her triumph—her prosperity and glory.

But what was declining Rome? National industry was discouraged or permitted to decline; corrupt rulers reigned—the soldiery—the murderous Pratorian guards disannulled the wholesome laws of the Roman Senate—and the sequel of her history prevents us with the story of a tottering government, a declining Republic and fallen Empire. Slothfulness and indolence enervated the vigor of the Romans and led to that physical and mental imbecility by reason of which they fell an easy prey to their barbarous invaders.—The Goths became masters of the city of Rome in the fifth century, when indolence had destroyed their energies. In the days of Roman industry they were unconquerable—the 'eternal city' was unconquered.

National industry is incontestible evidence of national prosperity, and without it there cannot long be any national prosperity and greatness.

The Fathers of our Republic were laborers, and gave encouragement to industry. Franklin, Rittenhouse, Sherman and others were mechanics. Washington, Morgan, Marion, Madison, Jefferson, Carroll, Henry and other venerated patriarchs that assisted in the establishment of our government were men of exemplary industry. In that aspect it is the duty of every American citizen to follow their example, and health, wealth and happiness will be the result.

If we would long maintain our national charter and independence, in the great family of nations, we must encourage national industry. Then will the energy and vigor consequent upon our industry be found invincible by the nations of the earth. Then will we continue to present for the admiration of the world, the example of a republican government and a refutation of the doctrine of monarchs and despots, of the incapacity of the people for self government. And then will we have discharged at least one of the great duties incumbent upon us as citizens, as patriots, as christians.

The founder of Christianity—the Apostles—and the fathers in the early ages of the christian church zealously enjoined the duty of industry. The command is imperative, 'six days shalt thou labor,' and it is enforced by the annunciation that the world we inhabit is the production of six days labor of the Creator. The Bible abounds with exhortations to industry—admonishes us to diligence in business and denounces us as worse than infidels, if we fail (through indolence) to provide for our household.

'Love labor' (wisely said a philospher) 'if you do not want it for food you may for physic. Industry keeps body and mind in constant health but idleness leads to oscitation, crime and unhappiness—it corrupts, dements and debases the mind—but industry leads to health, competence, respectability, comfort and happiness.

THEODOSIUS.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE

ST. CLAIRSVILLE, JULY 13, 1841.

Br. Springer: Some few hours ago we closed a most precious meeting, which commenced on Saturday, 11th inst. It was held in the barn of Elisha Lucas a ½ or ¾ of a mile south of Centreville.—Truly the power of the Lord was abundently manifest in this meeting, and not before it was both desired and greatly needed. Not far from this place stands the Mercer meeting house, at which, in times past, the Methodist Protestant Church had a large and flourishing class, but the larger part of them removing to the west, and the remainder not being "valiant for the truth in the earth," lopped off and so this house has not a worshipper to meet in it now. This had a very discouraging influence on the little class in the Lucas neighborhood, where, since I came on this circuit, until a few months past we have hardly had a name to live. Some omens of good, and the buddings of a revival, which cheered us very much, excited us to appoint the meeting we have just closed. And truly we do not regret it. Some found the precious power of pardoning mercy and rejoiced, happy in a Saviour's love. 14 were added to the church, of such, we hope, as she will not be dishonored. The throng season of harvest forbade us to continue, while the fairest prospect of a more glorious revival of God's work was evident. May the Lord carry it on to a glorious extent.

Yours, in haste,

GEORGE CLANCY.

TYLER CT., VA., JUNE 16, 1841.

Mr. Editor: Our third quarterly meeting was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Three united with the church, which makes some fifty this year. We have peace among ourselves and with other orders of christians. We should be glad to see Br. Ragan here, and to have his assistance at our fourth quarterly meeting, which will be held on the 7th and 8th of August next, nine miles above Middlebourn. on Middle Island creek. We also invite Brs. Simonton and Clawson. Yours, in Christ,

WM. G. WILLIAMS.

JACKSONBURGH, O., JULY 6, 1841.

Mr. Editor: We have had, blessed be God, some very good seasons this conference year, on Twinn circuit. Our accessions have been somewhere between thirty and forty We are at peace with each other, with but one or two exceptions, and are much encouraged to perseverance. Pray for us that we may grow, both in grace and in numbers.

Yours, &c. R. M. DALBEY.

LAFAYETTE, CT., IA., JUNE 3, 1841.

Br. Springer: I embrace this opportunity through your paper to inform our friends, in general, that God is reviving His work here. I took charge of this circuit last January, which had but five appointments. I now preach about fifteen or twenty times every round. We have had some accessions to the church. Our third quarterly meeting closed on the seventh of June. It was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. All is peace and harmony on this circuit. We have a protracted meeting commencing on the 23d of July, three miles south of Newton, in Fountain county. We invite our brethren in the ministry to attend.

Yours, &c. WM. BLEDSOE, sup.

CHESS, PA, JULY 6, 1841.

Br. Springer: After a long silence on my part, I let you know that we are still gaining ground a little. Our second quarterly meeting was a good one. I see in the 'Recorder' Br. Ragan's appointment for Clearfield circuit is August 1st, I would inform him that the appointment is at Mt. Zion meeting house commencing on July 30th. Br. Tipton is respectfully requested to attend, and any other of the brethren that can. Now, Br. Springer, about those pine logs which were to be converted into money. It has been a hard case this spring; a cubic foot would only make 3 red coppers. This makes money scarce here.

WM. M. M'CULLOUGH.

DESPOTISM OF FASHION.

God has made all the luxuries of life to be perishable; while the necessaries are more permanent. He knew that men would set their hearts on having beautiful coverings for the body, and, if in their power, multitudes would expend their lives and property in accumulating a rich wardrobe, to be handed down to posterity. He therefore created the little moth, and bade him go and stand at the door of the wardrobe, and consume what would else become a heavy curse upon man. This method of gratifying the heart has, therefore, been cut off—and the vainest man living has no desire to have it engraved upon his tomb-stone, that he left so many garments to his heirs.

But pride and vanity could not be driven away from superintending the dress, by the moth; and, instead of seeing how long they can keep a garment, the problem now is, to see how short a time it can remain, before it shall be too unfashionable to be seen. But as vanity never had a popular name, she stands behind the curtain, and her voice is denominated fashion, and this becomes as real a deity as was ever dreaded and worshipped.—Her laws seem wholly capricious, but he would be called a despot indeed, who could hope to be obeyed half as implicitly.

The home, the temple, and the altar of fashion, is the great city. There she is sure to have votaries that are numerous; there are her richest offering--there her priests and priestesses are warming over her shrine, and inspired and maddened by her breath. If opposition is made, Argument wields his club in vain; Reason raises his sober manly voice in vain; Ridicule throws his arrows in vain; Satire snaps his lash in vain; for Fashion, when these are panting with their efforts to dethrone her, has but to raise her finger, and the crowd rush to do their bidding.

Multitudes live only to watch her nod; and the greatest fear which heaven, earth or hell can cause, is the fear it should be supposed that they could be guilty of violating a single rule, or neglecting a single whisper of Fashion. Among all the tyrants that ever afflicted the human race, there never was one whose commands were so imperious—whose sceptre of iron was so heavy, whose frown was so awful, or whose look was so withering. I dare not call hard names, nor do I wish on this occasion to make war upon her, for he must be a hardy man indeed who would deliberately cross swords with her, even if he might stand in the pulpit to strike. But I say there is one arm that is stronger than Fashion. The gospel of Christ dares sometimes neglect, and even resist her commands. While thousands and thousands in the city are waiting around her shrine to see what she will next demand, and while ten times that number, in all the extended country, are waiting to follow in the train, and while nothing is so expensive, nothing so uncomfortable, nothing so hard to breathe in, as to cause a moment's hesitation about its adoption—the fear of God can deliver all these slaves from their cruel bondage.

Suppose now that for one year, the Spirit of God should be poured out on the capital of France, and should fully baptize that multitude with the Spirit of Jesus Christ. What would be the results? The fashions of the whole earth would be altered, reduced as to expense, and every way simplified. No arithmetic can tell the amount of money saved in a single year. One hundred millions a year would be a small calculation for what would be saved in this country alone.

It is almost incredible how much may, and does, depend upon the decision of one of the high priests of fashion there, when that decision is to determine whether half a yard of cloth, more or less, shall go into a garment, or whether the needle shall put another sprig into its curious productions. Millions of money depend upon every such decision.

But the time will come, when Holiness unto the Lord shall be written upon the bells of the horses, i. e., when all fashions shall be under the control of the religion of the Bible; and just so far as this religion does come into the great city, and take hold of the human heart, in that proportion is the soul delivered from the thraldom of fashion.

We speak not merely of the expense to which fashion puts individuals and families, but we speak of the time it takes to chase her shadows—we speak of the intellect that is frozen and benumbed, of the affections that are absorbed, and which she remorselessly consumes—we speak of that awful spell upon society by which home is made a strange place, and indeed nothing but a dressing place—which takes the mother's heart away, and puts the heart of the ostrich in its place—which can make God's image the cold temple of folly—which can make God's Bible, and God's Sabbath, the food for contempt and mockery and which can shut the soul away from the appeals that come from the grave, and can substitute the mummeries of fashion even for the real want of sorrow over departed friends, and which can bar the soul from the calls of mercy, inviting her to heaven.

If there be yet one mercy to be received from the Bible, pertaining to this life, greater than all others yet bestowed, it will be given on that day, when the gospel of Jesus Christ shall go into the great city, and make Fashion leave her throne, and come and sit at the feet of Jesus. Then will men be free indeed, and then will the narrow pathway to the skies be crowded with pilgrims.—Rev. J. Todd.

From the Saturday Courier.

Extraordinary Imposition of the "Latter Day Saints"—Mormonism—Matter for the consideration of every good citizen —Important Facts—All should feel that they have a direct interest in them

The miserable delusion still exists. Its promulgator finds it an easy mode of swindling, and so long as there are fools to be fleeced, there will always be knaves to perform the operation. Of this knavish propensity, there are some evidence which would be highly amusing, if they were not of so impious a character. Smith's aim was to establish, in the outset, some sort of claim to inspiration, in order to enable himself and such ringleaders as might possess sufficient cunning to become his associates, to succeed in a regularly organized system of plunder.—This he accomplished by an artfully devised fable, in which, as our readers are aware, he pretends to have become the depository of certain gold plates, found in some secluded spot, and upon which were engraved the portions of divine revelation which he was commissioned to promulgate. This is the ground work of the imposition. The boldness of the trick took, in spite of its blasphemous nature, with two sorts of persons: the cunning sharper on the one part, who seized the temptation of enriching himself on the promised spoils, caring nothing for the grossness of the fraud, if it but fill his pocket; and on the other, the unsuspecting, weak-minded and credulous dupes, whose love of the marvellous renders him always an easy prey.

Under pretence of raising money for building a temple, and for other pious purposes, gangs of itinerant vagabonds were sent prowling over the country to beg alms and to steal. Wherever opportunity offers, they have not hesitated to rob, plunder and steal, mostly under some sanctimonious pretence—though we have ourselves not the slightest doubt whatever, that most, if not the ringleaders, steal upon every occasion that offers with as much recklessness as would any convict in our state prisons. We state unequivocally our firm belief that this is their true character, because none other than precisely such men would ever be willing to unite in a piece af villainy like Mormonism, of the fraudulent character of which they must be perfectly satisfied, and because we have the sanction of Joe Smith himself, the head of the gang, who having quarrelled with some of his followers about dividing the spoils, finally published a portion of his band as villains of the blackest stamp. Two of these, Cowdery and Whitmer, aided in the outset to establish Smith's deception, by perjuring themselves to the truth of the book of Mormon, testifying that they had seen the plates, and heard God's voice declare that they had been translated by His power!!! These very same perjured witnesses to such a piece of blasphemy, Joe Smith publishes as "guilty of perjury, counterfeiting, gambling, lying, stealing, and crimes of the blackest dye." This is the character given them by their leader himself, and no one doubts for a moment that these vagabonds, so justly denounced might turn round, and with the same truth apply the same description of character to Smith himself, and not only to Smith, but to the most of the leaders.

It is not surprising, therefore, that such characters, acting under the garb of religion, should succeed in swindling the community out of money. In the language of a gentleman of Ohio, who was on the spot, and an eye-witness of the scenes which he so truly describes:—

He writes in his letter that "they scoured the branches in the east for money to enable them to build, and the people gave freely, as they supposed for that purpose, for they supposed they were to be one in the church of Christ, for so Smith had told them by his revelation, and that they must consecrate all for the poor in Zion, & thus many did give until they finished the temple, and in the meantime the building committee built each of them a house, Sidney Rigdon and Joseph Smith, Jr. By this time the leaders of the church, Smith, Rigdon, Carter and Caboon, &c., I may say all the heads of the church, got lifted up in pride, and they imagined that God was about to make them rich, and that they were to suck the milk of the Gentiles, as they call those who do not belong to the church, or do not go hand and hand with them, and then they would make the whole church rich. They have a great desire for riches, and to obtain them without earning them; and about this time they said that God had told them. Sidney and Joseph, that they had suffered enough and that they should be rich; and they informed me that God told them to buy goods, and so they did, as they said, to some thirty thousand dollars on a credit of six months, at Cleveland and Buffalo. In the spring of 1836, this firm was, I believe, Smith, Rigdon & Co., (it included the heads of the church.) In the fall, they formed other companies of their brethren and sent to New York as agents for them, Hiram Smith and O. Cowdery, (they being the company,) and they purchased some sixty or seventy thousand dollars worth, all for the church, and most of them not worth a penny, and no financiers. At this time the first debt became due, but they had nothing to pay it with, for they had sold to their poor brethren, who were strutting about the streets in the finest of broadcloth, imagining themselves rich, but could pay nothing, and poverty is the mother of invention. They then fixed upon a plan to pay the debt—that was, to have a bank of their own, as none of the then existing banks would loan to them what they wanted, and the most refused them entirely; so they sent to Philadelphia and got the plates made for the Safety Society Bank, and got a large quantity of bills ready for filling and signing, and in the meantime, Smith and others collected what specie they could. The paper came about the first of January, 1837, which they immediately began to issue, and to no small amount: but their creditors refused to take it. Then Smith invented another plan—that was to exchange their notes for other notes that would pay their debts, and for that purpose he sent the Elders out with it to exchange, and not only the elders, but gave them one half to exchange it, as I am informed by those that peddled for him—and thus Smith was instrumental in sending the worthless stuff abroad, and it soon come in again, and as I may say, there was nothing to redeem it with, as Smith had used the greater part of their precious metals; and the inhabitants holding their bills came to inquire into the Safety Society precious metals, and the way that Smith contrived to deceive them was this: he had some one or two hundred boxes made, and gathered all the lead and shot that the village had, of that part of it that he controlled, and filled the boxes with lead, shot, &c., and marked them one thousand dollars each—then, when they went to examine the vault he had one box on a table partly filled for them to see, and when they proceeded to the vault, Smith told them that the church had two hundred thousand dollars in specie, and he opened one box and they saw that it was silver, and they raised up a number, and Smith told them that they contained specie, and they were seemingly satisfied and went away for a few days, until the elders were packed off in every direction to pass their paper money off. Among the elders were Brigham Young who went east, with forty thousand dollars; John F. Boynton, with some twenty thousand dollars; Luke Johnson, south and east, with an unknown quantity: and thus they continued to pass and sell the worthless stuff, until they sold it at twelve and a half cents on the dollar, and so eager to put off at that, that they could not attend meeting on the Sabbath—and they signed enough at that price to buy one section of land in Illinois.

(To be concluded in our next.)

The Extra Session of Congress.—Much dissatisfaction seems to prevail at the prospect of a prolonged session of Congress. More than a month has been spent, and but little if any thing has been done. The time in the lower house appears to be devoted to empty brawling, with no regard to the amount of money which is thus senselessly fritted away. There appears to be a growing desire of long sessions, and each member appears to be willing to contribute his mite, to bring about a result so desirable. We agree with a writer in one of the daily papers, who says that whatever is desired to be done should be tested by a caucus vote of which ever party desires to forward a measure, and if it cannot be done, it should be abandoned at once, and the country would thus be saved much money, and the members much breath.

There appears, however, to be a thorough splitting up of parties, and but little union among the Administration. The plans which it seemed desirable to further have not met with the cordial and unanimous support which was expected, and without any maturity of purpose, the party leaders are driving along without much aim. Not much regard, it is true, is to be paid to rumors from Washington, but the indications are strong that there is a difference of opinion between the President and Mr. Clay, as to the kind of a National Bank which shall be established. The former is supposed to favor the project of Mr. Ewing, and the latter supports most strenuously the amendments introduced by himself. On the other hand the opposition moves in a solid column against the measure, watching and favoring every sign of disunion on the part of the friends of the National Bank.

The Congressional news will sufficiently explain the causes of discussion, and will show, that Messrs. Rives and Preston are in direct opposition to Mr. Clay, and that nothing but a compromise can enable them to carry through successfully the measures which they deem of advantage to the government and the people. We have watched the progress of the session pretty closely, and to our mind, the business for which Congress was convened, has not progresed in the least degree. There have been modifications and amendments of all kinds, but has there been any thing brought forward which a majority will sanction, and the President sustain? Do the Parties at all understand the views of each other? We think not.—Phil. Sat. Post.

Richard Caddick—Or, as he sometimes writes his name, Richard John Horatio Henry Caddick,—supposed to have come from Chelsea, near London, or from Fulham, Middlesex county, England, and to have relatives residing in one of the New England States,—is now in Ripley, Brown county, Ohio, in a state of pitiable mental derangement. He sometimes reports that he is 36 years of age; his father is dead; his mother's name Eleanora; has two brothers, one named William, and the other Brander; has two sisters, named Angelina and Matilda; and that he has been in the United States about 8 years. His friends, should any chance to see this notice, are requested to address "A. F. Knight, Ripley, Brown county, Ohio." Printers have been requested to notice.

From the Philadelphia Courier.

The Frederick County Bank Robbery—The way in which a portion of the stolen funds were recovered—An Associate Justice of a sister city was the meditating agent in the whole transaction—Singular narrative.

In our last Courier, we gave a partial account of the recovery of a portion of the funds, lately stolen from the vaults of the Frederick County Bank, of Maryland. It then appeared that Mr. William Wiley formerly a practising attorney in the city of New York, but at present an Associate Judge of one of her inferior Courts, was the individual who had previously written letters to the Board of Directors, advising that he thought it probable they could, "if the president or some person connected with the Bank" should call on him, obtain a portion of their late heavy loss. Dr. Taylor and William M. Beall were sent by the Bank. They found Wiley engaged in the discharge of his duties as Associate Justice. He asked a delay of three days, averring that those who knew something about the funds were absent at the South—and at the expiration of that time, he met the agents with a proposition that they should allow eight per centum on the issues, if the balance were give up, which they agreed to do. On the day following, he informed them that the money was then in his possession and he was prepared to fulfil the contract. A leather valise, which he brought in his hand, contained the stolen funds. The money was counted, Wiley was paid his per centum, eight thousand dollars and the agents departed for their homes.

This is certainly one of the most extraordinary cases of villainy we have ever read or heard of. An Associate Justice compromising a felony! Price $8000!—Probably all the burglars, who may hereafter enter the vaults of Banks, will first give Justice Wiley a retaining fee, to compromise their theft and save themselves from the Penitentiary!! In what other possible light can this case be looked at, than that of regarding Wiley as an accomplice of the thieves who entered the vaults of the Frederick County Bank? Is not his conduct tantamount to a participation in the felony? It seems that this is not the first time that Mr. Wiley has acted as meditator in like cases. Some few years ago, he was, says the Frederick Examiner, in the same way instrumental in the restoration of the funds stolen from the Providence Bank, to the amount of 183,000 dollars. He would, in the present instance, give no other information on the Frederick County Bank robbery, than that "the vaults were opened by false keys and that six persons were concerned!!!" The good sense of society demands explanation. Outraged laws call upon Mr. Justice Wiley to answer unto their offended majesty. The stockholders of the Frederick County Bank cannot rest satisfied under such an extraordinary compromise of rascality and scoundrelism. Let the probe be applied without fear or favor. Out with everything. Let us know who informed Mr. Justice Wiley that "the bank was entered by false keys and six persons were concerned?" As an honest man and magistrate he cannot remain quiet.

The Directors of the Frederick County Bank, we observe, state that the robbers have yet in their possession of the stolen funds, viz:

In gold eagles, half eagles and sovereigns,	$10,049
In notes and bills of other banks,	7,052
In Frederick County Bank notes,	1,542
Aggregate,	18,643

Together with about 2,500 dollars of scrip of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, which were on special deposite in the Bank at the time of the robbery, and belonged to individuals. The Bank has offered a reward of 6,000 dollars, and 20 per cent. for the residue of the stolen goods.

Field Preaching.—The Protestant clergy of Baltimore, at a late meeting, passed the following resolution:

"That, as Protestant Evangelical Ministers of this city, we deem it our duty to make strenuous efforts to promote more effectually, the cause of vital christianity in our city, by preaching the gospel in the streets, fields and market places."

In accordance with the above resolution, we notice in the Baltimore papers, notices for public meetings at twelve different places in that city on Sunday last, at 5 o'clock P. M. Two clergymen were to officiate at each place.—Evening Journal.

Another Centennarian Dead.—The Belvidere, Warren county, Apollo, of Tuesday, mentions the death of John Linn, in the 108th year of his age. He was a native of Maryland, and emigrated to New Jersey about sixty years ago. Mr. Linn was stoutly built, and tall of stature, but well proportioned; and having lived a frugal and temperate life, he escaped sickness almost to the last—his final disorder exhibiting itself in swelling of the feet, which extending upward destroyed appetite, and carried him off without pain.

Released.—The two men who were arrested in Maryland, on suspicion of having murdered Mr. Christ, at Reading, Pa., have been released. A letter from Harrisburgh, from this State, was sent to Baltimore, stating the arrest of the real murderers.

Proposed Monument.—We learn from the Lexington (Ky.) Intelligencer, that six hundred dollars have been raised among the students of Harrison College, for the purpose of erecting a monument over the grave of President Kirkland.

Common School Law.—The following law, passed at the General Assembly, appears to have been required by the peculiar situation of many fragmentary districts in this State. Township Trustees, generally, should be prompt in extending to the people, the relief afforded by this law.—Republic.

AN ACT

To amend the act "An act for the support and better regulation of Common Schools and to create permanently the office of Superintendent," passed March 7th, 1838, and an act amendatory thereto.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That in all cases, where in any township in the State, the Trustees shall have failed, for any cause, to lay off the whole territory of their respective township into school districts, according to the statute in such case, made and provided, said Trustees shall have until the first day of January next in which to do the same.

Sec. 2. And in all cases where townships have been heretofore districted according to law, and in any way or manner, either by one township taking away the territory comprising a part of the district lying between two townships, or in any other way, any part of any township shall have been thrown out of a school district, or deprived of the benefits of a school district, it shall be the duty of the Trustees of the township, in which such undistricted territory lies, on or before the first day of January next, to lay off anew, such part of the township into districts as shall be necessary to properly include such undistricted territory, and in such a manner as to prevent any part of such township from being deprived of the benefit of a school district.

Sec. 3. Whenever the Township Trustees in either of the above mentioned cases, shall have proceeded in accordance with this act, and returned a plat thereof to the County Auditor, the same shall have all the validity and legal effect given by law to other plats of school districts.

Sec. 4. That the Trustees, or a majority of them, in two or more townships, may lay off districts composed of parts of such townships where they shall deem it necessary for the accommodation of the inhabitants thereof: Provided, That no new district shall be so laid off as is by this section provided, unless a majority of the citizens residing in the contemplated district, shall have petitioned for the same; and shall have given at least thirty days' notice of such application, by posting up written notices in three of the most public places in each township, which may be effected thereby.

Another Burglary in Boston.—Attempt to rob the Globe Bank.—We learn from the Boston Daily Mail that a desperate attempt was made on Wednesday night to force the safe of the Globe Bank, No. 22 State street, in that city.—The rooms of the Bank are in the second story. The robbers entered, probably, through a window in the lower part of the building, and gained access to the safe by cutting out part of the sash of a large circular window on the stairs. The safe was secured by two iron doors, three padlocks, of a peculiar construction, imported from England expressly for this bank and four large locks, of the most approved construction. The robbers succeeded in cutting off the head bolt of the first padlock, and there stopped. Whether they were unable to open the locks or were frightened from the work does not appear. The locks were uninjured, and the door did not appear to have been opened, nor has it been discovered that any property was taken. The robbers, either in coming in or going out, passed through office No. 24, in the same building, occupied by J. W. Clark, broker and others, but no attempt was made upon the desks or safes in that place. The Globe Bank with its powerful safe, may defy the most desperate and ingenious attempts of the burglars.

A Candidate for the Presidency, "Vi et Armis."—The Washington Intelligencer states that on Saturday last a man, evidently disordered in his upper story, presented himself at the White House, and with much vehemence, both in manner and speech, put in his claim to hold the office of Chief Magistrate of the Union.—The person gave his name to the magistrate as John Henry Haupt, of Virginia. He is a German, and maintains that he is the veritable President of the United States, and will eject the present incumbent in a few days, with the aid of a numerous army, &c.,

The Gaines Case.—The suit of Caroline Barns, vs. Maria Clark Gaines, wife of General Gaines, which has occupied so much time in different Courts, and produced paragraph after paragraph in the newspapers throughout the country, has at length been decided at New Orleans, by a verdict for the defendant.

The Reformers in Canada are evidently gaining great strength. Austine Cuvillier has been elected Speaker of the House of Assembly. There must be great concessions there, or a revolution will occur. Mark that.

Destructive Hail Storm.—We learn that Cumberland and York counties, in this State, were on Monday last visited by an extraordinary storm of wind, hail, and rain. It entered Cumberland Valley at Dublin Gap, and then took a south-eastern direction, passing south of Carlisle, striking Dillsburg in York county, and proceeding onwards towards the borough of York. It was from three to five miles in width, and of a most destructive character. The hail was found in the hollows to the depth of two feet, and was still thick on the ground on Tuesday morning. Nearly all the panes of glass in the village of Dillsburg were broken. It uprooted trees, prostrated fences, and unroofed numerous barns. Its ravages were particularly serious in Dickerson and South Middleton townships, Cumberland county, where the grain on numerous farms was utterly destroyed. This was the case with the farm of Ex-Governor Ritner, and also with that occupied by his son. The greatest consternation prevailed for a time. The storm commenced about three o'clock in the afternoon, and it is feared that the aggregate loss will prove very extensive.—Phila. Chron.

More of the Hail Storm.—The Carlisle, Pa. Herald furnishes the following in relation to the hail storm, with which that section of the country was visited on Monday week. It commenced about 3 o'clock, P. M. and in less than one hour the devastation was truly appalling. Fifteen or eighteen farms are entirely destroyed—every field of grain on them ruined, the greater part of the wheat will not be worth cutting, the oats are beaten to the earth, and the corn broken off at the root; the fruit nearly all destroyed, and the woods and roads strewed with leaves and branches. Not a house escaped having the windows broken, and in some cases even the sash were driven in by the fury of the storm.—ib.

The Ship Charles.—Captain Gorham master of the ship Charles, abandoned off the Balize, has published in the Portland Advertiser a long statement, in which he denies the truth of the charges brought against him, and requests a suspension of public opinion until the whole matter undergoes a legal investigation, which he intends shortly to make. In regard to the abandonment of the ship Charles he says:—"I am confident I can convince the public of the necessity, as it then appeared, of my so doing, and the purity of my motives. I had the command of her for eighteen months, and believe I have had the entire confidence of her owners, as I have done my duty to them so far as I have been able, without regard to my own comfort or interest, and refer to them for my character and conduct, while I have been in their employ, up to this time."

Suicide—a short career.—A young girl of 17 years, who had, within the six months past, become the victim of prostitution, committed suicide at Albany, N. Y., on Friday night last, by taking opium. She had been a bright and beautiful creature, gay and intelligent, and was universally loved and admired—when the "fiend of hell" fell upon her path of innocence and virtue, and seduced her away into the depth of wickedness, shame and ruin.

Her career of disgrace was brief; she suffered all the pangs that remorse and a broken heart could inflict, and went down to the grave covered with the stain of her own folly.—New Eng. Review.

The Steam Boat Clarkesville, of this place, Capt. James Irwin, on her passage from New Orleans to this port, struck a snag in Bachelors' Bend, 125 miles above Vicksburg, on the 15th ult., and sunk immediately. The cabin and hull separated, and while the hull sunk, cabin floated off with most of the passengers and their baggage, who saved themselves. Some three or four deck passengers and one fireman are said to have been lost. The boat, we understand, was insured in the offices of this city to the amount of $20,000.—Nash. Chris. Ad.

Pittsburgh Trade with Mexico.—The Pittsburgh Intelligencer says, the trade and commerce of that city with Santa Fe, Chichuahua, and the leading towns of Mexico, are gradually increasing. Six-horse wagons are constructed in Pittsburg loaded with assorted goods from New York and Philadelphia, transported to Independence in Missouri, and there driven across the country to Mexico, where they are sold and paid for in specie or the best of funds.

An Appalling Scene.—Alluding to the arrival of a ship load of emigrants at that port, the Baltimore Clipper says—"The healthy, the sick, and the dying and the dead were intermingled; and great distress was consequently experienced. On arriving at the quarantine ground, every effort was made for the relief of the sick by the port physician, but, having no hospital in which he could place them, we believe they were removed to another vessel."

Ignorance and Vice.—A young man was convicted of manslaughter last week in our Court of Common Pleas. He is said to be one of a family of thirteen brothers and sisters, living with their mother, and all of disreputable and infamous character, not one of whom can either read or write. This, in a land of free schools, thousands of churches, and a tasteful and discriminating people!—Columbus State Journal.

Important to Firemen.—A Mr. David Brenna, of New York, has invented and exhibited, a machine, which must, if it combines the qualifications set down, prove of great benefit to the fire department in every part of the world. The machine consists of a square box or carriage body, mounted on a movable platform, a few feet below, with which it is connected by a stout frame work. Whenever a building is on fire, the machine is conveyed to it and set down before it, two or three firemen instantly get into the box, through the bottom of which one or more hose pipes are passed. By turning a crank they are immediately raised to the level of the fire, or nearest window—whether twenty, forty, or sixty feet—and torrents of water forced exactly on the flames. If lives are endangered, one side of the box is let down as a drawbridge directly to the nearest window, and the inmates of the burning building at once removed into the ark of safety.—So of valuable property. Meantime the work of extinguishing the conflagration goes forward efficiently. The cost of constructing one of the machines to reach a height of fifty feet, is estimated at two hundred dollars.

The Mormons.—A Galena paper says: "From what we hear and read, we should judge that great excitement prevailed among the other inhabitants of Hancock county and vicinity, in relation to this sect. We should exceedingly regret to see the exciting scenes of Missouri re-enacted in this State, but we consider such as not among the impossibilities. What appears to excite particular aversion or alarm, is the organization of what is called the Nauvoo Legion—who muster every few days, "all harnessed for war." Their neighbors unskilled in the mysteries of the golden plates, fear they are to be driven out, as were the Aitites, Jebusites, &c., from the land of Canaan of old, and Smith does not place as much faith in the efficacy of ram's horns, in tearing down the walls of the Gentiles, as in shooting irons and ball-catridges. Our belief has been, that the Mormon Legion has been organzed for defence, as in case of an attack in Missouri."

The Crops of Georgia.—The Milledgeville Journal of the 29th ult. says:—"Appearances, a few weeks ago, were of the gloomiest character in relation to the crops. But within a week or two, a great change has taken place. The rains had fallen latterly in every direction, throughout the whole country, & have materially improved the appearance of the corn crop which promises now to yield an abundant harvest. Cotton, too, begins to look much better. We are informed that in South-western Georgia, the crop of cotton from present appearances, will be a very large one. In middle Georgia, the farmers have not generally, a good stand, but what they have begins to look very promising. Let but the season alone continue to be good, and that kind of relief, which alone can do our people and State any real good, will be, by a kind Providence, dealt out to them."

Milk Sickness.—A late number of the Louisville Journal says: "Some weeks ago, we published the experience of a farmer in Illinois, by which it seemed established that milk sickness may be prevented by freely salting the cattle. We have since seen an acquaintance from Indiana, on whose statement implicit reliance may be placed, who informs us that his experience establishes the same fact. He had had droves of cattle grazing several seasons, in a region were milk sickness was remarkably common, without a single case of the disease, while the cattle of others were nearly all attacked. The only difference between his treatment of his neighbors, was in salting them."

Church Struck by Lightning.—The New York Courier states that during the thunder-gust at Worcester on Thursday, the Baptist church was struck by lightning, while the vestry of the church was filled with children, making arrangements for the appreaching celebration of the 4th. About twenty of the children were struck down, most of them were burned, some seriously, but as by a miracle, no one was killed. One little girl had a comb melted by the fluid, yet she escaped with trifling injury. The lightning struck in two other places, but no damage was done. A person who was present represents it as the most terrific scene he ever witnessed.

Struck by Lightning:—A house in Pembroke, Mass., on the Plymouth and Boston road, belonging to Benj. Standish, was struck by lightning on Monday night, and was entirely consumed by fire. At the time the house was struck, there were four persons within, women and children, who got up during the tempest, and went to a neighbor's house, leaving the house without an inmate.

The Punishment.—A slave convicted at Savannah, Geo., for a murderous assault, has been sentenced to receive thirty lashes each day on five different days, and to be sent out of the State. His owner giving bonds in the sum of $500, which are forfeited if he does not leave Savannah within 24 hours after receiving his last whipping.

The editor of the Chicago Democrat says: "We never cared a farthing about getting married until we attended an old bachelor's funeral. God grant that our latter end may not be like his!"

Dr. Dyott.—This aged and venerable applicant for the benefit of the Insolvent Laws, was yesterday discharged by the Judges of the Court.

THE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... JULY 21, 1841.

Our Excuse.—We have not been able for some weeks past, and will not be able for some time to come, to pay that attention to our paper which we could desire. This is principally owing to some building operations, which have became necessary for the interest of our printing establishment, and to which we have to give much personal attention. This state of things we somewhat regret under the circumstances; for there has been some extraordinary documents, recently issued from the central press of the M. E. church, that we should like to stricture for the benefit of our readers. But for want of time we have to omit it, at least for the present.

☞The obituary of Mary Browder was intended for this paper, but mislaid until too late. It shall be given in our next.

Accident.—As Mr. David McCracken was passing down the road, on the 17th inst., with his lady, in a buggy, half a mile below our office the horse ran off, and she, attempting to jump out, her arm was dislocated and she was otherwise bruised.

Death.—Mrs. George Taylor, on Licking, was buried one days last week. Her father, Mr. Tanner, a few year since deceased, was one of our oldest settlers. He was taken in early day, a prisoner from the Monongahela country, and remained many years in captivity among the Indians.

More Rioting.—James Boyle, an abolition lecturer, was recently egged and abused, while delivering a lecture at Lockland, Ohio.

Bicknell's Counterfeit Detector.—The July number of the Detector, accompanying the Reporter is received. The author will accept of our thanks for his favors. We have had frequent occasion to speak of the merit of Bicknell's publications. We now refer the reader to his proposals on our last page.

Union of Seceding Methodists.—To this subject we have formerly refered, informing our readers that propositions were abroad to effect that object. The Wesleyan Methodists at Utica, N. Y., issued a call for a convention, which was recently held, one proposition of which was to take measures to effect this union if possible. When the brethren got together, instead of uniting, they have kindled such a flame of discord as is discreditable to religion. We informed our readers a few days back, that Br. Norris had severely strictured the convention. In these he implicated Br. Plumb, editor of the Wesleyan Methodist, at Utica, who, in his reply, uses such language as the following:

"But we did not think of saying so much in respect to the article in the Olive Branch. It is as a whole a slanderous and wicked caricature of the convention, as false as it is vile, and showing a degree of malignity worthy only an enemy of Christ. We pity the man who could make such an unprovoked attack upon a branch of Methodist Reformers, himself professing to be laboring in the same cause."

Now, we shall not undertake to say whether Br. Norris has erred, or how much he has erred, in his strictures, for we have not room to give them and the reply, and we hold it wrong to pass sentence on a man without giving the facts upon which we predicate that sentence, but this we do say, let the editor of the Olive Branch have erred ever so greatly, that such language as the above, in reply to him, is not in accordance with the spirit of Christ. Brethren, soft words turn away anger but grievous words stir up wrath.—Do be calm! and shew that you are worthy of the character of Philanthropists and of Methodist Reformers.—In this excitement the editors of the New York Luminary, the Fayetteville Luminary, the Olive Branch, and the Wesleyan Methodist, all take a part.

McLeod Case.—Judge Cowan has delivered the opinion of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, in the case of McLeod, and directed that "he be remanded to Niagara and tried according to law." It will now remain to be seen what course Mr. Fox will pursue.

The opinion of the court in this case, is too lengthy for our paper; the following is the concluding paragraphs:

"When the Grand Jury have charged that a man has committed murder in this State, I can imagine no case, whether the charge relates to the time of open public war or peace, in which he can claim exemption from trial. If he show that he was in truth acting as a soldier in time of public war, the jury will acquit him. The judge will direct them to obey the law of nations, which is undoubtedly a part of the common law. So, if the accused were acting in defence against an individual invader of his country. But above all things, it is important in the latter case for the jury to inquire whether his allegation of defence be not false or colored.

They cannot allow as an act of defence, the wilful pursuing even such an enemy, though dictated by sovereign authority, into a country at peace with the sovereign of the accused, seeking out that enemy and taking his life. Such, indeed, can be nothing but an act of vengeance. It can be nothing but a violation of territory, a violation of the municipal law, the faith of treaties and the law of nations.

The government of the accused may approve, diplomacy may gloss, but a jury can only inquire whether he was a party to the deed, or to any act of illegal violence which he knew would probably endanger human life. If satisfied that he was not, as I sincerely hope they may be, on the evidence in the case before us, they will then have the pleasant duty to perform of pronouncing him not guilty. But whatever may be their conclusions, we feel the utmost confidence that the prisoner, who is a foreigner, will have no just cause to complain that he has suffered wrong at the hands of an American jury.

At our hands the prisoner had a right to require an answer upon the facts presented by his papers, whether in law, he can be properly holden to a trial. We have had no declaration but to examine and pronounce upon the legal character of those facts, in order to satisfy ourselves of the bearing they might have on the novel and important question submitted. That examination has led to the conclusion that we have no power to discharge the prisoner.

He must, therefore, be remanded, to take his trial in the ordinary forms of law."

Animal Magnetism.—There has been considerable excitement in Boston recently on the subject of Animal Magnetism. Dr. Collyer has been exhibiting a series of experiments which have excited the admiration of some and called forth the ridicule of others, especially some gentlemen of the quill. The Philadelphia Chronicle, of the 10th inst. says:

"The excitement on the subject of Animal Magnetism does not seem to abate at Boston.—The Post of Wednesday morning contains the following paragraph:

Animal Magnetism—Results favorable to Dr. Collyer.—Yesterday afternoon, the committee held their fifth meeting in the Temple. The members opposed to Dr. Collyer's theory objected to having any more experiments attempted upon the regular subjects, Frederick and Sarah, on the ground that they suspected collusion to exist between them and Dr. C. It was then proposed that he should try an experiment on a gentleman present, who was a stranger to the Doctor, but not to some members of the committee. The opponents of Dr. C. said they would be satisfied with successful experiments on this gentleman, as they had full confidence in his intelligence and integrity.

Dr. C. then commenced the magnetising operation, and put the gentleman to sleep, and kept him in that state for upwards of an hour. While asleep he caused the subject's fingers to move, and hands to tremble, by holding his own fingers over them, and also by holding a natural magnet over them. After various other experiments, Dr. C., by using the reverse process, awakened the gentleman.

At the close of the business the following resolve was passed unanimously:

"Resolved, That while this committee refrain from expressing any decisive opinion as to the science or principles of animal magnetism, they freely confess that in the experiments of Dr. Collyer, certain appearances have been presented, which cannot be explained on the supposition of collusion, or by a reference to any physiological principles known to them."

"Star of the West."—We some time since made strictures on an article from this paper, and requested the editor to give them an insertion in his columns, promising to return the compliment when it might be desired. After a long delay we are responded to as follows:

"The Western Recorder.—The editor of that paper, Br. Springer, is informed, that we do not think the case of Br Johnson required more written, [to be written.] We gave the facts as they came from him, and Br. Springer gave his opinion about the matter—and more said, unless it comes from Br. Johnson himself, it appears to me, [us,] would be useless to any body. We do not like to fill up our paper with that which can be of no interest or benefit to the community. We need not hold long discussions about Br. Johnson's case—he is of age, and if he chooses, can speak for himself. So we think."

1. This is the "liberal" treatment of the very "liberal" Star, is it? The editor, after all his extra pretensions to "liberality," will not give us a hearing in his columns. He popishly presumes to be the judge of what is right for us to say, or him to publish for us, in our defence against his frequent insinuations and attacks upon the Methodists. However, for this we were somewhat prepared, from our knowledge of human nature. For we have uniformly found, in our acquaintance with mankind, that whenever a person made extra pretensions to any virtue he was always to be suspected for a deficiency in the particular virtue of which he boasted. If he made loud pretensions to patriotism, the public purse was in danger; if to philanthrophy, he would be slow to pay his honest debts; if to candor, you might prepare for every species of disingenuous treatment; if to "liberality," you might, as in the case of the "Star," look for dogmatism and proscription, &c. This, it appears, is an age of humbuggary; and among the various humbugs of the times the "Star's" pretensions to "liberality" stands probably in the front rank.

2. The Star "says" it "gave the facts" as they came from Br. Johnson, and that we gave our "opinion about the matter," &c. We gave as important "facts" from Br. Johnson, as the Star did, and not only gave our opinion about them, but about other matters also. So that the above statement is a misrepresentation of the case. But the editor seems determined to do all the talking in his own columns, of course we will have to submit to this kind of misrepresentation. O, how "liberal!"

3. But the most amusingly ridiculous part of this brief article is the declaration of the editor; "we do not like to fill our paper with that which can be of no interest or benefit to the community." Well really! After filling a large portion of his columns with such ribaldry and stuff against every sect in christendom but his own, very frequently employing such sneers against religion, under the pretext of opposing superstition, as infidelity itself would use, thus striving to unsettle the faith of every body except his own few, the edi or all at once becomes very much concerned for the welfare of the "community." Certainly, after this example, old Beelzebub himself will become very cautious in future, about the company he keeps, taking to heart greatly the welfare of the "community."

We have no sentiments of hostility to Universalists. We have met, among the laity of that order, some high-minded and honorable men, possessed of a considerable amount of christian feeling. Among these we are proud to rank some of our personal friends for whom we have the kindest respect. But we are satisfied that the tendency of Universalism is to disorganization and licentiousness. And as indignantly as they repel the charge, we are honestly convinced that infidelity is lurking at the base of their system. We have heard personally from the mouths of their ministers, sentiments, which, if true, the Bible must be false and religion a fable.—They boast of the rapid increase of their number for the few years past. From the best observations we are capable of making, their ranks are filled about in the same proportion that those of Deism are deserted. Infidelity has been so reasoned down, so voted down, and every way put down by public opinion, that it is very unpopular to profess it. So that the skeptic finds it to be to his public interest to transfer himself to the Universalists church, where, sailing under the sacred garb of christianity, he is permitted to enjoy his principles. We speak advisedly upon this subject, for we have an extensive acquaintance with Universalists in the west, and the influence of their principles upon the "community."

Now, Br. Gurley, if you shall see cause to make any remarks upon this article, be pleased to give it entire in your paper. Be assured that you cannot think it to be greater stuff than we do a considerable amount of what we see in your columns. Don't act cowardly. If you have more light and liberality than your neighbors, don't be afraid of our darkness. We promise again, if you will accommodate us in this matter, to reciprocate the favor when called on. The strictures made on an article without giving it entire, are, usually, little better than public slander, because, as in our case, above, the writer strictured never fails to be misrepresented.

The Weather.—The Philadelphia Chronicle, of the 15th inst. says:

Yesterday was a very close, warm day. The thermometer did not stand so high as it has on some few days this season, but the damp state of the atmosphere and the burning vertical sun produced that kind of heat which relaxes the system and causes profuse perspiration.

This was Wednesday the 14th. The 13th and 14th were both such days here as are described by the Chronicle, but the first the most oppressive.

Jonathan's Miscellany.—This is a new weekly imperial sheet quarto form, and issued from the office of the Brother Jonathan. For one copy one year $1,50; five copies for $4,00. Address Wilson and Company, post paid, 162 Nassau street, N. Y. and you can get a cheap and interesting work.—The specimen number, issued the 13th inst., is before us and looks neat.

We received an interesting communication from Br. Geo. Brown, of Pittsburgh, after the copy was in hand for this paper. It shall be forthcoming in our next.

General Bankrupt Law.—There is now good reason to hope that a general bankrupt law will pass during the extra session. The number and and magnitude of the petitions pouring in from all points, pressing immediate action, seem to indicate that it is a question of general interest and urgency inferior to scarcely any other that will be acted upon.—O. S. Journal.

The Last of the Remains.—The remains of the late President, Wm. Henry Harrison, were consigned to their final resting place at North Bend, on Wednesday the 7th inst. The Cincinnati Gazette thus describes the proceedings:

"The hearse which bore the body from the residence of Col. Taylor to the steamboat that conveyed it to North Bend, was preceded by the company of dragoons, and the several military companies which arrived from the Louisville Encampment in time to join in the procession, and followed by relatives and personal friends of the deceased, by the committee which had brought it from Washington, the committee of forty which had been appointed to make arrangements for the obsequies, the City Council, Officers and Soldiers of the last war, Judges and Officers of Superior and Common Pleas Courts, members of the Bar, Odd Fellows, Firemen, other Associations, and large numbers of citizens in an individual capacity.

The procession moved to solemn music, from the residence of Col. Taylor, on Sixth street, west to Race, thence south to Fourth, thence east to Broadway, thence down Broadway to the wharf, and on the wharf, to the steamboat Raritan, which lay at the foot of Main; and the pavements, and doors and windows of houses, for the whole of the distance, were crowded with persons, numbering doubtless from 18 to 20,000, who had assembled to have a last look, as it passed, of the coffin which enclosed the body of the venerated dead.

The boat left the wharf for the Bend about 1 o'clock, bearing with the remains the Committees, the detachment of U. S. Marines, and relatives of the deceased. By special invitation, the Rev. John T. Brooke went down, to perform the funeral service of the Church of England, at the tomb.

The officers, of course, refuse them this small favor, being more accustomed to expel students than tutors. Business Department.

As the Second Volume of our paper will soon close, we give notice to those who have had the reading of the Recorder for two years without paying, that unless they fork over, to us, before we reach our 104th No. we will probably discontinue their papers.

Br. Bledsoe, of Indiana, is informed that in relation to J. Rice's paper, which he orders, he did not give the county, nor can we make out the office. He will please inform us again, as it will be mere guess work to send now.

A friend says: "when your paper starts from your office at the proper time I get it the following Monday." We presume that our paper has not, for ten months past, failed to be deposited in the Zanesville Post office on the day of its issue. Nor has it failed thus, more than three times since we commenced, when sickness detained it not more than one day.

Elijah Justice at Winnocks owes us $3,00 and W. Collins $2,00. Will our agent get it? They refuse their papers without paying one cent!!

Br. Euans is informed that the two dollar shinplaster he sent us on the "New Albany (Ia.) Insurance Company," is worth nothing here, and we have not credited Dr. Newton who sent it. The worthless thing is subject to his order.

WATERSPOUTS.

BY LIEUTENANT H. W. OGDEN, U. S. N.

"In May, 1820, while on our passage from Havana to Norfolk, in the United States sloop of war, John Adams, we had reached the latitude of Cape Fear, and near the inner edge of the gulph stream, when the wind died away, the weather became very warm, and the atmosphere close and very oppressive.—The crew were lounging listlessly about the deck, dreading the dull monotony of a continued calm, when one of the seamen called out that there was a water spout on the larboard bow.

"The officers immediately rushed up from below, and I among the number, but we had scarcely reached the deck before a second and a third was seen, and within half an hour, there were seven around us varying in their distance from the ship from two hundred yards to two miles.

"The atmosphere was filled with low ashy colored clouds, some of which were darker underneath than others, and from these water-spouts were generally formed, each one from a separate cloud. In some instances, they were perfectly formed before we observed them, but in others, we could see a small portion of the cloud, at first extend downwards in the shape of an inverted cone, and then continue to descend, not very rapidly, until it reached the water. In other instances however, we observed that this conical appearance of a portion of the cloud, did not result in the perfect formation of a waterspout. Several times we saw the cone project, continue for a short time stationary—then rise again slowly and disappear in the clouds. This would in some cases occur two or three times to the same cloud, but eventually a larger and darker cone would descend, and result in forming the visible spout above mentioned.

"We saw so many of these failures, that the eye became accustomed to that degree of density in the cone which would ensure its descent, and even the sailors became practical philosophers for the time, correctly predicting when a spout would fail.

"While intently watching these various operations, we observed that the nearest water spout, then about two hundred yards on our starboard quarter moving slowly towards the ship with a light air from the eastward. The captain immediately ordered the topsails to be clewed down, the hatches to be covered with tarpawling and battened, the crew to be sent under deck, and directed some of the marines to be in readiness with loaded muskets, to try what effect might be produced by the concussion of firing as it is the general belief that waterspouts may be broken by this means. As soon as it was near enough the marines were ordered to fire, and although many of the balls must have passed through it, neither the peforation nor concussion had the slightest effect on it. The marines were ordered to load and fire again, and in the meantime I was directed to cast loose a thirty-two pounder. I did so and took aim directly at the spout, then within sixty yards and fired.—The captain, and others who were watching the effect to be produced, said they distinctly saw the ball strike the spout at its base, pushing the water on each side, but still it remained as perfect as before. I was ordered to load and fire again, and elevate the gun so as to strike the tube as high as possible, but just as I was about to pull the lock string the captain looked aloft, and observing the head of the spout directly over the main truck, called out to me to hold on, not wishing to try further experiments while it was in such dangerous proximity to the ship. For some minutes I had been too much occupied with the gun to notice particularly the position and progress of the waterspout, but now on looking up, I saw the dense black cloud from which it was formed, hanging immediately over us, at a height, as nearly as I could judge, of between three and four hundred feet, and the upper part of the spout directly over the mast-heads. When at a distance of two hundred yards, the tube of the spout seemed to fall perpendicularly from the cloud to which it was attached, but as it approached, the cloud alone moved steadily on, while the lower part of the tube, as though it found something repulsive in the ship, diverged slowly to the south-west, and passed the stern at the distance of about sixty yards.

While the spout was moving thus slowly by us, we had a good opportunity to observe it attentively, and as we were well convinced that it was not to be broken or dispersed by the concussion of firing, the gun was secured.

The tube of the spout was apparently four or five feet in diameter, and its surface well defined. Its color was light and misty, but we observed that they all looked darker at a distance than when close to us. Its shape was something like a trumpet, the small end downwards, and spreading out suddenly as it united with the cloud. At a height of between twenty and thirty feet, a number of sea-birds were flying around it, evidently in quest of food. They were in rapid motion, flitting and crossing each other's path at every moment, darting in towards the tube, wheeling away and then as hastily returning. In the meantime the cloud above, which had rapidly grown denser and larger, began to exhibit coruscations of electricity. The spout which had passed off to a distance of about three hundred yards, after having been visible for more than twenty minutes, became smaller in its lower part and then gradually rose until entirely lost in the cloud, part of which still hung over us. Soon after this severe flashes of lightning struck near to the ship, and the rain began to fall in large and very cold drops. Some of the sailors who believed that the water was taken up in a body to the cloud, tasted the rain as it fell on the deck, and were very much astonished to find it perfectly fresh. A light breeze now sprang up, bearing the cloud off to the westward which as it passed on, assumed the appearance of a heavy squall and from its accelerated motion, it was evidently carried on by a very strong wind."

After reviewing the different opinions of philosophers as to the formation of waterspouts, Mr. Ogden says; "the nearest remaining within sixty yards of our ship, for at least fifteen minutes, afforded a good opportunity of observing it minutely, and so far as this one (and it seemed to be like all others in sight at the time) can go in confirmation of a general theory, it inclines me to the belief of that part of Dr. Franklin's hypothesis, which supposes it to be a body of warm air rising from the surface of the ocean to the upper and cooler region, where its moisture begins to be condensed into thick vapor by the cold, thus causing the spout to be first visible at its upper end. As the vapors continue to ascend, by constant addition, they become denser, and, consequently their centrifugal force greater, until being risen, above the concentrating currents which compose the whirl, they fly off, spread and form the cloud."

CELEBRATION AT SUFFIELD, CT.

There is to be a Temperance Celebration at Suffield, on Monday, in which the students at the Literary Institution will unite. We are promised a full report of the proceedings from the pen of a literary gentleman who will be present, which we shall publish in our next paper. The following original "Temperance Ode" is to be sung on the occasion, which will be marked with other appropriate ceremonies.

TEMPERANCE ODE.

BY S. DRYDEN PHELPS.

When over our land hung oppression's dark pall,
And clouds of the battle rose thick to the sky,
Our fathers united their fortunes, their all,
To purchase their Freedom, maintain it or die!

The contest was fierce, but they conquered in fight,
And Liberty's banner, in splendor unfurled,
Waved high in the heavens, all radiant with light,
Beheld and admired by a wondering world.

As years rolled away, undisturbed by their foes,
They prospered in peace with blessing of God;
But soon a dread Tyrant, in terror uprose—
The monster, INTEMPERANCE, was stalking abroad.

Like blasts from the desert, his poisonous breath,
Swept over the land, in its blith and its gloom,
Diffusing the seeds of deep sorrow and death,
While thousands went down in disgrace to the tomb.

The Tyrant, insatiate, still sped on his way,
Resistless in might, like waves of the sea,
Triumphantly hurling our hopes to decay,
And grasping the fruit of fair Liberty's Tree.

Some friends of their country the ruin beheld,
The danger foresaw that was spreading so wide,
Dec ared that the Tyrant must soon be repelled,
Or Freedom's domain would be whelmed in his tide.

The standard of Temperance those patriots reared,
Around it soon gathered the good and the wise;
But now, as by magic, new hosts have appeared—
The DRUNKARD is bearing it up to the skies.

To-day, in the Temperance cause we rejoice,
May God speed it on through the land of the brave;
To-day, do we pledge, with our heart and our voice,
That its banner, with Freedom's in triumph shall wave!

THE ENGLISH AND FRENCH LANGUAGES. A very learned Frenchman, in conversation with Dr. Wallace, Professor of Geometry in the University of Oxford about the year 1650, and author of a grammer of the English language written in Latin, after expatiating with the Doctor on the copiousness of the French language, and its richness in derivations and synonymes, produced, by way of illustration, the following four lines on rope-making:

Quand un cordier, cordant, veult corder un corde;
Pour sa corder, trois cordons il accord;
Mais, si un des cordons de la corde decorde.
Le cordon decordand fait decorder la corde.

To show that the English language was at least equally rich and copious, Dr. Wallace immediately translated the French into as many lines of English, word for word, using the word, twist to express the French corde.

When a twister a-twisting, will twist him a twist;
For the twisting of his twist, he three times doth entwist;
But if one of the twines of the twist do untwist,
The twine that untwisteth untwisteth the twist.

Here were verbs, nouns, participals and synonymes to match the French. To show farther the power and versatiality of the English, Mr. W. added the following lines, which continue the subject:

Untwisting the twine that untwisted between,
He twirls with his twister the two in a twine;
Then, twice having twisted the twines of the twine,
He twisteth the twine he had twisted in twain.

The French funds had been exhausted at the outset. Not so with the English; for Dr. Wallace pushing his triumph, added yet four other lines which follow:

The twain that in twining before in the twine,
As the twains were intwisted he now doth untwine;
'Twixt the twain intertwisting a twine more between,
As, twining his twister, makes a twist of the twine.

Mr. Adam Clarke, to whom we are indebted for the record of the preceding trial of skill between the two philologists, adds, in conclusion, that "he questions whether there is another language in the universe capable of such a variety of flections, or which can afford so many terms and derivatives, all legitimate, coming from the same radix, without borrowing a single term from another tongue, or coining one for the sake of the nonce; for there is not a word used by Mr. Wallace in these lines which is not Anglo-Saxon, not one exotic being entertained."

AGRICULTURAL STATISTICS OF THE U. S.

THE annexed table embraces the agricultural statistics of most of the States, as returned by the Marshals appointed to take the Sixth Census. Four or five States or Territories are still behind. From the data here furnished, it appears that nearly four bushels and a half of wheat are raised for each inhabitant; and of other grain, nearly thirty bushels to each inhabitant; and of potatoes, about six bushels and a half to each inhabitant. Making an aggregate of forty-one bushels of grain and potatoes to each inhabitant, including men, women and children, bond and free. One would think that Americans ought not to starve at this rate, especially as they have millions of cattle, sheep and hogs, to splice out with, to say nothing of fish and fowl. Of this vast aggregate of about 700,000,000 bushels, a considerable per centage is fed out to domestic animals, and some million bushels are exported,—though much less than it would seem might be conveniently spared. The value of an annual crop of grain and potatoes, even at the present low prices, is probably not less than three hundred million dollars; and if we include other agricultural productions, among which are cotton and tobacco, with a fair allowance for the cattle, sheep, horses, swine, &c. which belong to the year, we shall have an annual product of MORE THAN FIVE HUNDRED MILLION DOLLARS IN VALUE. Surely such a country need not be long in debt; and will not, if it is wise.

AN INQUIRY, &C.

A Statement of the Doctrine of an Unoriginated, Infinite and Eternal Prescience, as it is currently and implicitly received by a very large proportion of the Christian World.

NO. VIII.

AN INFINITE AND ETERNAL PRESCIENCE, NOT INCLUDED IN THE DIVINE EXISTENCE, NOR REQUISITE FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE WORLD, NOR IMPLIED IN THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE HUMAN HEART, NOR COMPATIBLE WITH THE MORAL PROBATION OF HUMAN BEINGS.

We have already endeavored to show, precisely in what sense the knowledge of the Deity must be absolutely infinite; but the subject may require some farther elucidation. The most fruitful source of obscurity and error in our speculations on the knowledge of God, is that of our not distinguishing between existence and actions, between latent energy and power in active operation. Nothing but what is absolutely necessary can be Divine, and every thing which is absolutely necessary, must be necessary every where and at every point of duration. God is a spirit, and therefore he must be an infinite mind. The intellect of the Deity must be an infinite understanding, because it is unoriginated, universal and eternal; but it is not possible for any part of the garniture of his infinite mind to be either unoriginated, universal or eternal.

That we may be fully aware of the difference between existence and action, and between latent energy and power in actual operation, it will be necessary to pursue the following chain of argumentation. Existence is absolutely necessary, because absolute non-existence is impossible; but creation is not necessary, because there was a period in duration when creation did not exist. Existence is universally and eternally necessary, but creation is neither universally nor eternally necessary; neither is it universally or eternally possible. Intellect, or mind, is necessary, but the actual knowledge of things beyond itself, is not necessary: intellect is universally and eternally necessary; but the actual knowledge of things beyond itself is neither necessary, nor universal, nor eternal.

The attribute of an infinite moral integrity is absolutely necessary to the Divine existence; but the active exercise of that integrity beyond the limits of his own person is not necessary to the Divine existence; an infinite moral integrity is universally and eternally necessary to the Divine existence; but the active operation of that infinite integrity is neither universally or eternally necessary to the Divine existence. An infinite benevolence is absolutely necessary to the Divine existence; but an infinite beneficence is not necessary to the Divine existence: a universal and eternal benevolence is necessary to the existence of the Deity; but a universal and eternal beneficence is not necessary to the existence of the Deity. A creative energy is absolutely necessary; but actual creation is not necessary: a creative energy is universally and eternally necessary; but a universal and eternal creation is neither necessary nor possible.

The most elevated and amplified conception, which it is possible for the human understanding which would imply an entire comprehension of his own being; an entire comprehension of his own existence, his nature, and his powers; an entire comprehension of his own hypostasis. But then it should always be kept in mind, that such a knowledge, if indeed the term knowledge be strictly applicable, to his infinite comprehension, is not any part of the garniture or acquirement of the Divine mind; but is truly and properly the Deity himself. Such a comprehension of the divine hypostasis is necessary, universally and eternally necessary; and therefore it must be, de facto, God himself. But every active operation of the infinite energy, must be subsequent to the Divine existence; and every act of the Deity must be voluntary and unconstrained; and therefore if every active operation of the universal and eternal mind, must be subsequent to his own existence, then every volition of the Deity must be subsequent to his existence, and then every act of the Deity must be subsequent to his own existence, and then, by consequence, all consciousness, perception, and knowledge of those volitions and actions, must be, of necessity, posterior to his own actual being. But although the volitions and actions of the Deity must be uniformly free; yet the knowledge of those volitions and actions cannot be separated from the actual performance of them.

Existence, and a knowledge of that existence by the Deity, cannot possibly be separated from each other, whether that existence be created or uncreated, finite or infinite, human or Divine.—Knowledge, whether it be that of a finite or that of an infinite being, must uniformly and of necessity be founded upon fact; and therefore, in relation to both the one and the other, knowledge must of consequence be a personal acquirement, and in the order of existence, it must be posterior to the object of its cognizance. In the Deity, however, although knowledge be a personal acquirement, and in the order of existence must be posterior to the object of its cognizance, yet in the order of duration, they must be uniformly, and of necessity coeval. And although knowledge in the Deity, like that of created beings, be a personal acquisition, yet it cannot, like knowledge in created beings, be voluntarily and precarious in its acquirement; but it must be necessary in its acquirement, and inseparable from all created and uncreated existence, which is the object of his universal and eternal perception.

In relation to the mind of the Deity, knowledge and fact must be co-existent and inseparable, and his knowledge must of necessity embrace all finite and infinite existence, and must be cognizant of all hypostasis, capability, and character, as well as of all volition and action, both in himself and in every other being. These are the utmost limits of possibility, and beyond these limits it is not possible for any intellect to travel.—Imagination, it is true, and credulity, it is equally true, can easily step over the limits of actual existence; but it is not possible for actual knowledge, in either a finite or an infinite mind, to get over the limits of actual existence. It may indeed be asked, whether the limits of possibility are not wider than those of actual existence, and whether the knowledge of God does not embrace the whole empire of possible existence; and whether it does not therefore of consequence extend farther than the limits of actual existence. I answer, it is undoubtedly possible for many things to exist which are not at present in actual being; and that the future and actual existence of such things may be, possible, the object of anticipation to the infinite mind of God; but they may not be the object of an actual knowledge; they may also be matters of Divine determination, and in that case, they must be the object of a certain prescience; but even, in such a case, their actual existence cannot be the object of an actual knowledge. The possibility of any future event, must be an object of knowledge in the Deity, because it is the subject of an actual existence; the determination in the Deity to give existence to any future event, must be an object of knowledge with him, because that determination itself is in actual existence. Therefore the conclusion is demonstrable: which is, that knowledge can never outstep the bounds of actual and real existence. Possible existence is only hypothetical; actual existence, is real; and that knowledge must be equally real, which consists of an actual perception of actual and real being.

When we keep in mind that the actual knowledge of God must be co-existent and coeval with all actual existence, both created and uncreated, we must be fully aware that it is not possible for the Deity to be deceived, or for any thing to transpire without his actual knowledge. By the infinite expansion and plentitude of the Deity, and by the eternal continuity of his own existence, his wisdom and his power, his justice and his goodness, must be every where, and at all times ready to be employed according to his own will, and as his infinite and infallible will may dictate, and in every case may respectively require. He has no need to travel over the circuit of the heavens, or along the longitudes of the earth, now attending upon one, and then upon another of the objects of his fatherly care. In consequence of the universality of his being, all nations before him are as nothing: and they are counted to him as less than nothing and vanity. So that we may demand, with the prophet, to whom then will ye liken God? Or what likeness will ye compare unto him? And we may adopt the sublime adoration of the Psalmist, and say, whether shall I go from thy spirit. Or whether shall I flee from thy presence. If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there thy hand shall lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. If I say, surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee, but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike unto thee. Psalms, cxxxix.

Such a knowledge, and such an agency, as are described in the foregoing passages of Holy writ, must be every way adequate to the government of the world. And yet, in these splendid and sublime descriptions of the agency of God, there is not a single hint of any thing like an eternal prescience; if such a perfection did actually exist in the Deity, to add one single iota of efficiency to an agency like that which is described in the foregoing quotations. The assumption of an eternal prescience would, in theory, completely ruin the moral character of the Deity; but it would add nothing to His real efficiency in the government of the world.

On the assumption of an eternal prescience, the moral government of the world would be reduced to a mere chimerical and unintelligible notion of the human fancy: the order of events would be literally and infallibly anticipated, nor would there be even an abstract possibility of altering any single occurrence, either in its character, or its order of succession. Immutability may be truly predicated of the Divine character, and of the principles of the moral government of the world; but it can never be truly predicated of the exercise and development of those principles in the actual government of the world, and in the application of a suasive agency to the human heart, nor of the distribution of rewards and punishments among accountable beings.

The conduct of God towards moral and accountable creatures, must of necessity be changed, with every change of character [illegible] conversely or obediently assume. An erroneous notion of the Divine immutability, has given rise to a thousand contradictions and absurdities in speculative theology: and it may be as truly said of the advocates of eternal prescience, as ever it was affirmed of those skeptics who regret the doctrine of punishment, that,

They set at odds heaven's jarring attributes,
And with one excellency another wound.
Maim heaven's perfections. Break His equal beams.
Make mercy triumph, over God himself.
A God all prescient is a God unjust.

A certain and eternal prescience of all moral actions would not by any means be implied in a perfect knowledge of the human heart. The investigation of all human hearts is, indeed, a Divine prerogative. Such was the conviction of Solomon, when he said, thou only knowest the hearts of the children of men. It was under a devout and lively conviction of this solemn verity that David prayed, search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts. And it was for this reason that, in his dying charge to Solomon he said, and thou, Solomon, my son, know thou the God of thy father, and serve Him with a perfect heart and a willing mind: for the Lord searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts. But the knowledge of the human heart by the Deity, like His knowledge of all other things, except the hypostasis of His own being, must be, of necessity, a personal acquirement; and if a personal acquirement, it must be extraneous to His own being; and if extraneous to His own being, it must be originated; and if originated, it must be posterior in the order of its existence; and if all the knowledge of the Deity be posterior to His own existence, and be a personal acquisition, it must, of consequence, be capable of perpetual accession. But although the present contents of all human hearts, and the past productions of all human hearts, be perfectly known by the Deity, it will not, by any means, follow from thence, that the future production of all human hearts can be the objects of a certain and eternal prescience. The future productions of all human hearts have at present no actual or real existence; they have not even a relative existence: all that can be said of them is, that they are possible, or at the utmost probable. That is to say, it is probable there will be human hearts in existence in future stages of duration, and that human hearts will be as fertile of mental and moral productions at that period, as human hearts are found to be at the present day. The possibility and the probability of the case, have both of them a real and actual existence; and therefore, to the Divine mind, they must be the objects of a real and certain knowledge; but the future possible or probable contents of human hearts, have, at present, no real, or actual, or even relative existence; and therefore it is not possible for them to be the objects of a real and actual perception. A knowledge of that which has no real existence is, very obviously, a knowledge of a nonenty; videlicet, no knowledge at all.

POPERY—NEW SERIES.

Hydra despotism, is less offensive, and less suspected, under a garb of Protestantism, than that of Popery or Romanism, and practices its wily arts most successfully by a new name, or under specious pretences. Ecclesiastical despotism gained the ascendency in the primitive church, by almost imperceptible degrees, under the name of christianity. The "first step was, to exclude the people from all part in the administration of ecclesiastical affairs,"—a step that proved fatal to religious and civil liberty. And even the holy (or rather the hellish) inquisition was established under the plausible pretence of keeping religion pure! And as Wesley remarks, "a cloud of brimstone and smoke came up from the bottomless pit, when riches and honors were heaped upon the church, and especially upon the clergy,"—"who are, (said an eminent president of a college recently, himself an old clergyman,) the most dangerous class of men on earth," although he would doubtless admit, that kept within their proper sphere, a valuable and useful class of men.

The "United Society" was no other than "a company of men, having the form and seeking the power of Godliness,"—the simple object or original design was to "help each other to work out their salvation." And the itinerant plan of spreading scriptural holiness by "extraordinary messengers" was apostolic, pure, salutary and efficient. But "we cannot, (says the editor of the New York Advocate recently) guarantee the perpetual purity of a church having the predominence over all others, with undivided authority." It is a wonder that a sentiment so correct, should come from such a source, at a time when melancholy signs of departure from original purity and extraordinary claims to "power and authority," by and for the itinerant clergy are ominous. When the General Conference of 1828 claimed to be "the divinely authorized expounders of moral discipline, and governors of the church," and this and its concomitants were reported, some were startled at the presentation of the exploded doctrine of divine right, and Papal infallibility, while others accounted the report a slander. But the doctrine is now openly avowed in the church organs. One of the publishing committee holds the following language in the South-Western Christian Advocate: "As Episcopal Methodist we are theocratic in our ecclesiastical government"—"the ministry whom (the great head of the church) calls and divinely appoints, are the regularly authorized administrators of discipline and governors of the church"—"this is the correct doctrine of episcopacy as exercised in the M. E. Church"—"Episcopacy is at the head, and from thence all administrating power, in every branch of the executive is derived"—"the power of church censure and of excommunication rests with the ministry"—"having executive authority"—"to rule and govern the church." In his exposition of 1 Corinthians v. 1—5, to prove "scriptural episcopacy," and to show the "due and proper exercise of this power and authority in the exercise of discipline in the christian church," he says: "The Apostle filling the highest office in the church takes up the case and decides it, which is in perfect accord- [illegible] when the church were gathered together to have the case laid before them," it was "not to take a vote either as to the guilt or expulsion of the offender!" If "this is the correct doctrine of episcopacy as exercised in the M. E. Church," as the writer avers, we may fairly draw the following inferences:

1st. That the old exploded doctrine of "divine right" is resuscitated, under a new garb, in a republican country! 2d. Whereas the power of "church censure & of excommunication rests with the ministry," and "all administrating power is derived from the episcopacy," and as this writer has said that "the power and authority of the episcopacy is beyond the power of any General Conference," and the government "theocratic," (i. e.) 'a government administered by God,' it is absolute, untimited, irresponsible and infallible! 3d. Whereas it is "in perfect accordance with the nature of episcopal authority," for one "filling the highest executive office" to "take up a case and decide it," a member or local preacher may be expelled at any time, place or distance, within such a jurisdiction, and the society may have "the case brought before them," but "not to vote as to the guilt or expulsion of the offender!" 4th. Allowing this to be "the correct doctrine of the episcopacy as exercised in the M. E. Church," "trial before the society or a select number of them," or "the privilege of trial by committee," is but solemn mockery, and to talk about the "rights of the membership," is but delusory!

The editor of the principal church organ at New York, and one of the publishers of the branch at Nashville, seem to coincide. We have seen the bold and strong assumptions of the latter, and the former says, that "the society has no right to admit or expel church members"—"it must never be put to vote!" Now, as all the rights are arrogated by the itinerant ministry, what rights have the local preachers and membership more than the "Romanists," whom the editor of the New York Advocate represents as in a state of "servitance" to "their clerical masters?"—And what is the difference between "divine right," and no rights, among Romanists—and the same thing among Protestants? G.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: During the first half year of my sojourn in this city, and station, a rheumatic affection, which fell very heavy on my right shoulder and arm, together with a grading liver disease, put it out of my power to write any thing for either of our periodicals. This thing of sitting in the writing posture, by a table, for any length of time, was what I could not endure, nor am I yet well able to sustain such an exercise. Since the first of April, my rheumatics have retired, perhaps to some colder region, and my liver disease, being not quite so severe as formerly, I begin to enjoy life a little, and have concluded to send you one more communication for the Recorder.

I lay no claim to tact and talent, in writing, under circumstances of the most favorable character, much less can I write, with interest to myself or any body else, when all is lethergy, and coldness in the entire region of my residence. It has been said by brethren, who, unacquainted with my composition, and circumstances, and rather disposed to rebuke me for remaining silent, in so prominent a station, that Pittsburg is not a barren place—in such a city and station, there is always enough to write about, if a man were disposed to write. Well I could have said through your paper, that Pittsburg with all her busy population, still continues to be the city of three Rivers: surrounded by the grandeur and beauty of the neighboring hills, which are robed in the glory and loveliness of summer, and is, as usual, overhung with a dense cloud of smoke arising from all her factories and fires. But this is not what our people want to hear—they want to hear of the work of God in the salvation of the souls of men, and on this glorious subject, I have kept silent, because I had not much to say. If there had been a revival of religion in this station, then could I have written, (at least since April.) I am confident the spirit of writing would have come mightily upon me, and that I should have been moved to communicate the glad tidings to the brethren throughout all the churches.

I want now to say to those brethren in the west, who have been looking to this station for pecuniary assistance, in the erection of their meeting houses, that they will have either to proceed in their good work, without the aid looked for, or wait some time longer, until times change for the better, and business becomes revived. The hand of hard times has been laid very heavily on this city—it has been fearfully stricken down, and can't well help others, until it recovers a confidence of being fully able to help itself.

The Temperance reformation has taken a fresh start in this city, and its vicinity. The excitement has been unusually great—several thousands have taken the pledge, among whom I am told, were about 300 drunkards—if one-half or one-fourth of these are saved, it will be matter of everlasting joy. The papers have told this Temperance story better than I can tell it here, so I need add no more, save to wish universal success to the Temperance cause—well conducted, the good done must be immense.

The M. P. Church in this city, so far as I know, is at this time in a state of peace, but she is not in a revival state, nor has she been since my day. The wounds she has borne for years, are now about healed, or nearly so. By these things these good brethren have long suffered. I trust they will learn wisdom in the time to come, and that henceforth they will maintain a more perfect harmony in all their operations. Behold how good and how pleasant a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. But two cannot walk together except they be agreed. A house divi- [illegible] the Divine blessing will come down like the dew of heaven upon the mountains of Israel, and the gates of hell shall never be able to prevail against a church, in doctrinal, experimental, and practical harmony.

Some few have been converted to God, and added to the church this conference year—a few have joined on certificate—two have withdrawn in good standing—some have removed—some have died in the Lord. Probably our number is about what it was at the close of the last year—possibly not so great; still I have hope, good hope through grace, for this station. And why have I hope? 1. Because peace now prevails among us, we seem to have no men of strife, our lions have become lambs. 2. Our friends with great spirit and harmony, have gone to work, and at the expense of several hundred dollars, (hard as the times are) have white-washed, cleaned, painted and carpeted the church, in which we worship. Cleanliness is next to godliness. I hope we shall all now think of the necessity of clean hearts, vital godliness. 3. We have, it is said, an increase in our Sabbath congregations—it is also said, that our week night meetings are better attended than formerly—now, should we all become more zealously engaged, and get our souls revived, and happy in the Lord, then our class meetings will be considered more valuable, and consequently be better attended. We cannot well nurse piety up to full maturity, in a Methodist community, without strict attention to class meetings. 4. When we get our own souls all alive to God, then, and not till then, shall we have moral power in the community where we live, and shall be able to "persuade men;" "catch men"—Oh! what a work is this!! Paul "persuaded men"—Christ said to Peter "thou shalt catch men." We want moral power for this work—this power cometh from on high, in answer to prayer. All churches may have it, if in holy harmony, they pray for it, and do not hinder their own prayers, by wrong doing in their lives, for there is no respect of persons with God.

Our Sabbath School in this station, is one of great promise—we have many children in our school, whose minds are now maturing for useful places in the church. our aged members are fast going the way of all the earth. O how many have been called to the eternal world, since I was called to organize this church in 1829—I look with confidence, to our Sunday schools, and to conversions, through the power of the gospel, from the world, lying in wickedness, for the filling up of the ranks of our Zion, so fearfully thinned by death.

One word in relation to the Recorder—I know your toils have been great, and that you have been disinterested, having labored for nothing and found yourself, and all because you loved the church. That your labors have been appreciated, I also know, for I have been all through the district, and claim to have an understanding of public sentiment in relation to your editorial labors.—I feel rather mortified than otherwise, that I have done so little this year for the benefit of your paper, aye, and the Protestant too—I owe good will to both. With these feelings I may be permitted to hope that our brethren on a neighboring circuit, will not all of them throw up the Recorder, because you made an unintentional mistake, in regard to two valuable young men, and declined publishing a correction, which you deemed too harsh, to appear, &c.; or because your views of abolitionism did not suit them, or from some other cause. I hope they will reconsider this matter and still sustain the Recorder.—I hold that the faith of our ministers in the Pittsburgh District, is pledged, aye, and that of the members too, through their delegates, to sustain the Recorder, as they may have ability, until you as editor, shall do something so bad, as to cause the conference by an official act to declare, that your paper is no longer worthy of the patronage of our people.—Until our conference thus acts in the premises I hold all these indignant wholesale withdrawals of patronage* to be neither more nor less, than a point blank violation of the good faith, upon so far sustained—Methodist [illegible] able of keeping good faith!! Hear it, O ye heavens! and be astonished, O earth!! A people without soul or body either—nothing in them but sound principles alone—and they for a trifle violate their own plighted faith!!—Come brethren, this won't do, come back to your duty.—Perhaps you acted in haste, and without due reflection, and may have, as good men, believed, that duty called you to your present course—come back; take the paper again—all will be made right at conference.

The signs of the times begin to justify the conclusion, that the old controversy between us and the M. E. Church, is about to be revived—So be it, I go for this discussion. To restrain all our sympathies to the enslaved colored race, while the white saints of God, around the altars of mercy, are not free, shocks all my moral sensibilities. Nor do I desire this discussion revived for the sake of the M. E. Church, alone—Our own rising community, and the public at large, need additional information. It cannot be that a people who love liberty in the State, can hate it in the Church.—Besides, I want to see if Dr. Bond, can convince the American people, that Methodism, by reason of its government, destitute as it is, of all the principles and elements of freedom, is a real improvement, on original christianity.—This appears to be a discovery peculiarly his own, and to his name be all the glory, of so whimsical an absurdity.—When we discussed this question with the old church before, we had but one paper, now we have six.—When the discussion was carried on, with all the terrors of excommunication hanging over our heads, and we were made to see our danger, if we dared to speak with manly independence—now, I trust, we have learned, from experience, that all such emp- [illegible] God, we are bound to lay that anti-scriptural system of church government before the church, and the world, just as it really is.—Come my soul be on thy guard, the day of battle is at hand, go forth to glorious war. We had then only a few Union Societies to sustain the discussion but now we have some seventeen Annual Conferences—a valuable ministry—a growing community.—Let truth alone be our object, and our manner and spirit every way in accordance with christian love, and then the discussion must eventuate in great and increasing good to the M. E. Church, to ourselves, and to the country.

Very respectfully, I am, &c.,
GEO. BROWN.

Pittsburg, Pa., July 12, 1841.

* We know of no such wholesale withdrawal of patronage. Br. John Clarke, of the Pittsburgh circuit, sent us some four or five discontinuances a few days since. If it be this circuit our correspondent alludes to, we must have been some way or other misrepresented to the subscribers. They are strangers to us, and we have never to our knowledge, laid a hair of our head in the road of any of them. We certainly would be thankful to these brethren for their patronage, but if they have got in a pet with us without a cause,—or if they are in the leading strings of some small mind and act to gratify that, though we regret it, yet we cannot help ourself. We hope, however, our friend is mistaken about the circuit intending to withdraw by the wholesale. We cannot think that Pittsburgh circuit would consent to let itself down in public estimation as such an act would let it down. But even in the event it does withdraw, in the wholesale way, it would not be a very powerful stroke upon us. We do not know of more than fifteen papers sent within its bounds, and Br. Clarke, the superintendent, informed us in his last, that it was doubtful if several of these would be able to pay us.—ED.

BRIEF MEDITATION ON THE DEATH OF A GOOD MAN.

The stern and inflexible decree of heaven is, from dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return. This is the doom of the human family, of the good and the bad. In all time past we read of only two exempted cases, among all the millions who have lived upon the earth. By sin death has entered the world, and the sentence of death has passed upon all,—death is a solemn but necessary subject to meditate upon; the good man alone can look upon it, with unruffled feelings.

Inspiration says, 'precious in the sight of God is the death of his saints;" we do not suppose by this, that God delights to inflict death on them, but they are precious in view of the value of their souls, man being originally made in the likeness and image of God, in view of the works of God to bless and comfort mankind in every age of the world—especially the great work of redeeming love by Jesus Christ.

In view of a good man's preparation for a happy immortality, his death is precious in the sight of the Divine Being. The man who is prepared for death has faith and confidence in his Heavenly Father, and the merits of Jesus Christ, and has an absolute conformity to the Divine will, accompanied with profound humility and intense desire for communion with God; such a man has passed from spiritual death unto spiritual life, and is ready, waiting to yield up his soul into the hands of his Creator. What a comfort it must be, for a holy man at the approach of death, to reflect that he is now near the end of his earthly pilgrimage. Pains and sufferings, and those dangerous conflicts, and temptations which he had to pass through, have all ceased, and the world, the flesh, and the devil, those potent foes to the happiness of his soul are about to be vanquished forever. The christian can adopt the language of inspiration, and in view of death, say O! Death where is thy sting—O! Grave where thy victory. Blessed be God who [illegible] Jesus Christ.—Such a soul is near to paradise. O what a satisfaction it is to a lover of God, to see himself near the gates of the New Jerusalem, where he will admire, love, behold, and enjoy his God for ever and ever. He forgets as it were, the things that are behind, and looks forward, to things that are before, ever to a happy immortality. If then death be so certain and unavoidable, and so gloomy and terrific to the mere natural man, does it not evince wisdom in the good and upright to make preparations for the king of terrors and on the contrary, does it not argue, foolishness—neglectfulness—if not a degree of insanity in those who make no arrangements for a happy and peaceful death? Unhappily for the world vast numbers of people make no preparations of soul, for a quiet or christian like departure from this world. St. Paul has left us a fine example of preparation and resignation in view of his approaching desolution. The time of my departure is at hand, I have fought a good fight—I have finished my course—I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge, shall give me in that day.

Let the saints of God recollect that He will help them on a bed of sickness and sorrow, He will restrain their enemy at that time, will mitigate their fears and apprehensions, He will support them under their pains, and agonies, and encourage them against the terrors of death and judgment, so that such may say with the Psalmist, Yea though I walk through the [illegible] for thou art with me—Thy rod and thy staff, and they comfort me.—Psalms xxiii.

Conclude then, O my soul, to get washed in the atoning blood of thy Saviour.—That when death shall come with his mandate to be ready. Conclude to live to get good and do good. Conclude O my soul, to live the life of the righteous, that thou mayest die their death, that thy end may be like unto theirs. Hearken! And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, write, Blessed are the dead, that die in the Lord; from henceforth, yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their work do follow them.

OBITUARY.

MARY BROWDER, wife of Thomas Browder, departed this life on the first day of July, 1841, in the 81st year of her age.

She was born in Virginia, in 1750:—At the age of 14 embraced religion, and united with the M.E. church among the earliest converts of American Methodism. She with her husband removed to Ohio, in 1804.

As a member of the church she was very exemplary. She liked to dwell on the theme of religion,—in fine, her life was one continued scene of piety and devotion. I had the pleasure of visiting her in her last illness, and uniting in devotion with her. She expressed to her son, who made inquiries upon the subject, a willingness to die, and a prospect of a better inheritance.

Farewell dear mother, 'till we meet
On that delightful shore;
In climes of joy forever sweet,
We'll weep and part no more.

AN INDIAN'S VIEW OF THE WAY OF SALVATION.—A North American Indian, and a white man, being at worship together, were both impressed so deeply under the same sermon as to commence seeking their salvation. The Indian soon rejoiced in the hope of divine forgiveness. The white man remained in deep distress of mind, until, after sinking almost in despair, he also, at length, found peace in believing. Sometime afterwards, meeting his red brother, he thus addressed him: 'How is it that I should be so long under conviction, when you found comfort so soon?' 'O, brother,' replied the Indian, "me tell you; there came along a rich prince, he proposes to give you a new coat, and you say, 'I don't know, my coat pretty good; I believe it will do a little longer.' He then offer me new coat: I look on my old blanket; I say, this good for nothing; I fling it right away, and accept the new coat. Just so brother, you try to make your old righteousness do for some time, you loth to give it up; but I, poor Indian, had none, thereof I glad at once to receive the righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ."—Burder's Missionary Anecdotes.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... JULY 28, 1841.

"While upon this point, we venture to affirm that there will be no little effort made from certain quarters to change the condition of affairs in Baltimore. We state this publicly, because we wish the church to know it and act accordingly. Indications that cannot be mistaken, have appeared during the past year, evidencing that a jealous eye has been kept upon the 'METHODIST PROTESTANT AND FAMILY VISITOR.' Attempts have been made to entrap us in controversy, and sundry expedients resorted to, to divert us from our even course. The conflicting opinions of the North and South have done no little towards the existence of this opposition. We have been saluted with a smile of friendship and a grasp of love, at one time; and at the next, from the same source, received a silent stab. We have been alternately applauded and rebuked—praised and censured from the same lips. Indeed we have no hesitancy in declaring that there are those who desire a little more influence than they now possess over the concerns of the [illegible] to remove the location of the OFFICIAL PAPER.

"So far as we are individually concerned, this would be a matter of small moment. But we do not believe it would be to the church. And we therefore hope its serious consideration will meet the attention of those upon whom the responsibilities must fall."

1. The editor complains that he "has been alternately praised and censured from the same lips," &c. &c. And how would the worthy brother have it? All praise we presume. This is generally the disposition of those who fancy themselves to be of importance. If he will only take the pains to examine the epistle of our Lord to the seven churches of Asia, He will find that this was precisely the practice of the Saviour of sinners. Whatever was commendable in either of the churches, for this he gave them full credit; and then pointed out their misgivings with great frankness. But this latter part of our Lord's manner is extremely goading to all those who have made the least approximation towards infallibility.

2. The editor here indulges in a very mawkish jealousy about "efforts" to take from him the "CHURCH ORGAN;" indicating that somebody else wants the control of it. Really this is a small matter. That the man at the head of the press in the M. P. Church is capable of indulging in such illiberal suspicions and jealousies of his brethren, is so humiliating, and makes us feel so little while we contemplate it, that, if there were a hickory nut before us with a worm hole we feel small enough, in our own estimation, to enter it for concealment from the scene. Now, if it be us the editor alludes to, "desiring" to get the control over the "organ," we will allay his jealousies and fears by frankly stating to him, that so far from wishing any "influence" or control over it, if we are ever placed in a situation to act on the subject, our first vote will be to knock the thing on the brain to get rid of its vexations.

3. The editor in the article above, anticipates an effort to remove the location of the "organ" from Baltimore, then adds: "So far as we are individually concerned, this would be of very small moment. But we do not believe it would be to the church."—That is, in plain English, there is no other location in "the church" that embraces as much sense and goodness as is entertained by myself and friends of Baltimore. Let the church move the "official organ" from here and her interests will, at once, sustain great loss for the want of our piety and powers. Bah! How much this whole article smells of infallibilty, the legitimate effects of a privileged press,—an "Official Organ." As it respects the attempts to "entrap" the editor in controversy, &c., we know not to whom he alludes. All we have done is to act on the defensive; to parry off his attacks upon us. But as he had ceased to implicate us we had signified our wish to cultivate peace with him. But it seems his wounded dignity will not let him be silent. He must attack by insinuations. Very well, if he keep on, he will give us a fair opportunity to satisfy our readers, that we are correct in our opinions about the tendencies of the official organ.

REV. A. MCCAINE.—This gentleman has been writing, for the Olive Branch, a series of letters, on the old controversy which led to the organization of the M. P. church. He brings things, both new and old out of his treasury. He handles the subject with giant ability.

Our warmest sympathies have always been with Mr. McCaine. We have no doubt but he is an honest man. In his History and Mystery of Methodist Episcopacy, he so uncovered the nakedness of Methodism, that the church, becoming alarmed, raised the hue and cry of "mad dog," and produced such an amount of excitement against him as caused many of his friends to abandon him and join in the general clamor. We never could find it in our heart to utter a syllable against him. The cry and abuse he received we well knew came from the mouths that wanted argument, and which had no other weapons of defence. We accord to the following tribute to Mr. McCaine, taken from an article in the last Protestant over the signature of Bartimeus, whom we presume to be the Rev. A. Shinn.

Additional facts have come to light, it seems, in regard to the mysteries of Methodist Episcopacy, and Alexander McCaine has taken hold of them. This man's pen is dreaded by Mr. Bond and his co-adjutors; for they know well that Alexander McCaine wields a powerful pen. He is sometimes too severe in his manner, and this is, regretted by his friends; but the treatment he has met with will furnish some apology, at least, if not a full justification. This "Defence of the Truth," in reply to the "Defence of our Fathers," is one of the ablest and most masterly productions that has appeared, on any subject, during the present century; and the pretensions, that the arguments of this book have been answered, is a mere burlesque, and an imposition upon the public mind, of which those who make the pretension ought to be ashamed. Clerical policy succeeded, however, in putting this formidable array of facts and arguments out of sight; and the author of the work had in a manner to retire in bandishment. He has recently made his appearance again, through the columns of the Olive Branch; and he probably feels somewhat like Samson did, when he said, "Strengthen me, I pray thee, only once, O God, that I may be at once avenged of the Philistines for my two eyes." Jud. 16. 28.

It appears from the following article that our Br. Stockton and his people, are about to build another church in Philadelphia:

NEW CHURCH.—The laying of the corner stone of the Methodist Protestant Church on Eleventh street, north of poplar lane, by the Rev. T. H. Stockton's congregation, was obliged to be postponed on Wednesday last, in consequence of the threatening aspect of the storm, which made its appearance about that time. It will, however, take place on Monday afternoon next, at 5 o'clock, on which occasion, the Rev. Thos. H. Stockton will deliver an address, which circumstance, together with the beauty of the location, which is upon that of Eleventh street that is now opening through, towards Columbia avenue, will, no doubt, call together many of our citizens, if the weather is favorable. The building is to be of stone, and is under contract to be enclosed by the first of December next. It reflects much credit upon the congregation, in thus early securing so valuable a site for the erection of a church, which we suppose from the location, has been obtained on very favorable terms. We know of no section of the city or the liberties where a church is more needed—certainly there is none more rapidly improving—than the one where the gentlemen are about erecting this house. The spot selected for the purpose is exceedingly beautiful, and though not immediate-hand they stretch far beyond to the north, while those of Green Hill and Tenth street seem in part to encircle and ornament this site, which like other churches located a few years since, must soon be surrounded with fine dwellings.—Phil. Chron.

MORE RADICALISM.—The New England Conference of the M. E. church recently closed its session. And though the official organ boasted that all was union, and that the appointments made by the Bishop were very judicious, yet the two churches in Lowell have nearly unanimously, by resolutions, rejected the preachers allotted to them, by the appointing authority, from the conviction that they were imposed on. The editor of the Lowell Advocate says: "the churches at Lowell never have, and do not now entertain the least idea of seceding from the M. E. church." Br. Editor, it is highly probable we have a little more experience in these matters than you have. And we will undertake to pledge our judgment in the case, that these churches, after what they have done, will either have to recede from their present position, and do works meet for repentance, or ultimately leave the establishment.—And they had better make up their minds to do the one or the other soon as possible.

From the Saturday Courier.

Extraordinary Imposition of the "Latter Day Saints"--Mormonsism—Matter for the consideration of every good citizen —Important Facts—All should feel that they have a direct interest in them

(Concluded.)

Of their treatment in Missouri we know nothing, except that the no doubt well deserved, though highly impolitic, punishment meted out to them, assumed an appearance of persecution which has greatly benefitted the cause of Mormonism. It awakend a sympathy precisely such as we see so often got up in behalf of even the very worst class of murderers and pirates. The moment legal conviction establishes guilt, that moment is a morbid sympathy excited in the breast of those who would sooner lavish their love on a convicted felon than bestow their cold charity on the honest and virtuous. The punishment they received in Missouri has doubtless swelled their numbers.

The only course to pursue against those marauders upon society, is for the press to hold up their conduct to the execration which it deserves, and for individuals in private life to take fitting occasions to unmask and expose their crimes. In this way the public may be put upon their guard, and especially that portion of it which is ignorant and stupid enough to give credence to Mormonism. The Courier in this respect has spoken timely and plainly. Years since we denounced this precious piece of hypocritical villany in no measured terms, and we shall not fail to continue the same denunciation against this, as we have been always ready to level against any species of villany and fraud. Had our exertions been seconded by the press generally, this hideous, naked monster would not now be rioting on the fair prairies of the West, breeding contention, and spreading its pestilence upon this country. It would ere this have shared the fate which has sunk in the dust every kindred imposture, from the earliest history of our country down to the insane ravings of the execrable Mathias. We shall not falter in the plain, straightforward course which a sense of duty dictates until, we see the ringleaders in this gross outrage consigned to that punishment which they so justly merit, and which there is no question they will ultimately receive.

Next to the warnings of the press, comes individual exertion. This, if judiciously exhibited, without violence or passion, and with the single purpose of exposing guilt, may be made effective. This was evinced at Frankford, in this county, a few months since, when an effectual check was put to their proceedings by a few seasonable remarks, made at the close of one of their gatherings, without any desire or attempt at disorder.—The proceedings, with some other matters in relation to the Mormons, have appeared in a pamphlet form. The remarks published as having been made by Mr. Lee, are very plain, and much to the purpose. He comes directly to the point. Though harsh in his terms, they appear fitting to the occasion, and we are assured have had the intended effect, as the Mormons, after the lapse of three or four months, have not again showed themselves there. As they embrace some facts not so generally known as they should be, we copy the following portions of the remarks of Mr. Lee, before the Mormon meeting at Frankford, Pa., after the close of a lecture on Mormonism.*

"Permission having been given for any to address the audience, who may see proper to do so at the close of the lecture, I take the liberty of making a few remarks. In doing so, I intend to be very brief and very plain.

I have charges to bring against the promulgators of the doctrines we have been listening to this evening, which I trust will go forward opening the eyes of every individual, and cause them to turn with disgust from these lying prophets, whom I here plainly and unhesitatingly brand, not only as religious imposters, but as swindlers.

In doing this I shall not attempt to expose the Mormon imposture, or to combat the creed by which they are striving to delude and deceive the weak minded and ignorant. It is not my intention to hold up, to scorn the miserable trick of the golden plates found in a potatoe, or some other field in the State of N. York, from which it is pretended their new religion has been derived. I shall have nothing to do with their blasphemous stories [illegible] with those who are weak enough to be gulled by them, but I wish to ask the attention of this audience, to the worldly, business matters which can be understood by every man, and upon the strength of which I here venture the bold and deliberate charge of swindling.

Joseph Smith, Jr. and Sidney Rigdon are the two acknowledged heads, plotters, contrivers, and in short the fathers of this "latter day," Mormon humbug.—They are the arch imposters—the wicked authors of this wicked scheme which the speaker to-night has been labouring to palm off upon the audience. I wish it to be distinctly borne in mind that these two men, Smith and Rigdon, are the avowed & acknowledged fabricators of the scheme of Mormonism. The speaker to-night is one of the tools, the pliant cat's paw, by which they are attempting to operate upon the community.

I hold in my hand a bank note—a ten dollar bank note, which, as I wish to ask the particular attention of the audience to, I will read.

It reads fairly—promises largely—and bears the veritable signatures of the arch impostors themselves, J. Smith, Jr. and S. Rigdon.

Now this $10 Mormon note is one of the grossest pieces of fraud in a mere pecuniary point of view—religion out of the question—that has ever been perpetrated in this swindling age—a downright, villainous piece of swindling.

In the first place, the plate itself, from which the worthless trash was printed, has never to this day, been paid for—the engraver, printer, paper maker, and all hard earning by this set of swindling hypocrites.

In the second place, thousands and thousands of the spurious trash was passed off for goods of all kinds, with no other earthly design or intention than that of swindling.

In the West in like manner thousands upon thousands of the trash have been passed off upon the honest farmer and the hard working mechanic.

But a few months ago both these speculating gamblers, these Mormon, latter day saints, who like, their tool this evening, busy themselves in running down the religion of others, and slander better men than they ever can hope to be, were in Philadelphia.

The owner of this note, a gentleman who is now in this room, called upon them —but they would not be seen. He saw one of their elders, who declared that Rigdon had been sick for six weeks in the city, but declared he did not know the house or the number, or even the street or part of the city in which his own suffering, sick brother resided. This monstrous inhumanity on one side, or deliberate lying on the other, with the prevarication and falsehood in relation to Smith also, convinced the holder of the note that he could obtain no satisfaction from those, who, if possessed of a particle of honesty would not have been ashamed to show their faces.

That they are swindlers in the rankest sense of the term is evident from the foregoing facts, as well as from the fact that their gambling bank was put into operation in direct, open violation of the laws of Ohio, in which State their swindling shop was located—that this $10 note is not now and never has been worth two cents, and in short, that for the same and similar offences, the grey-haired and comparatively innocent, Dr. Dyott is this very night incarcerated within the wall of the Eastern penitentiary, where these imposters ought to be.

Now, without any reference to the truth or falsehood of their new religion or the golden plates, which they had better convert into coin to pay off their notes—without regard to this latter day Mormonism, which is as much beneath the dignity of argument as they themselves are beneath contempt—I would ask one question.

I would ask this audience gravely to consider the question, whether any set of men, combining together to swindle and defraud the community, are to be believed in any scheme of religion, however plausible, which they may attempt to get up?

Is it at all likely men of such characters would be selected to promulgate divine truths? Are such men entitled to your confidence? Are they the kind of men who are fit to hold the strings of the purse into which they are persuading their poor dupes to pour in their money—their little all?

Confidence? Rather should they not be scouted from the society in which they are prowling like wolves in sheep's clothing "seeking whom they may devour;" scouted from the community which they disgrace? Or rather should not the strong arm of the law be made to punish those hypocritical imposters, whose sole practice, object, and business it is to deceive the weak-minded, to cheat the credulous, to rob the unsuspecting, and defraud the poor? They should be narrowly watched wherever they go; for men of such characters would no more hesitate to pick your pocket or seize any opportunity of robbing you, than they would to engage in this impious mockery of religion, this gross and wicked imposture."

Without note or comment we append the following paragraph from a letter to the Boston Traveller:

CRUEL MURDER.—Martin Harris, one of the earliest supporters of the Mormons, and the only wealthy man among them, in their origin, has been murdered. He spent all he was worth in supporting the delusion under which he labored, furnishing all the funds for the publication of the Mormon Bible.

He abandoned the Mormons, not long since, and delivered some lectures in opposition to their doctrines, and two or three weeks ago was found dead, having been shot through the head with a pistol. No doubt was entertained of his having been murdered.

SENTENCE OF DEATH.—At noon on Monday last Thomas H. Shuster, convicted of the murder of his wife, was called up to receive his sentence. He made his appearance in custody of the Sheriff, and although remarkable pale and somewhat emaciated, he stood up and listened with apparent indifference to the following address, made by Judge Conrad.

Thomas Shuster; after a liberal trial, in which you had the advantage of able and zealous counsel, you have been convicted of a murder in the first degree. Your victim was a helpless woman, and that woman was the wife whom you had sworn to cherish and protect. The crime was committed with the most fearful calmness.—You met her in the street and while your hand clasped hers, and your lips dropped expressions of gentleness and affection, you shot her through the heart. Your counsel have urged that an act so unnatural could be the result only of insanity; but in the absence of satisfactory testimony to sustain that allegation, a jury of your country has, at this court, after mature deliberation, believes justly and legally pronounced you guilty. The murder, thus deliberately and ruthlessly committed, did not take penalty which must fast follow it; for immediately afterwards you recognized and braved the doom which now awaits you. You committed the crime prepared to yield the life which it rendered forfeit; and that forfeiture is now, by the outraged laws of God and man demanded. It is to me sufficiently painful to do what the law requires; I will do no more. I will not echo the reproaches which your own conscience uttered, when on the night of the murder, you fell in an agony of tears upon the corpse of her whom you sent, in all the ripeness of her sins, into the presence of her Maker—reproaches which, unless yours be a heart of stone must have filled the cell of your captivity with the voices of accusation. I will not heighten the painfulness of this duty by a portaiture of your guiltiness; but it is proper that I should express the feelings inspired by the recklessness which from the first you have manifested. A disregard of death is in those who are conscious of rectitude and at peace with God, noble; but in one spotted and leprous with unrepented crime—one too on the verge of the grave—it is a spectacle of folly and guilt which, with the good, can excite no sentiment but horror. It may be that you are stimulated to this hardihood and recklessness by a secret hope of pardon; if so, it is my melancholly duty to extinguish that hope; to present you face to face with death, and after death the judgment; and to point you to that source from which alone you can now derive hope and succor —your Saviour and your God. Thomas Shuster, it is the judgment of the Court, that you be taken to the prison whence you came, and thence to the place of execution within the walls of the prison of the county of Philadelphia; and that you there be hanged by the neck until you are dead. And may God have mercy on your soul!—Phil. paper.

The constroversy between the Rev. Mr. Pierpoint and his parishoners is again in progress. The disputants appeared before the Council on Tuesday last, where the charges were read, in which the Rev. gentleman was accused of giving attention to mechanical pursuits, making school books, speaking in favor of abolition, imprisonment for debt, and declaiming against slavery and intemperance. He was also accused of levity, and want of reverence for the holy sanctuary, in some of his expressions in the pulpit. He stands charged with indelicate statements and allusions, in his representations of foreign countries, with untruthfulness, &c. The Council resolved to meet daily, and also determined that the witnesses should be examined under oath.

A man named Elijah Sims was drowned by the upsetting of a skiff some four or five miles above Zanesville on Friday last. His body was found the next morning.—Zanes. Gaz.

LYNCH LAW ON THE RIVER.—The Chicago American of the 3d, contains an account of the murder of a Mr. Campbell on Rock River, by a gang of horse-thieves, and of the summary vengeance of the 'regulators,' as they are called, on the murderers.

The country below Belvidere and north of the Illinois river, it appears, has been infested for a long time with black-legs, counterfeiters, horse-thieves, and other desperadoes, against whose depredations the people have been obliged to raise volunteer companies and anti-horse-thieves societies. Mr. Campell was actively engaged in getting one of these socities up, and in warning a family of noted horse-thieves the Driskells, that they must leave the county. Out of revenge, two of the sons notorious desperadoes, rode up to Campbell's house, and having called him out, shot him dead on the spot. The volunteer companies of Decalb and Winnebago counties started in pursuit, caught old Driskell and one of his sons, tried them before Judge Lynch, and convinced, that they were the cause, if not the perpetrators, of the murder, placed them about 10 rods off, giving them five minutes, and when the time expired the word was given, and the two fell pierced with some 50 balls. The company then started after the other Driskell, who had fled with a confederate, and for whose apprehension a reward of 500 dollars is offered.

The whole country is said to be in a state of great excitement, and the volunteer companies have been largely increased by the addition of the most respectable citizens, who were determined to defend lives and property.

LYNCHING IN CANADA.—The Cobourg Star, of June 30th, describes a horrible outrage committed in that town on the night of the 18th—Sunday—which it is actually an injustice to "Lynching" as practised in our Western wilds, to call even by that name of terror. A colored man named Carter, who keeps a grocery store in Cobourg, had married a young white woman, whereupon a party of young men assembled at the house of Carter, broke open the door, destroyed all the poor man's goods, "and drove him and his wife naked from their bed into the yard outside, where, having first shamefully abused, beaten and robbed him, horrible to relate, they seized the unfortunate woman threw her to the ground, and it is sworn to, that regardless of her piteous cries for mercy, four of the infuriate demons, we cannot call them men, gagged and held her fast, while at least four others of the party brutally assaulted and violated her person, and all this in presence of her miserable husband. Humanity shudders to think of such atrocity, and we are lost in community."

Warrants were issued against the monsters, but all had absconded save one, who after examination, was held to bail for trial. The authorities of the town are censured by the Star for not taking earlier and more effective measures to secure the guilty.

A liberal subscription has been made up in Cobourg to repair the loss of Carter, so far as it can be repaired by money.

IMPRISONMENT.—A letter has been received by the Hon. Daniel Webster, signed "Bernardius Castelli," stating that the Catholic Bishop of Detroit, Mich., Mr. Reese, "is confined in a dungeon of Rome without communication with any living person, and consequently, without the knowledge of the American Minister resident there—a target for the blackest calumnies, and a victim of the most atrocious persecutions from his colleagues here in religious matters. He was summoned to Rome towards the end of 1838 if I am not mistaken; and in 1839, when I made his acquaintance, he was confined in a convent under an ecclesiastic prosecution. On the process being completed he was ordered to resign.—This he refused to do; and then he was thrown into the dungeon, perhaps of the Inquisition, where three other Bishops are lying. There he is overwhelmed with sufferings, and tortured to oblige him to resign and all possible measures were taken to prevent him from invoking the protection of the diplomatic agents of his country. A similar case had happened to the Bishop of Philadelphia, Mr. Conwell. But this prelate, whilst in the same position of Mr. Reese, was fortunate enough to make his escape from Rome, and, arrested in Paris, under Charles the Xth, by order of the Pope, was set at liberty through the intervention of the American Minister."

ANOTHER GREAT BANK ROBBERY.—The Branch of the State Bank of Illinois, at Jacksonsville, was robbed on the 13th inst. of $90,000. The President, Mr. J. P. Wilkinson, who offers a reward of $5000 for the recovery of the money, and the detection of the robbers, says:

"The doors were entered by false keys. The following is the probable amount taken by the robber, to wit: $78,000 in paper, the balance mostly in notes of the Branches, and Bank of Illinois."

In addition to the above, the St. Louis New Era of the 13th, has the following:

"We learn in addition to what is stated, that the books, papers and evidences of debt were cut up, mutilated and destroyed by the robbers—for there must have been several persons engaged in it; and that part of the banking house was occupied, as a residence by the Teller."

CAPTAIN GORHAM.—This individual, who is likely to become somewhat notorious, in consequence of the abandonment of the ship Charles, has published a long card in the Portland Advertiser, in which he states that the charges made against him in the various articles published in the newspapers are not true—and gives a different verson of the several stories. To the charge of poisoning his wife and murdering his children, he says:

"Thank God, my children are living to refute so much of the vile calumny. My wife was indeed taken suddenly and dangerously sick, but she also by God's blessing recovered. I was indeed arrested on the horrible charge of poisoning my wife, and on full examination discharged. Not satisfied, my enemies caused me again to be arrested, and I demanded to be bound over, that a grand jury might have an opportunity to investigate the facts. Such a jury did investigate the case—my wife appeared before them—under the direction of able counsel, and refused to find a bill of indictment, and I was again discharged."

In regard to the loss of the brig Susan Elizabeth, Timo C. Kendall, agent for the Tremont Insurance Company, and Samuel Pearce, agent for the Mercantile Marine Insurance Company, both give certificates of satisfaction with his conduct in the matter. He closes with the following paragraphs:

"In regard to the abandonment of the Charles, I am confident I can convince the public of the necessity, as it then appeared, of my so doing, and the purity of my motives. I have had command of her for eighteen months, and believe I have had the entire confidence of her owners, as I have done my duty to them as far as I have been able, without regard to my own comfort or interest, and refer to them for my character and conduct while I have been in their employ, up to this time.

"Thus have I adverted to all the libellous charges made against me. I have done it for the purpose solely of inducing the public not to pre-judge my cause, and thus complete the ruin of a man, who, I trust to show, has been only unfortunate. Exemption from error I do not claim; that I may have done wrong, I will not now deny—for who liveth and sinneth not? But that I am not the vile wretch that I am charged in those publications of being I hope to prove to the world, when I meet my accusers in a court or courts of justice."

We shall not be able to make up a definite opinion in this case, until we hear the statement of the passengers who were put on Board the Louis XIV.

UNITED STATES BANK SUIT.—Wm. Ayres, Esq. one of the Directors of the United States Bank, residing at Harrisburgh, has publicly protested against the suit com- against Mr. Biddle. He alleges that it will result in an expensive piece of litigation, which will tend to exhaust the resources of the Bank, without any adequate hope of being remunerated. He farther alleges that it has the appearance of personal spleen and persecution, because others as culpable as Mr. Biddle, are not also made the subjects of legal prosecution. He thinks the institution wants repose.

HARRIS' PITTSBURG GENERAL BUSINESS DIRECTORY.—This work has now advanced to 200 pages, and all who wish to have their cards, notices or directories in this very useful work, which will be widely circulated, are requested to send them in without delay or they will be too late.—Pitts. Int.

Our farmers are now in the midst of harvest. The wheat crop, from what we can learn, will be poor, yielding perhaps not more than one-half or three-fourths as much as last year. The corn crop, so far, promises well.—Ohio States., 21*st inst.*

THE FRIGATE MISSISSIPPI.—This noble vessel, now lying at the Navy Yard is visited by great numbers of our citizens as well as by strangers. The "Mississippi" may now be considered a chief "lion" of Philadelphia.—Bick.

The water is low—only 22 inches in the channel. Flour is at a stand in Pittsburgh and all the other cities—4,25 from wagons to-day. New hay $11 to $12 per ton.—Harris.

IMPORTANT TO AMERICAN FARMERS—The Corn Law Question in England.—It appears certain that there is now awakened throughout England a feeling such as has never before been aroused. The corn laws have had their wickedness pretty generally exhibited. The people are determined. They think that they have argued this corn law question long enough. The pressure on the operative multitudes is becoming too strong and threatening for prolonged reasonings. The season of action is arrived, and it cannot come more favourably for the national interest. The announced purpose of the Queen's Ministers, is as the setting in of the tide. Let it rush on, and sweep before it all the defences of this inhuman monopoly.

If there could be any thing like free trade between the United States and England, so far as our wheat and corn are concerned—we could not only be clear of debt to that country in a very short time, but we could bring to the agricultural districts of the United States, in less than six months, more than ten millions of dollars, for the sale of our pent-up products, which do not now command a fair price.

VERY IMPORTANT—ANOTHER REVOLUTION IN PERU.—By the New York Herald we learn that another revolution has broken out in Peru, and that General Santa Cruz is by this time in possession of Lima.

A gentleman who left Lima on the 3d of last May, and was at Payta on the 11th and 12th, reports that on the latter day the troops of Santa Cruz marched in and took that town. He saw the troops himself, and states farther that the officers of Gamarra had embarked on board an American whale ship. This gentleman also reports that Flores had aided Santa Cruz with a regiment of cavalry, and promised him a battalion of troops.

Piaira was in possession of the forces of Santa Cruz, under the command of Lieut. Col. Angulo, formerly an adjutant to the Commander-in-chief.

HE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

NESDAY, ... JULY 28, 1841.

We will be thankful to "G." for the Es- e contemplates writing.

The Rev. Mr. Smith, of Salem, Mass., who nounced Universalism, is by invitation of rgy of that place, delivering lectures on that t, in Lowell, Mass.

ECUTIVE APPOINTMENT.—Charles Anthony, ingfield, has been appointed, by the Presi- District Attorney for the State of Ohio, l Hamilton removed.

URCH CONSTITUTED.—We learn from the ard that a Baptist church of eleven mem- was constituted in the city of Iowa, on 6th ult., after which two were received by rsion.

RISTIAN WORLD.—The July number of the tian World is received. From the slight pe- s we have given it, it appears excellent.— readers in this quarter are much pleased the World.

WA CITY STANDARD.—This is the name of a paper from the city of Iowa; a city of yesterday the Standard exhibits as much of a business and respectable appearance as any paper from sburgh or Cincinnati. It is another evidence e rapidity of improvements in the Far West. es spring up and empires rise in the wilder- as by magic.

SLIGHT MISTAKE.—The Philadelphia Chron- hin replying to a letter of admonition, from neighbor of Putman, styles him his "Hoosier spondent." A slight mistake, this, we are ckeyes" about here. You do not enter the sier country until you pass some one hundred s West.

OUTH'S MAGAZINE.—This work published by njamin F. Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa., is a pam- t of 32 pages, issued monthly at $1 in ad- ce. The 7th No. is before us. Its reading is well pted to the entertainment of children. The k is deserving of patronage, especially by the tern public.

UTICA CONVENTION.—The committee appoin- by this convention, to issue a call for a con- tion of Seceding Methodists, with a view to n an association, &c., have given notice that said convention will meet on the 31st of Au- t, at Highbridge, Onondago county, New rk. The call embraces none but those who fa- congregationalism, and go the farthest lengths the abolition enterprize.

☞Mr. F. S. Key, in his address at the Sabbath hool celebration, in Washington D. C., on the y of our National Independence, delivered the lowing forcible sentiments:

"If you educate the rising generation as chris- ans, they will be patriots. If you thus make em christians and patriots, what more can the ation want? What internal dissensions can stroy such a nation—what outward evils assail ? The world in arms cannot overthrow it.— nnipotence is pledged to preserve it."

MINISTERIAL EXPENCES.—The S. W. C. Ad- cate, at Nashville Tenn, is discussing the opriety of allowing single presiding elders "lo- l expences." Some go for such hiring a room nd boarding to accommodate their leisure hours reading and improvement. All well enough nen the church is able, but it shows that the economy of Methodism" can with great facility, dopt itself to all the cash it can command. The itor thinks, and correctly too, that the moneys ollected for quarterage should not thus be appro- riated; but indicate a provision for such expen- es might be made in another way in accordance ith discipline.

☞We give the following from the Cincinna Gazette, without placing much reliance on he rumor:

"A SPEC OF WAR.—a private letter from a ery respectable gentlemen in Philadelphia, was eceived in this city on Saturday, which created uite a sensation. The writer advises that Mr. ox, the British Minister at Washington, had eceived dispatches from his government ordering im to demand of ours the immediate discharge f McLeod, and in case of refusal, to demand his assports, and leave the country! These dis- atches were accompanied by a private letter rom Lord Palmerston, advising him that it would e best—or most politic—to make the purport of hese dispatches known to our government unof- ficially—in a friendly way—before an official communication of them is made—in order, doubt- ess, to give Brother Jonathan time to make up is mind what to do! Mr. Fox, it is said, has complied with his instructions.

"Again, the letter states, that when Mr Ste- phenson, our Minister in London, after waiting for months, with becoming patience, for an an- swer to his demand for reparation for the destruc- tion of the Caroline, called upon Lord Palmerston to inquire when a reply might be expected, he was told by his Lordship that it had already been prepared—would be delivered when desired—and was a declaration of war!

"The writer of the letter is a gentleman of the first respectability, and gives unquestionable au- thority for what he writes—and we are informed that private letters from Washington received yesterday, confirm the main facts."

☞Whose blood does not freeze in his veins at the recital of such cold blooded murders as the following! What will this nation come to yet?

MURDER IN COLD BLOOD.—On the 10th inst., from "four to seven hundred" lawless wretches, principally from Bourbon county, went to the jail at Williamstown, in Grant county, Ky., and forcibly took therefrom two criminals by the name of Maythe & Couch committed a short time since on a charge of robbing and cutting the throat of a drover by the name of Utterback, from Bourbon county, and with the utmost coolness and deliberation, hung them to the tree under which Utterback was found; not "without bene- fit of clergy," but without the intervention of judge, jury, or sheriff! It seems that Utterback's wounds, contrary to expectation, were not like- ly to prove fatal, and the mobocrats fearing that they would be cheated out of a hanging scene, under the law, took it into their own hands, and thus murdered the unfortunate criminals in cold blood.

The following extract of a letter from a citizen of Grant county, to his friend in Cincinnati, will give the reader some idea of the coolness and order with which the mob proceeded in their law- less work of death. It is from the Cincinnati Chronicle of the 12th inst.—Urbana Citizen.

"The citizens of this county, with few excep- tions, took no part. I myself, took none, only I endeavored to save Couch; but the mob were deaf to all entreaties, as they refused to hear anything that might be said in favor of giving the culprits any further time to prepare for their cruel deeds. Both of the robbers confess the crime of robbing Utterback and having cut his throat: but made no further confessions. Couch declared under the gallows that this crime was the only one he had ever committed, and called God to witness the truth of what he said. Maythe said that all he had stolen would not amount to more than $2,50, and called on his Maker to witness the same. They were attended to the place of execution by a minister of the Gospel, who per- formed his duty in a very solemn manner by sup- plication to the Throne of Grace in their behalf. Couch appeared very much affected, and talked of his wife and children in a very affectionate manner, and then prayed to his Maker to give him His forgiveness for all crimes, and said he was prepared to meet his fate that awaited him. Maythe said he was not prepared, and earnestly requested further time to prepare himself, as he believed there was a just God, that would punish His creatures for all their crimes, and prayed the mob to give him until Monday to prepare his mind for the fate that awaited him, but they refused. The mob then took them to the gallows, and af- ter Maythe and Couch shook hands, saying they hoped to meet in a better world, they were hang- ed up.—Couch suffered but a short time; Maythe suffered very much

You may inform Couch's friends that if they have any business to transact in relation of this unfortunate affair, they can come and be treated as gentlemen. In haste, I remain yours,

A. VALLANDINGHAM.

N. B.—The names of most of the mob can be ascertained, and, I have no doubt, the Court will be compelled to have all those that were concern- ed, indicted.

CONGRESS.—The great question of in- terest, to all the parties, before this body, is, the establishment of a National Bank. Some say that there is little doubt, at pres- ent, but what both Houses will agree, by large majorities, upon a charter for such an institution, and that the President will sign the bill, though others think the latter doubtful.

The House, says the Lebanon (O.) Star, which so well deserved the censure of the press and the people, for its delay in or- ganizing, now challenges the admiration of the country, for its industry and deci- sive action upon several very important measures. This body, by the operation of the previous question, (by the bye, one of the best inventions of modern times,) and the limitation of speakers to one hour, has thrown itself far in advance of the Senate. It has passed four important bills, viz: The Distribution and Pre-Emp- tion Bill, the Loan Bill, which authorises the President to borrow $12,000,000 to pay the debts, &c, and the Naval Arma- ment Bill, which proposes to expend in Fortifications, the sum of $1,974,57 86, and the Navy Pension Bill, which appro- priates $139,566 06, for the payment of pensions and half-pay chargeable on the Navy Pension Fund. The committee on the Currency, have also been instructed, at an informal meeting of the House, to report immediately a Bank Bill, similar to Mr. Clay's project and particularly as regards the branching power.

GRAHAM'S LADY'S AND GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE, for August, is received. This is a splendid number. It is ornamented with a plate of the latest fashions—three figures handsomely colored; Lacework for the ladies; two pages of music, and an inimitable Mezzotinto engraving on steel by Sartain—"The Penitent Son," than which nothing can be more striking and affecting. It is stated that the embel- lishments of this number cost the propri- etor thirteen hundred dollars exclusive of paper, printing and original literary mat- ter, from eminent pens.

Eight copies of the work, yearly, will be furnished to clubs for $15 cash, or nine copies from July, 1841, to January, 1842, being the current volume of six months, for $10 cash, free of postage.

WESTERN FARMER AND GARDENER.—The July number of this magazine is received, with its usual amount of interesting Agri- cultural matter. The proposals for the 3d volume in our next.

AFFECTING INCIDENT AT THE REMOVAL OF THE RE- MAINS OF GEN. HARRISON.

The correspondent of the Balt. Sun, speak- ing of the removal of the late President's re- mains, relates the following incident:

"Approaching the brow of the hill near what was once the private residence of the immortal Washington, I beheld a little in advance of me, a solitary individual, gazing intently on the flying pagaent, as it wheeled along the winding track distant in the vale below. He was above the ordinary height, dressed in black, with his hat pressed down upon his brows, his back towards me. As I halted within a few feet behind him, I felt that this solitary stranger's heart beat some- what in unison with my own, and I stood still, as if by impulse, not wishing to disturb his seem- ing quiet. As the train of cars diminished in the distance, and entered the gorge of hills almost out of view, the stranger raised his head toward heaven, and in a voice tremulous with agitation, he fervently exclaimed,—"farewell, thou hero and patriot—the poor man's friend, farewell." And turning on his heel, he saw me, and dropping his head, with a partial bow or salutation, passed with a quick and hurried step by me. But I saw that the fountains of his soul were broken. The big tears were coursing down his manly cheeks, and glistening in his deep dark eye. I wept also, as he walked away, and loved him for his secret sorrow. It was Gen. Murphy, of Ohio, the early and ardent friend of General Harrison, whose el- oquence had shaken the Western country, and gained him the title of the Patrick Henry of the West.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE, July 28.—Flour 4,50; wheat 80 cents.

BALTIMORE, July 17.—Flour—The price of Howard street flour has been rather unsettled —at the close of last and the beginning of the present week, sales were made at 5,56¼ a 5,50, and 5 a 600 bbls. sold at the latter price; subse- quently the article has rallied a little, and 1 a 200 bbls. have been disposed of at 5,62½; we question, however, if this latter is the fair mar- ket price, although holders generally demand it. The stock continues light. The price last paid from the cars and wagons was 5,50. We have no quotation to give to City Mills; the last sales were at 5,75. Millers are now about commen- cing to grind from new wheat, and the price will be established by them soon, supposed at 6,00 per barrel.

The Home Market—There were about 250 head of beef cattle in market on Monday; but few, however, were taken by the butchers. About 100 of the better quality sold at 6 a 7,00, per 100 lbs., presumed for another market, and the remainder laid over.—Lyford.

MASSILLON, July 15.—Flour, 4,75; Wheat 1,00.—Gazette.

PHILADELPHIA, July 20.—Flour—The markets continue very inactive—the stock light, receipts small, and prices remain as last week. We hear of sales of 1000 bbls. superfine Flour for export, at 5,37½, fresh ground may still be quoted at 5,58.

Cattle Market—Beef Cattle, offered 550, of which near 400 sold at 5½ a 6c.—Bicknell.

ITEMS.

The ceremony of laying the corner stone of a new Methodist Protestant Chapel on Eleventh street near Master, took place on Monday afternoon, agreeable to notice, in the presence of a large concourse of spectators. The weather being exceedingly propitious—the location and scenery around, very beautiful—and the nature of the ceremony—all combined to make the oc- casion one of great interest. The meeting was opened with prayer by Rev W Reeves, of the Pitts- burg Conference; after which the Rev. Thos. H. Stockton addressed the audience in a strain of el- oquence and fervor which we have seldom heard equalled. His allusions to the constitution and government of the United States were worthy of all commendation. The whole address was listen- ed to with marked attention by the very respect- ble assemblage; it certainly did great credit to the head and heart of the distinguished speaker.

The services were closed by a very appropriate prayer by Rev. Wm. Kesley.

A very considerable amount of money and build- ing materials was subscribed on the spot, to- ward the erection of the chapel, which, it is said is to be enclosed by the first of December next.— Phil. Chron., 21st inst.

Advice should fall as the dew, not overwhelm as the shower.

The village of Waterford, N. Y., was nearly destroyed by fire on Saturday. Eighty-eight buildings were consumed, and the fire was stayed by the Troy firemen. Loss at least $150,000.— What an awful calamity for so beautiful a town!

Judge Webb, the Texian Minister, has been rudely ejected from Vera Cruz. It is expected that war will ensue in consequence.

THE DIFFERENCE.—Choice pieces of beef are selling in the Pittsburgh market at 6 a 7 cents per lb.; and in this city at 14 a 16! A hundred per cent, difference.—Phil. Cour.

The city of St. Louis, has commenced the is- sue of small bills, denominated warrants.

News from Mexico to the middle of May men- tions the occurrence of an earthquake about two months previous, which caused some damage in the State of San Luis. A convoy of money on its way from Zacatecas to Saltillo, had several men and mules and money bags buried under the ruins of the houses where they had halted at night.

TO KEEP ICE.—The Kentucky Farmer recom- mends those who buy ice for the day, to put it into a barrel and cover it over with saw dust, and keep the barrel in a cool place. In this way ice is kept free from melting.

A man in Rochester, N. Y., had his coat re- cently stolen from him. Shortly afterwards see- ing it lying upon a canal boat, he took possession, and upon feeling in the pockets, he found a hand- some supply of cash—an article which had here- tofore been rather scarce in those receptacles.

IS IT BEST TO HAVE ONE?—The celebrated wall of China, said to have been erected in the 213 B. C., is 714 German miles long, 14 feet thick, and 26 feet high; so that, with the same materials, a wall one foot in thickness, and 23 feet high, might be carried round the whole world.

Gen. McDonnell is now in command of the army of Canada. He was at the battle of Water- loo with Wellington.

Maj. Gen. Scott has issued an order assuming the command of the army, and announcing Lieu- tenant B. R. Alden and F. E. Keyes as his Aids.

PENNSYLVANIA HALL.—The jury in the case of the Pennsylvania Hall, which, it will be recollec- ted, was set on fire, had more than thirty mee- tings, before coming to a verdict of damages. On Tuesday, five of them reported the damages at 33,000 dollars, and the sixth made a counter re- port, awarding nothing. It will be recollected that the damages originally claimed, were set down at 120,000 dollars. The report will now come up for confirmation before the Judges of the Court of General Sessions.

THE SILK CULTURE IN PENNSYLVANIA.—Judge Blythe, ex-collector of this port, is engaged in feeding several million of silk worms at his Co- coonery, near Harrisburgh. Success to the Judge in his new avocation, for we truly believe that any one who will aid in establishing this new branch of national industry, is doing the service of true patriotism. Now that the foolishness of speculations in trees has passed into admonitory history—we may have the business started on the true foundation of individual enterprise.

SICKNESS AT HAVANA.—Captain Hagar, of the Magnolia, at New York from Havana, reports the fever to be very virulent. Many Americans have died, and some vessels had lost all the mates, and more than half the crews.

THE EFFECT OF COMBINATIONS.—There are more than 1000 journeyman hatters out of em- ployment in London and the North of England, in consequence of their demanding an advance of wages and regulation of prices; the strike has continued 11 weeks, and there is no chance of a settlement. This applies to the fur hats; and as the country shop keepers cannot get a supply of their beavers, they are compelled to sell silk so that the makers of the latter sort of goods, are now reaping a rich harvest.

ANOTHER VETERAN GONE.—The Honorable Humphrey Marshall died recently at his residence in Kentucky, at a very advanced age. He was in his earlier life a prominent politician, and was one of the early Senators of the United States from the State of Kentucky, after her admission into the Union. He entered the Senate on the 4th of March, 1795, and served to the 3d of March, 1801. His colleague, whilst he was in the Senate, was the Hon. Buckner Thurston, now of Washington city, who filled his station in the Senate for fifteen successive years.

NEW SURGICAL OPERATION.—We perceive by the New York papers, that a very interesting and important surgical operation was successfully per- formed last week by Dr. J. W. Schmidt, of that city. The operation consists of the dividing of the Geniohyglossus muscle, and its effect is the complete cure of stammering. It was performed in a masterly manner, in the presence of the cel- ebrated surgeon Dr. Mott. Dr. Schmidt, who, by the way, is one of the most successful and rap- idly rising surgeons of our country, is certainly entitled to distinguished credit in the case, for establishing so interesting an era in our surgi- cal annals—this being the first time the opera- tion has been performed in this country.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From Bicknell's Reporter.

FOURTEEN DAYS LATER

FROM ENGLAND.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP

CALEDONIA,

AT BOSTON.

The steamship Caledonia arrived at Boston on Saturday at one o'clock, after a passage of 14 days and 19 hours. She reached Halifax in 11 days and 5 hours.

The news, as will be preceived, is of an import- ant character, being no less than a dissolution of Parliament—a General Election—dreadful riots, and loss of life—the arrival of an overland mail from India—a slight rise in cotton—and the set- tlement of the Turco-Egyptain Question. The Caledonia brought 74 passengers.

Samuel Jaudon, Esq., returned in the Caledo- nia, and is now, we believe in this city.

The Acadia, arrived home on the morning of the 29th, in ten and a half days from Halifax.

The Great Western had not arrived at Bristol —16 days out.

Trade in the manufacturing districts was bet- ter. Cotton had improved in demand, and 1-8 a 1-4 in price for American descriptions. Very lit- tle change in corn. The prospect for the crops was not quite so promising. Money in London was worth 5 per cent per annum, and many heavy failures had taken place.

The French loan had been reduced from £18,- 000,000 to £9,000,000 in consequence of the ex- tent of the Austrian loan.

It is stated that the present visit of the King of the Belgians to London has reference to a contemplated marriage of the brother of Prince Albert with the Princess Clementine, only un- married daughter of Louis Phillippe.

There have been serious riots in Liverpool, Carlisle, Blackburn, Manchester, Edinburgh, Nottingham, Cambridge, Kensington, and the Tower Hamlets; and several persons stabbed, and some died of excitement.

Whitmore, Wells & Whitmore, bankers of London have failed.

The Pollux steamer has been lost off the island of Elba. Only one drowned.

Great activity prevails all over France and England, in fitting out ships of war. The follow- ing ships of war will be launched this summer, in addition to the Trafalgar first rate:—Hindostan 80, at Plymouth, the 2d of August; Collingwood, 80, at Pembroke, the 17th of August; Cambrian, 36, at Pembroke, the 3d of July: and Growler, steam vessel, at Chatham, the first week in Au- gust.

The King and Queen of the Belgians and suite arrived at Buckingham Palace, London, on the 23d ult.

Mr. More O'Ferrall, Secretary of the Admi- ralty, has the post of Financial Secretary of the Treasury, vice Gordon. O'Ferrall is succeeded at the Admirality by Mr Parker, M. P. for Shef- field.

OFFICE OF PRINCIPAL PAINTER IN ORDINARY TO THE QUEEN.—To this situation, which was held by the late Sir David Wilkie, her Majesty has to appoint Mr. George Hayter.

THE QUEEN'S NEW COUNSEL.—Mr. Whately and Mr. Godson, M. P., of the Oxford circuit; Mr. Knowles, Mr. Bar-s, and the Hon. Mr. Stu- art Wortley, of the Northern circuit; Mr. Sutton Sharpe, and Mr. Austin.

MEMBERS RETURNED.—The conservative mem- bers returned are 110—the radical members 77. The conservatives gain is 30, the radical 16— leaving a majority in favor of conservatism of 14 or 28 votes on a division, in the House of Com- mons.—Liverpool Mail, July 1.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT—THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.—The proceedings of Parliament during the last few hours of its existence are of little interest. On June 22d, the Royal assent having been given to a number of bills, her Majesty ar- rived at the house shortly after two o'clock, and the Commons being summoned to attend, deliv- ered the following speech—

"My Lords and Gentlemen—

"On a full consideration of the present state of public affairs, I have come to the determina- tion of proroging this Parliament, with a view to its immediate dissolution.

"The paramount importance of the trade and industry of the country, and my anxiety that the exingencies of the public service should be provided for in the manner least burdensome to the community, have induced me to resort to the means which the constitution has entrusted to me of ascertaining the sense of my people up- on matters which so deeply concern their welfare.

"I entertain the hope that the progress of pub- lic business may be facilitated, and that divi- sions injurious to the course of steady policy, useful legislation may be removed by the author- ity of a new Parliament, which I shall direct to be summoned without delay.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"I thank you for the readiness with which you have voted the sums necessary for the civil and military establishments

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"In the exercise of my prerogative, I can have no other object than securing the rights and pro- moting the interests of my subjects; and I rely on the co-operation of my Parliament, and loy- al zeal of my people, for support in the adoption of such measures as are necessary to maintain that high station amongst the nations of the world which it has pleased Divine Providence to assign to this country."

The Lord Chancellor than declared Parlia- ment prorogued, and a royal proclamation was issued immediately after, dissolving the present Parliament and for the calling of another, the writs for which are returnable on the 19th of Au- gust.

THE PRESIDENT STEAMER.—The following let- ter, dated, Naples, June 12, has been received in Paris. The writer is a very respectable Eng- lish resident in that city.—"Capt. Hammond, of the British brig Venus, which arrived here from Newfoundland on the 7th inst. reports that he had on his voyage from Cadiz to Newfoundland, in the middle of April last, passed a large steam- er drifting on the ice, in which she must shortly after been blocked up. The captain of the brig hoisted his number, and the steamer in answer, the British flag. The brig not having been re- ported by the steamer, which was endeavoring to proceed homewards, Capt. Hammond suppo- ses it must have been the President. He was obliged to make a circuit of more than 150 miles to avoid running into the same predicament.— Whether the steamer seen was the President or not, there is no doubt of the fact of her having been seen."

COMPARATIVE LOSS AND GAIN.—The returns to the new Parliament, (including one from Scotland, Leith) up to Friday evening, July 2d received in London, are:

Liberals,	159
Tories,	145
Majority for the Liberals,	14

The total amount of the University, city and borough constituency of England is 341, of which as above seen, 303 have been elected. It is stated that the comparative loss and gain to the two parties, that the tories have a majority in this respect, against the liberals of 9, or 18 votes on a division.

ELECTION RIOTS.—THE MILITARY CALLED OUT.—MEN KILLED!!!—In Liverpool and other places most disgraceful riots ending in the death of several persons, have occurred. On the 30th ult., a large body of Irishmen attacked a party of ship carpenters, and assaulted them with brick bats, bludgeons, &c. The whole town was in a complete uproar. The mounted police were at hand, and charged upon the rioters, when sev- eral were severely wounded, and upwards of 80 persons taken into custody.

In Carlisle a similar scene took place at the election, when the military were called out, and two men were killed in the affray. This is only a specimen of the state of the whole country at this time.

GREECE.—Our accounts from Greece represent the diffusion of the spirit of insurrection as gen- eral. In the Peloponnesus the desertion among the royal troops was increasing, and the insur- gents in Dreto were receiving reinforcements from that quarter. The insurgent chief, Valen- zas, was maintaining his ground at Mt. Olympus. On the 2d of June he had a body of 1200 men well armed under his command.

A report reached Athens on the 8th, that se- rious disturbances had broken out at Jania, where it is said, the Turks had massacred the christian population. The Queen was not ex- pected back in Athens before autumn.

INSURRECTION OF CANDIA.—From Candia the accounts received are dubious. The Portfolio Maltese, of the 14th ult., gives a rumor, which it does not credit, of a battle between the Greeks and Turks, in which the former lost 500 men, but slew 1000 Turks and took 500 prisoners. The paper has been advised that another affair hap- pened on the 28th May, when the Greeks lost 35 men and the Turks 185. The insurgents were supposed to amount already to 15,000 well armed men, while recruits and arms were daily being landed. Tahir Pacha was to make a gen- eral attack on the 30th May.

The latest news from the different parts of the Levant is of a somewhat contradictory nature.

It is however, stated positively, that Mehemet Ali has accepted the terms of the Porte, and has caused his new hatti-scheriff of investure to be solemnly promulgated.

Arrival of the overland mail—China and In- dia.—Another overland mail arrived in London on the 1st inst., but the news is of little impor- tance; indeed, it appears that nothing has been received at Bombay from China, of a date more recent than that sent to Europe by the former mail.

CHRISTIAN WORLD.—The Address of P. R. Hitt, is Logan, Hocking Ohio. Did we not give it before?

RUDDELL'S MILLS, BOURBON, KY., JUNE 12.

Br. Springer: After a severe affliction of bet- ter than three months, I am under the necessity of leaving my station, this is therefore to notify the President, that Ruddell's Mills circuit is without a preacher, if you will please give the same a place in your paper. J. G. LAMPER.

A camp-meeting for Mt. Vernon circuit will be held on the old camp-ground, 5 miles north-west of Mt. Vernon, commencing on the 13th of Au- gust, to which we invite the following named brethren, viz:—Springer, Marshall, Maynard, Kinney, Thrap, Myers, Mercer, Dorcus, toget- er with all others who can attend.

C. CADDY, Sup't.,
J. B. ROBERTS, Ass't.

Frederick, Knox, O., July 17, 1841.

Such is the press of business upon our hands at the present, that it is with reluctance we yield our consent to comply with the pressing request to attend the Mt. Vernon camp-meeting, though under other circumstances it would be a pleasure. But such duties we cannot consci- entiously cast off; if, therefore, it will suit the con- venience of some of the brethren to call with us, on the Wednesday previous to the meeting, so that we can go a few miles the same eve- ning we will accompany them to Mt. Vernon.— ED.

CAMP-MEETINGS IN THE OHIO DISTRICT.

In the arrangements for camp-meetings and quarterly meetings the present season, I find that our brethren of some contiguous circuits have unwittingly fixed upon the same time, and have mutually solicited ministerial aid. As therefore some of the preachers are invited and expected to attend at different points at the same time, I fear the evils of disappointment and lack of help at some of the meetings. In view of preventing as far as may be this unpleasant result, the breth- ren will permit me, through this medium, to of- fer a few suggestions, below respectfully submit- ted.

The appointments already published are as fol- low:

Camp-meeting in Lima circuit, near West- minster, Aug. 6.—J. M. Young, superintendent. Those brethren from Miami, Union and Findley circuits, who can do so, are solicited to attend.

Camp-meeting in Findley circuit, near Wil liamstown, Aug. 13.—J Guest, Sup't.

Camp-meeting in Miami circuit, near Sidney, same time.—J. M. Flood, Sup't.

Quarterly meeting for Twin creek circuit, near Oxford, same time.—J. Flood, Sup't.

The Findley meeting, from its remoteness, will undoubtedly be necessitous.

Then the Miami meeting, I fear, may be crip- pled by the other meetings simultaneously held, north and south.

Will it not be well for the ministers in Lima circuit to divide—for our aged Br. Keran, (if able,) Br. Young and Br. Besse, to attend either the Findley or the Miami camp-meeting, as may be determined between themselves?

Then, cannot Br. Hunt and colleague, the two old Br. Inskeeps, Br. Davis, Br. Hamilton and Dr. Green, of Union circuit, and Br. D. Moore, of Miami circuit, attend the Findley camp-meeting?

At the same time, if Br. McGuire, Br. Crall, of Springfield, Br. T. Fall, and any other unsta- tioned ministers or preachers from Springfield or Union circuit, who have it in their power, will attend the Miami camp-meeting, they will be gratefully and cordially received as "helpers in Christ Jesus." Also, Br. Betson and Br. Ste- phens, jr., if they can attend the Lima and Mi- ami camp-meetings.

Camp-meeting in Union circuit, near Middle- burg, Aug. 20.—J. C. Hunt, Superintendent.— The brethren of Findley, Lima, Springfield and Miami circuits, and any others who can are soli- cited to attend.

Camp-meeting in Rehoboth circuit, at Brother Floyd's, near Clarksville, same time.—R. Dob- bins, Sup't.

Then, on the Thursday following, (26th) is to commence a protracted meeting, at Pt. William, Xenia circuit, to close on the Sunday evening preceding the conference. Br. D. hopes it will suit the brethren to the south, to attend one or both of these meetings on their way to confer- ence. He particularly solicits the attendance of Brs. Snethen, McGuire, Evans, Hughey, Boyd, Barnes, G. G. Moore, Evans, Rose and Edwards, and any others who can come and help. I hope Br. Ostrom will attend as many of the meetings as he can.

I have not information of the time of the Cin cinnati camp-meeting.

I trust that any other ministering brethren, either itinerant or unstationed, who may happen not to be named in the above notices, will con- sider themselves also to be kindly solicited to attend any of the above named meetings.

May kind heaven smile upon the efforts of His servants, and send gracious and glorious displays of His saving and sanctifying power. Amen.

A. H. BASSETT.

Washington C. H., Ohio, July 15, 1841.

The fourth quarterly meeting for Newark cir- cuit, will be held at Bethlehem meeting house, to commence Saturday the 14th of August next, at 1 o'clock P. M. Yourself, Mr. Editor, Brs. J. Wilson, T. Fairchild, W. Marshall, W. Mun- hall and D. Kinney are invited to attend and help us. ISRAEL THRAP.

Irville, Ohio, July 20, 1841.

Br. Hughes, the letter to which you refered as containing the name of a new subscriber, and the name of those to whom the money you sent us should be credited, has not come to hand.— For fear it does not reach us, we ask the favor of you to write again and give us those names.

A meeting is appointed to be held in Waynes- burgh Pa., commencing on Friday evening the 3d of September, to embrace the Sabbath imme- diately preceding the Annual Conference at Allegheny city, in hopes that Brs. Addis, Cul- lin, Simonton, Clawson, Gibbons, Lawson, and Helmick, will pass this way and lend us their aid.

July 21, 1841. JAS. HORWOOD.

M. McRoberts, of Jacksonville, Ill., is certain- ly bound to pay for the two years paper we sent to his address at Dobbletown, Ia. If any one has received the paper and will pay us, that will be satisfactory, but if not we hold him accountable. Without any reference to our agents he could at any time have called at the post office, and the postmaster would have written to us to have transfered his paper.

Br. Samuel Wilson, near Adelphia, Ross coun- ty, Ohio, is very solicitous that Br. Scott should pay them a visit.

An interesting communication from J. Clarke, Jr., was not received until the copy was in hand for this paper. It will be given in our next.

The post master at New Castle, Pa., informs us that J. H. Rhodes refuses to take his paper, because "his time had expired." He commenced at the 70 No. and no time was specified when his name was sent, and we have received nothing from him yet. If he settles up we will then dis- continue.

Providence permitting, there will be held a two days meeting at Beaver, commencing on the Friday evening, next preceding the meeting of the An- nual Conference. Brethren coming from the west or northward, are requested to make this a point of timely arrival, on their way to conference. Call on Dr. M. Adams, west side of Beaver, at the upper falls, B. Gray, New Brighton, or T. F. Miller, Sharon. JOHN CLARKE, Jr.

CAMP-MEETING.—It is concluded by the brethren of Pittsburgh circuit and Allegheny station to hold a camp-meeting, at the old ground, on the land of James Clarke, in the vicinity of Sharpsburgh, (by Divine permission,) commencing on Monday even- ing, August 23.

The brethren of Union circuit will perceive that our appointment, to some extent, conflicts with theirs, but unavoidably, as the harvest of this region will not permit it earlier, and later would not give time for the families in the station to prepare for the conference among them, after their return from the meeting. The friends of the Pittsburgh station are expected to participate in the meeting as on former occasions. And ministering brethren from Ohio and Youngstown circuits, and any oth- ers who can, are respectfully invited to our assis- tance. JOHN CLARKE, Jr.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Brief History of China.—China is an empire of Asia, the most populous and ancient in the world, being 1350 miles long and 1030 miles wide. Population, from 300,000,000 to 360,000,000. The capital is Pekin, with 1,100,000 inhabitants; Nankin,1,000,000, and Canton, 1,100,000. China produces tea, 50,000,000 lbs of which are annually exported from Canton,the only port which foreigners are allowed to visit. Silk, cotton, rice, gold, silver, and all the necessaries of life, are found in China. The arts and manufactures in many branches are in high perfection, but stationary, as improvements are now prohibited. The government is a despotic monarchy. Revenue, $200,000,000; army, 800,000 men. The religion is similar to Buddhism, the chief god being Foh. The Chinese inculcate the morals of Confucius. their great philosopher,who was born 550 B. C. The great wall and canal of China, are among the mightiest works ever achieved by man. The Chinese formerly used paper currency. (For the manners, dress,manufactures, and curiosities of the people, the American reader is referred to the "Chinese Collection" in Philadelphia,purchased and arranged by Nathan Dunn, Esq., formerly an eminent merchant at Canton. The visitor at this museum will learn more in an hour, than by reading books on the subject for a month. It is,in fact, a miniature "Celestial Empire," and the finest collection of the kind in the world.)—The foreign commerce of China amounts to $35,000,000 or $40,000,000 annually, the whole of which is transacted with appointed agents, called "Hong merchants." Foreigners are allowed to live at certain stations or "factories" below Canton. The chief trade is with England. The first American ship reached China in 1784: now, the annual average of United States ships visiting Canton, is 32. The revenue derived from foreign commerce by the Emperor, varies from $4,000,000 to $6,000,000. According to Mr. Dunn, the opium smuggled into China, to the injury of the people amounted to $20,000,000 annually for several years past, much of which was paid for in specie, which found its way to London. The Chinese language has nearly 40,000 characters or letters. The Chinese are eminent for agriculture, and once every year the Emperor ploughs a piece of ground himself in the presence of his people

UNITED STATES TRADE WITH CHINA.

	Imports from China.	Exports to China.
1837-8,	$8,965,337	$630,591
1838 9,	4,764,536	1,516,602

The British trade with China for the year, ending June 30th, 1838, was £11,700,000.

The exports of goods from China to England and the Indies,amounted to £3,149,481: imports, £5,637,052. Thus showing a balance of £2,469,571 against China, to say nothing of the smuggling, which it is presumed makes the average total of £11,700,000.

In history, the Chinese claim a remote but fabulous antiquity. Good authorities name Fo-hee as their first Emperor,about 2247 B. C. Ya-o, a virtuous sovereign, some centuries after, reigned 102 years. China was invaded by Ghengis Khan,and millions put to the sword; the country finally submitted to the Mongol Tartar sovereign, A. D. 1280. In 1368, the Tartars were driven out, and a native dynasty continued until 1644, when the Manchoo Tartars invaded the empire,and placed their chief upon the throne. His descendants reign at this day. In 1246, Marco Polo visitedChina,and shortly after his brother joined him, they were received with favour by the sovereigns. Catholic and particularly Jesuit Missionaries, were permitted to reside in China for several ages, but were at length expelled. A war broke out between England and China, in 1840, in consequence of the Chinese Government destroying opium belonging to the British merchants, and meant to be smuggled into the country,in 1839; also for imprisoning the British government agent, Mr. Elliott. Canton was blockaded in July, 1840, by a British fleet.

The above work is stereotyped in the highest style of art, at the foundry of Mr. J. Fagan of this city.—Bicknell's Reporter.

The Slave Trade.—The following is a list of Slavers captured by English vessels of war since the 3d of July, 1840, and taken into St. Helena for adjustment.

"In July, 1840, the Andalusa, Doringa and Dictator, all captured by the Water Witch. None of these vessels had any slaves. December 15th, 1840, the Julia, captured by the Water Witch, with 220 slaves. February 5, 1841, the Louisa, captured by the Brisk, 343 slaves. In March, 1841, the Meuisiana, with 325 slaves, and the Vito de Decembri-Douse d'Abriel, captured by the brig Persia,with no slaves. April 8, 1841, the Elio, with 380 slaves, captured by the Water Witch. Total, 11 slavers, and 2548 slaves.

Not Soda Water.—An English chemist lately lecturing at the Royal Institution, said that the great majority of the article sold as soda water, does not contain one grain of soda, but is merely plain water, impregnated with corbonic acid gas; not because soda is too expensive an article, but because the apparatus for forcing the gas into the water costs about $75; whereas, the cost of the machinery, requisite to prepare a solution of soda, is from 3 to £4,000.

Security against Lightning.—The damage which the country, and particularly the farming classes, sustain from lightning, is very apt to be under-rated by those who have not paid attention to the subject or ascertained the number of such disasters reported annually in the public journals. There is scarce a thunder shower during the season, in which more or less buildings or lives of men or animals are not destroyed, and the aggregate is a serious one. During a shower in Western New York last season, in three counties, some fifteen or twenty buildings were burned, and though few showers are as destructive, all are more or less liable to produce disasterous results. The importance therefore of protecting buildings can hardly be too frequently, or too earnestly urged upon the owners; and what is done in this way, should be done so as not to invite, but to divert the attack of the destructive agent.

The common faults of lightning rods are, first, being of too small iron rods, a fault that prevents sufficient surface for the free transmission of the fluid. This fact is shown by the frequent breaking and fusion of small rods, an occurrence which never happens to large ones. Rods less than five-eights should never be used, and three-fourths or even an inch, are still better.

A second fault is in not having the rods properly joined; and their termination in the earth of the right kind. The rods should be united by a screw joint, in such a way as to enlarge the rod at that place as little as possible, and the lower part should enter the earth to such a depth as to ensure a certainty of its always being in contact with moisture; if the lower part is forked, the fluid will pass off still more readily.

A third fault is the construction of the elevated points. This part sometimes ends in a single point, sometimes in two or three; but these are usually blunt, covered by rust, and consequently forming very poor conductors. It should be remembered, the more numerous the points the better; that the points should be fine and sharp, and should be made of some metal not liable to rust. Silver or platina are the best metals for this purpose. A dollar will furnish materials for a dozen points.

Another fault is founded in the manner of putting up such rods. They should be secured to their places on or about the building to be protected,by such substances as are poor, or perfect non-conductors, such as wood or glass, and all things considered, the first is doubtless the best article that can be used. If attached to a house, it should be so as to command the elevated part, such as the chimney, and when there is more than one of those of equal height, then the one in which the fire is usually kept, as it is found that a column of heated air constitutes a powerful conductor. If applied to out buildings those most exposed should be selected,and particularly those in which the greatest value is generally found. The barns in which large quantities of new grain and hay are stored are found more frequently struck by lightning than others, a fact that may be attributed to the heated air rising from the partially fermented masses within, conducting the electric fluid to such buildings. Some may prefer insurance, to the trouble of erecting rods, and with such we shall not contend; all that is desired, is that the owner of property,and especially the farmer, will adopt some certain method of securing himself against such loss.

Philadelphia and Baltimore Inspection of Flour and Meal.—Philadelphia. We learn from the Commercial List that during the quarter ending June 30th, there were inspected at this port, 162,351 barrels of Wheat Flour; Rye Flour, 11,976 barrels, and Corn Meal, 30,216 barrels and 2,558 hogsheads. Total amount equal to 214,879 barrels.

Baltimore.—The Commercial Journal states that during the quarter ending June 30th, the inspection at that port consisted of 127,343 barrels of Wheat Flour; 1,572 barrels of Rye Flour; and 3,149 barrels and 110 hogsheads of Corn Meal. Total inspection equal to 132,504 barrels of all descriptions of Flour and Meal.

The above accounts show that the inspection at Philadelphia exceeded that at Baltimore 61,375 barrels, including all kinds of Bread Stuffs. The inspection at Baltimore usually exceeds that of Philadelphia about 200,000 barrels annually.—Bicknell.

The Boundary Line Between Texas and the United States.—A few days since, Col. Kearney, of the engineers, expected to reach the terminus of the Texas line at Red river. Baddo parish, in Louisiana, loses two ranges of townships, inhabited by a population of great wealth and excellent character. The land is equal to any in Louisiana. This transference of a host of families from one government to another, must be unpleasant to Americans, but Col. Potter, in Texas Congress, anticipating this event, got a bill passed securing to the owners all their lands.

A Nut for Botanists.—It is related in a late foreign paper. that a German botanist, who some time ago accompanied the English colony to the Swan river, discovered there a plant, the flower, warmed by the rays of the sun, gave out at intervals, a smoke similar to that exhaled by persons who smoke tobacco. The learned traveller was at first very much alarmed when he saw the smoking flower and thought he had fallen into an ambuscade of savages.

From the Philadelphia Chronicle.

African Slave Trade.—The African Repository, in speaking of the importation of native African laborers from Sierra Leone to the West Indies to cultivate the plantations abandoned by the recently emancipated slaves, has the following just remarks:

"Thus the West India plantations are again to be worked by the bone and muscle of Africa. The slave ships, ladened with human beings, embarked for Cuba or Brazil, are captured by benevolent, liberty-loving Britain; but the slaves are not restored to their native villages, to greet their parents, wives and children, from whom they have been torn by violence. They are re-shipped to increase by their toils, the tropical products of these Islands, that the good people of Great Britain may be supplied with sugar, and coffee, uncursed by slave hands! Such free labor as will be performed by these men, finds a parallel only in the voluntary service of the British sailor, enlisted by the press gang! Shameless, canting hypocrisy, to call this the suppression of the slave trade.

The Maroons, natives of the West Indies, a few years since, were hunted by blood-hounds, pursued to their dens in the mountains, smoked out of their caves, and destroyed like wild beasts. Those taken alive were sent, first to Halifax, then to Sierra Leone, where they have been tamed, and now are humanely sent back, to take that place which the freed man refuses to occupy. And this is done under professions of benevolence, under the pretext of christianizing and civilizing Africa, and that, too, by the very nation which orders the capture of American merchant-ships, in the African seas under the most frivolous pretences. One is captured because an African cook is found on board; another, because three pair of shackles are found in a locker; another has a thousand feet of lumber in her hold. But America is a nation that holds slaves, and, therefore, is suspected of visiting Africa only for slaves. Every one knows that slaves cannot be held in Massachusetts; and yet, a single African cook in a Salem ship, is good cause, in the estimation of a British officer, for seizing and sending her to the United States, to be tried for piracy."

Rev. E. K. Avery.—The noted affair of this person, who was strongly suspected of the crime of murdering Miss Cornell, some ten years since, is again being agitated in some of the papers in New England. A writer for the Boston Traveller, in a letter from Rhode Island, says:—

"The murder of Miss Cornell was committed, if committed at all, on the night of the 20th of December, 1832, and on that night Mr. Avery was absent from his family in Bristol. He could not satisfactorily account for the time he was absent. In his examination, however, he said that in the evening of the 20th of December, he was returning home from the coal mines, on the island of Rhode Island; and while on his way he saw and spoke to a man and boy who were driving a flock of sheep. If he could have proved that he saw a man and boy at that time alleged, his innocence would have been established beyond a shadow of doubt or dispute. Unfortunately, in despite of every effort, they could not be found. I was conversing on this subject a few days since, with a distinguished gentleman of Bristol, and he informed me of the astounding fact, that the man and boy have recently been discovered, and that the boy, now, a full grown man by the way, has, by affidavit, substantiated every word Mr. Avery asserted on his examination!

My information comes from a source too respectable to be doubted, and I impart it to you with great satisfaction."

If Mr. Southworth, the writer of the above, would cause the testimony of the persons referred to to be taken before a magistrate, and afterwards published, he would be doing essential service to the denomination of christians to which he was attached.—Phil. Chron.

Important.—The British Navigation Company will soon have all the trading by means of steam vessels, in their own hands. New York and Boston they have already, and we see by the New Orleans papers, that a line is to be established in that city. The Advertiser states the Chamber of Commerce met to receive the proposition of the new Royal Steam Navigation Company for touching with their boats at New Orleans, and it was determined to ask Congress to place them on the most favored footing, &c.

This steam ship company have boats of fifteen hundred tons burthen in their line, at a cost of four millions of dollars. They receive twelve hundred thousand dollars a year from the British government, for carrying the mail. The line will commence on the first of October, and by it, we shall be in the direct receipt of news from England, every twenty-two days.

The routes are thus laid out.

No. 1. London to Havana by way of Dorunna, Funchal, Barbadoes and Nassau. Returning, Havana to London by way of Barbadoes.

No. 2. On the arrival of the London boat at Havana, one steamer will leave for Honduras, Vera Cruz, Tampico, New Orleans,Havana. Another will leave the same time for New Orleans direct,thence to Tampico, Vera Cruz,Honduras and Havana.

No. 3. Halifax to Havana by way of New York and back.

No. 4. Barbadoes, leeward islands, Jamaca and back.

The Bible.—"In every generation, and wherever the light of revelation has shone, men of all ranks, conditions, and states of mind have found in this volume, a correspondent for every movement towards the better, felt in their hearts. The needy soul has found supply; the feeble a help; the sorrowful a comfort; yea, be the recipiency the least which can consist with moral life,there is an answering grace ready to enter. The Bible has been found a spiritual world—spiritual, yet at the same time outward and common to all.—You in one place, I in another, all men somewhere and at some time, meet with an assurance that the hopes and fears, the thoughts and yearnings, which proceed from or tend to a right spirit in us, are not dreams or fleeting singularities in us, not voices heard in sleep, or spectres which the eye suffers, nor perceives. As if on some dark night, a pilgrim, suddenly beholding a bright star moving before him, should stop in fear and perplexity.

But lo, traveller after traveller passes by him, and each, being questioned as to whither he is going, makes an answer, "I am following my guiding star." The pilgrim quickens his own step and presses onward in confidence. More confident still will he be if by the way side he should find here and there ancient monuments, each bearing the name of some former pilgrim, and a record that there he had first seen, or first begun to follow the benignant star.

Not otherwise is it with the varied contents of the sacred volume. The hungry have found food,the thirsty a living spring the feeble a staff, and the victorious wayfarer songs of welcome and strains of music; and as long as each man asks on account of his wants, and asks what he wants, no man will discover aught amiss or deficient in the vast and many chambered store-houses. Good and holy men, and the best and wisest of mankind, the kingly spirt of history, enthroned in the hearts of mighty nations, have borne witness to its influences, have declared it to be beyond comparison the most perfect instrument, the only adequate organ of humanity.

Excellent Advice.—Set a value on the smallest morsels of knowledge. These fragments are the dust of diamonds.

"It is true," as poor Richard says, "there is much to be done and perhaps you are weak handed; but stick to it steadily, and you will see great effect, for constant dropping wears away stone."

A man may learn that in two minutes, which may be valuable to him all his life.

Learn all you can, and you will live to see its value.

Never let slip an opportunity of gaining a new idea.

Remember that the beginning of the sublime sciences are often so simple as to seem worthless.

Redeem time to study. The busiest workman can spare some moments.

Whether you work or play do it in earnest, but never be unemployed an instant.

Always have a book within your reach which you may catch up at your odd minutes.

Resolve to edge in a little reading every day, if it is but a single sentence. If you can gain fifteen minutes a day it will make itself felt at the end of the year.

Regulate your thoughts when not at study. A man is thinking even while at work. Why may he not be thinking about something that is useful?

Resolve in your mind what you have last been reading.

Remember that most of the matchless effusions of Robert Burns were conceived while he was toiling after the plough.

The Scenes of Childhood.—The man who spent his childhood in the country, loves his native hills—he loves the fields which lie in sight of his father's door.—Every tree and shrub is connected with some pleasant recollection of childhood. Was he born at the foot of a lofty mountain? The first thing upon which he fixed his eye, in the morning, was its top gilded by the rising sun, and upon that too, his eye rested the last thing in the evening, as its head faded away in darkness. Was he born on the spot where the land and the ocean meet? To him there is no music like the hoarse voice of the ocean; and in that ceaseless, eternal motion of his face, he sees a charm which can never be forgotten. What man can ever forget the steep hill which he climbed in childhood—the rock in the sea, where he planted his foot as he used to fish—the brook over which he used to leap, in his buoyancy, or the tree, under whose shade he used to read? He returns to childhood's home, after an absence of many long years. The hair on his head has turned grey—the generation who were born with him have passed away—the dwellings have altered—but he can recollect the countenance of each rock—can commune with the aged tree that sheltered his boyhood—and go back to the morning of life as he treads the little foot-path that winds through the village grave-yard.

Fire in Mobile.—We learn from a letter received in this city, dated Mobile, June 30, that the incendiaries have recommenced their work of destruction.—The carpenter shop of G. W. Wentling of this city, which stood on the corner of Water street, was entirely destroyed by fire, on the night of the 29th ult., together with all its contents, consisting of finished and unfinished work, carpenters' tools, &c.

Snake Story.—The following incident occurred in the dwelling of Mrs. Elizabeth Jones, at Bridgeville, on Thursday last, in the absence of her husband. She was sitting in the front room of her house, while her infant slept in the cradle in front of, and at a little distance from her. Suddenly she heard a rustling sound, and the next instant she perceived a large snake enter the door, and make directly for the cradle. For a moment all her energies seemed paralysed by fear; but in the next instant,true to the maternal instinct, she sprang to the cradle,seized her infant by the arm and fled, uttering shriek upon shriek, just as the serpent, having entered the cradle, was rapidly approaching the head of the child. Several of her neighbors alarmed by her cries, hurried to the house, and after some search, the snake was found coiled up under the bed, apparently prepared to act upon the defensive. Having been killed with a broad hoe, it proved to be a black snake, of the rarer species, 5½ feet in length.—Belvidere Apollo.

Found Him out at Last.—We copy the following biography of Kendall, one of the editors of the N. O Picayune, from Hill's N. H. Patriot:

"The talented and facetious editor of the Picayune, is the descendant of an ancient family at Amherst in this State; his grandfather on the mother's side was the first most respected clergyman of that town; his mother, with an angelic voice, was the head of the singing choir, for years at the church which we attended, from 14 to 21 years of age—she was married, and we had the honor to be a guest at the wedding. The father and the mother moved away to Burlington, Vermont, and we knew not that such a person as young K——was in existence till the flashes of his fine talents repeatedly met us all the way from New Orleans. Like many others whom we might name, he is indebted for his notoriety to his service in a printing office."

Great Travelling.—The New Jersey Railroad carried 4,973 passengers, between Newark and New York, on the 5th and 6th instant. As many more were carried in the Philadelphia lines, and in the Accommodation lines to New Brunswick, making about 10,000 passengers, all of whom were transported over the railroad and Jersey city ferry without accident or injury.

Nomination of Washington.—The Troy Whig holds an argument to prove that Thomas Johnson, and John Adams, first nominated Washington as commander-in-chief of the American Army.

MUTUAL RIGHTS
AND
Ecclesiastical Reform

IT has been suggested by those whose opinion is worthy of regard, that a periodical would in pamphlet form, devoted principally to the interests of the Methodist Protestant Church, and to an examination of reform principles advocated by the ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, previous to the formation of the Associated Methodist Churches, now known as the Methodist Protestant Church, would meet with approbation and support. Solicited to test the validity of this opinion by experiment, the only ordeal by which matters of this kind can be definitely settled, the subscribers propose a monthly publication under the above title.

The first object of this work will be to collect and preserve, in a convenient and durable form, the principles espoused and defended by those who sought to reform the polity of the M. E. Church, and check the mal-administration of the itinerant ministers. While the plan of the work will admit essays on church government generally, we shall confine its columns more particularly to bring before the public a succinct view of the commencement, progress and consummation of events that lead to the secession of many ministers and members from the Methodist E. Church, and ultimately established the separate organization of the Methodist Protestant Church.

The present period seems to be a favorable one in view of bringing before an intelligent and candid public the controversy that existed between the friends to a radical and scriptural ecclesiastical government, and the Bishops and hierarchy of the Methodist Episcopal Church.—The undue excitement produced by interested persons in that communion, to divert the public attention from the merits of the pending controversy, has now subsided—and the influence of those persons being now neutralized, because of their motives and conduct being generally known, and the public mind being prepared for a dispassionate examination of the subject, points out the necessity and expediency of the proposed publication.

The work will be published simultaneously in Boston and New York, once a month, in the octavo form, to contain some thirty pages, elegantly printed, with good type and fine paper. The price will be two dollars a year, payable in advance, or on the reception of the first number, which will be put to press as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers are obtained to warrant the expense. Any person obtaining six subscribers, and forwarding the money, will be entitled to the seventh copy.

Persons holding subscription papers will please return the names of subscribers as soon as practicable. It will be admitted by all who have taken an interest in the objects contemplated by the subscribers, that as a Church, we owe it to ourselves and the community at large, that we should present matters in their true light, that after we are gone, posterity may judge between us and our opponents in view of the truth and justice of our course. Many of the writings of the early Reformers have gone out of print—the protests against unrighteous clerical assumptions ought not to be lost. Let then, a simultaneous effort be made at once, by our friends, and we shall send forth an antidote to the poison that has afflicted many.

AN INQUIRY, &C.

Statement of the Doctrine of an Unoriginated, Infinite and Eternal Prescience, as it is currently and implicitly received by a very large proportion of the Christian World.

NO. VIII. CONCLUDED.

INFINITE AND ETERNAL PRESCIENCE, NOT INCLUDED IN THE DIVINE EXISTENCE, NOR REQUISITE FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE WORLD, NOR IMPLIED IN THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE HUMAN HEART, NOR COMPATIBLE WITH THE MORAL PROBATION OF HUMAN BEINGS.

This gigantic monster of an infinite and eternal prescience, is terrible only while it is viewed far off, and real only while the mind is paralyzed by the touch of implicit credulity, or prostrated on the earth by superstitious fear. It reminds me of a story which was once related by a young man, who was reputed to be in possession of the faculty of second sight; and who himself did appear to believe that he really had the faculty of seeing preternatual appearances. He said that one moonlight night, as he was ascending an easy acclivity, on an extended field, he perceived a most gigantic object before him. He stood still and contemplated this large and wonderful phenomenon, and he endeavored to ascertain its form, and proportions, and other visible or seeming properties; but although his mind, he said, was perfectly calm, being accustomed to such preternatural interruptions in his mortal pilgrimage, yet he could not make out any regularity of form, nor was he able to convey in words, any thing like an intelligent conception of this very extraordinary vision. He nevertheless walked boldly, and, I suppose, very slowly up towards the mysterious and equivocal object that stood before him. He had not long, however, pursued the phantom, before he actually perceived that it gradually diminished in magnitude, and equally so, I have no manner of doubt, in its terrors. His pace was 'accelerated,' and the contractions of the ghost became accelerated with equal rapidity; as the agility of the ghost increased, the speed of its pursuer was quickened, until the ghost and its pursuer were fairly put upon their metal; and it became a decided and determined race. The ghost, however, had the policy to get the start, and to keep it; and, moreover, he had this advantage over his earthly antagonist, that whereas his pursuer became weaker by the effort of every succeeding step, the ghost was constantly diminishing in magnitude, and consequently, I presume, in personal gravitation; and therefore the farther he ran the less must have had to carry. Still, however, the ghost, having once lost his confidence, and of course his self possession, he could never afterwards perfectly regain them; but he continued to diminish as the chase proceeded; until at length, he was fain to have resource to a cowardly stratagem, and to secure a speedy lodgment in the knotted roots of an aged oak. And therefore, as the young man found it impracticable to follow the phantom into its subterraneous retreat, the race was of necessity, completely at an end.

In like manner, the ghostly doctrine of eternal prescience has been of amazing volume, and of the most terrible and mysterious aspect to the microscopic and delusive visions of religious superstition and popular credulity. But some few intrepid spirits have had the courage to turn upon the fearful goblin of eternal prescience: and he has already commenced his retreat, and has begun to shrink in his apparent bulk: only let the chase be pursued with determination and vigor, and his pigmy form, and empty shadow, will skulk away in the labyrinths of evasion; and then he will never have the confidence to assail the distempered imagination again, as long as human nature itself shall endure.

It is stated on several occasions by the evangelists, that our blessed Redeemer knew the hearts of the Jews, he perceived their thoughts, and detected their secret reasonings: and especially, that he knew all men, and needed not that any should testify of man: for he knew what was in man, John ii. 24. But not one of those passages of holy writ, either expresses or implies an eternal and inaugmentable knowledge; they all evidently refer to the present actual contents and productions of the human heart, and to the known character of the persons of whom our Lord was speaking. To suppose that the actual and present knowledge of the Deity must extend not only to all the present contents of all human hearts, and all the past contents and productions of all human hearts, but that it must include all the future productions of all the human hearts which are already in existence, and all the productions of all human hearts which may be hereafter in existence, and embrace all their productions, both in time and in eternity, is an assumption that would involve a thousand contradictions, as absurd and gross as were ever concocted in the brain of a bedlamite, or ever dropped from the lips of a drivelling idiot. It would of necessity imply, however unwilling its advocates might be to look at the consequences, that knowledge has no connexion whatever with fact, or any relation to the objects of its cognizance; that the actual existence of human hearts is by no means requisite to the knowledge of the contents and productions of those hearts; that the actual existence of the contents of those hearts, is not at all necessary to the most minute and certain knowledge of those contents and productions; that actual existence is not necessary for the production of actual knowledge, and that the Divine existence itself is not necessary. In short, it would outberkley Berkleyism itself; for it would follow that eternal prescience, abstract eternal prescience, is absolutely independent of all actual existence, created and uncreated; and that the only real existence and actual being, is the doctrine of an unoriginated, infinite, and eternal prescience.

To suppose that the actual knowledge of the Deity must extend not only to all the present contents of all human hearts in existence, and all the past contents and productions of all human hearts, and to all the future contents and productions of all human hearts in time and in eternity, is therefore an obvious and palpable contradiction. The Deity is the only being in existence who possesses a perfect knowledge of any heart besides his own.

There are, indeed, many persons, I am fully aware, that are in the habit of ascribing a species of omniscience, if not of omnipresence, to that evil spirit who walketh about seeking whom he may devour; and in certain schools of speculative christian theology, the omnipresence, or at all events, the pluripresence of the devil, is regarded as being almost, if not altogether, as orthodox as that of eternal prescience itself.—And it is worthy, I confess, of such an association; for they have the same morbid and superstitious origin: being the native productions of that misdirected and perverted piety, which is for ever disposed to magnify into monstrous proportions, every object of religious veneration. The Holy Scriptures do most clearly and explicitly state that, No man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of a man, which is in him; and they do most clearly imply, that the man himself is the only being, except his infinite Creator, who is thoroughly acquainted with the secret thoughts of his own heart. But the infinite and eternal spirit must be more truly omnipresent and omniscient too, in the person and the heart of every man, than even his own immaterial and immortal mind can be; and the knowledge which the Deity possesses of the secret thoughts of every human heart, must be more competent and perfect than that of the conscious spirit which dwells within the human body can possibly be. In him we live, and move, and have our being. Hell is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering.

It has been strangely conceived, that when the Psalmist says, Thou understandest my thoughts afar off, he speaks of a distance in duration, and not a distance of place. And I suppose that both the advocates of the doctrine of eternal prescience, and the admirer of the notion of an eternal now, will fancy that they can perceive something in his poetical image of the Psalmist, that will greatly favor their respective theories. But every sober and discerning inquirer will easily perceive, that the object of this pious conception is a distance of place and not a distance of time. As though the Psalmist had said, thou needest not to leave the habitation of thy glory, to behold and understand the thoughts of my heart. Thou needest not to travel a long and wearisome journey, or prosecute a laborious inquiry, to ascertain the secret workings of my mind. The range of thy piercing and universal vision, is not confined within the narrow limits of a mundane hemisphere, or even the unmeasurable circuit of the solar light; it reaches as far as from heaven to earth. Thou understandest my thoughts afar off. Thy divine infinitude pervades the geometrical dimensions of my person; thou art cognizant and co-existent with every conception of my mind. Thy knowledge of my body and thy knowledge of my soul, thy knowledge of my actions and my words, thy knowledge of my secret purposes and desires, at every point of the duration of my being, is absolutely perfect; although, it will admit of a constant accession in quantity throughout the progress of my everlasting existence.

The notion of an eternal prescience can not possibly be reconciled with that of moral probation. The angel of the Lord said unto Abraham, Now I know that thou fearest God; seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thy only son, from me. Gen. xxii. 12. God said unto the ancient Israelites in the wilderness by His servant Moses, If there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, &c., thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams: for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the Lord your God, with all your heart, and with all your soul.—Deut. xiii. 1—3. Then said the Lord unto Moses, Behold, I will rain bread from heaven for you; and the people shall go out and gather a certain rate every day, that I may prove them whether they will walk in my law or no.—Ex. xvi. 4. And thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God hath led thee these forty years in the wilderness, to humble thee and to prove thee, and to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldst keep His commandments or no.—Deut. viii. 2. And the anger of the Lord was hot against Israel; and He said, I will not henceforth drive out any from before them of the natives which Joshua left when he died; that through them I may prove Israel, whether they will keep the way of the Lord to walk therein, as their fathers did keep it, or not. Judges ii. 20—22. And they were to prove Israel by them, to know whether they would hearken to the commandments of the Lord, which He commanded their fathers by the hand of Moses. Judges iii. 4. And hence David prayed, Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts: and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting.—Psalm cxxxix. 23, 24.

Now let any person read over the foregoing scriptures, and then let him ask his own understanding and conscience, whether the doctrine contained therein be compatible with the notion of an inaugmentable knowledge in the Deity; and whether it is possible for the doctrine of an eternal prescience to be reconciled with an unsophisticated moral probation of human beings. And let me appeal to the common sense and scripture knowledge of my readers, whether the moral probation of human beings be not instituted for the purpose of ascertaining the real character of human beings, and especially of ascertaining the important fact of their being rendered thereby fit for a state of happy and everlasting retribution. It may, indeed, be argued, that the object of probation is not that of ascertaining, but of producing the fact. But I would ask whether there is any possible way of ascertaining that fact, except by actual production? The knowledge of the fact must always imply the actual production of the fact; because the knowledge must be dependent upon, and be posterior to, the fact itself. If the final issue of life be an object of a certain and eternal prescience, the moral probation of human beings must be among the very worst species of Jesuitical chicanery; and I therefore boldly challenge the whole world to show how the notion of an eternal prescience may be reconciled with the notion which the scriptures inculcate of the moral probation of the human race. JOHN.

POPERY—NEW SERIES.

NO. II.

What higher claim can the governors of a church set up, than that of being "theocratic in their ecclesiastical government," (i.e.) a government immediately superintended or administered by God,—and being "divinely" appointed "to rule and govern?" Was there any thing higher or more terrific in the Pope's claim to divine right, and being the vice-gerent of Jesus Christ? And these claims are now set up for the "ecclesiastical polity or government of the M. E. Church," in the church papers, and not contradicted. The church of Isreal has been considered theocratic, when there was but one visible church on earth, and when God superintended it, by immediate communications to the Patriarchs, Moses and the Prophets. But that a single branch of the church, or rather a single self-created hierachy, should claim to be theocratic, at this time of day, when christian churches are numerous, and all different in their ecclesiastical polity, is strange,—nay, astounding! But why investigate and controvert these claims to "power and authority?" I answer, first, because the power of the clergy is always to be dreaded.—2dly. An assumed and irresponsible government, is always dangerous. 3dly. "The accumulation of all power, legislative, executive and judicial, in the same hands, may justly be pronounced the very essence and definition of tyranny," said a great man. 4th. "Unlimited power is apt to corrupt the minds of those who possess it." 5th. "Wherever religious liberty is suppressed, the church establishment will first or last become the engine of despotism, and overthrow, if it be not itself overthrown, every vistage of civil liberty." 6th "No class of men is the safe depository of latitudinarian, discretionary and irresponsible power even for the most holy ends." 7th. Every christian patriot is jealous of his own and his country's liberty, and feels a just concern for the welfare of posterity. "The church establishment may become the engine of despotism," by numbers, wealth and influence; and may overthrow or paralize civil government, and destroy every vistage of liberty. And men may cry peace and safety, until ere they are aware sudden destruction cometh.

Already the boast is made in an official organ, that it is "an easy matter (in the State of Indiana,) so far as Methodism is concerned, to compare ecclesiastical with civil statistics"!! If the prosecution, expulsion, and proscription of worthy men, under what has been termed the "gag law," for opinion's sake, and for using the sacred right of speaking, writing and printing, and acting with "purity of intention," is to be taken as a specimen of clerical vindictiveness, and the temper and clemency of a "theocratic" government, we may readily anticipate what awaits posterity, in the event of continued "success and power how'ere acquir'd." And if pursuing the injured and proscribed, with falsehood and slander, to keep down reform, and perpetuate power, is a part of the means to "girt the globe" and "evangelize the world," then has the advent of the Messiah, so far as this theocracy, or "ecclesiastical polity" is concerned, ceased to be "good will to man"! And it is in vain to think of "holding" men thus coaliced to sustain a favorite hierarchy and a growing aristocracy, responsible at any bar but that of public opinion, or the bar of public justice; where an interested judge dare not preside,—the same individual cannot twice decide the same case where those who have formed or expressed an opinion, are made to stand aside, and where false and prejudiced witnesses are not so readily credited.—Here, and here alone, can such men be made to feel for their temerity, in publishing such slanderous falsehoods as have appeared in the Advocate and Journal, and the S. W. C. Advocate, the particulars and the proofs can be given.—Well might Dr. B. say, "we cannot guarantee the perpetual purity of any church," &c., "with undivided authority," and we may add, with latitudinarian and irresponsible power.

History tells of a period when the christian church was democratic—(i. e.) "the people were first in authority." It also tells of a period when "the ancient method of ecclesiastical government" "seemed to subsist," but "varied from the primitive rule and degenerated toward the form of a religious monarchy," and sad and withering are subsequent events, produced by a corrupt priesthood. There are those still living who saw Methodism and the itinerant ministry, when "purity, simplicity and sincerity" were their leading characteristics.—A melancholy change in spirit, purity and thirst for power, wealth and a domineering disposition, is too visible to escape the notice of the most ordinary observer.—This is justly lamented by many of the plain and pious of this day. And as some rejoiced at the glory of the second Temple, others wept because it was inferior to the first. So while some glory in the increase of numbers, splendid churches, fine talents, elegant colleges, &c., others lament the departure from original simplicity, and the decline of ardent piety. And we may ask, is there not a cause? G.

For the Western Recorder

Br. Springer: Your correspondent "Layman" is taking a good deal of pains to prove to your readers that neither John the Baptist, nor the disciples of Christ, ever required or practised immersion.

Before he closes, I would be glad he would tell us exactly what they did practice—for if their practice were known, then the meaning of the Greek word Baptizo would also be known, for I take it for granted that they understood the word—and none of the commentators, I believe, pretend to say that John or the disciples of Jesus practiced different actions on different persons whatever action John performed the disciples of Jesus also performed, for it is written that "Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John, although Jesus himself did not baptize, but his disciples did."

This shows that they both or all practised the same thing, or alike—and I conclude that whatever the disciples practised before Pentecost, they practised afterwards also, else the change would have been noticed in some way: it would have been expressed in another word, or the action described so as to show the difference—but as the same word is used afterwards that was before, without any explanation or qualification, I conclude that they uniformally practised the same thing, whether that thing was dipping, pouring or sprinkling. Your correspondent seems to agree with me in this, and aims to prove that the uniform practice was to sprinkle. If this were satisfactorily proven then I would say that both the other actions of immersing and pouring were of human origin and invalid.

But, I fear that he will not satisfy himself, or any body else, that the uniform practice of John and the Apostles, was to sprinkle. The reason why I think his reasonings and conclusions will be unsatisfactory is this, that all who reason as he does, continue to practice immersion afterwards. Nothing is more common than for men to preach against immersion, and then go right down into the water and practice it. Not so with those who contend for immersion, as the primitive practice, they uniformally refuse to sprinkle or pour.

The proof offered by "Layman" for sprinkling is a curious one; "John could not have immersed so many people in so short a time"; then gives the population of Judea, &c., assuming that John sprinkled the whole population, men, women and children, or nearly all. He forgot that the disciples of Jesus baptized more than John, and that afterwards more than half the people perished in the destruction of Jerusalem because they continued in rebellion against God's Messiah, and that thousands were baptized after the death of John, and the acsension of Christ, before the destruction took place, so that he will be compelled to advocate re-baptism, or admit that John baptized but a small part of the Jewish people.

M. W.

P. S. Is there a pedo-baptist, either preacher or layman who honestly thinks that John immersed some, poured some, and sprinkled some, or the Apostles sprinkled in one place, poured in another, and immersed in another, or, that in the same place they sprinkled, poured and immersed? If so, let him speak out. M. W.

For the Western Recorder.

Br. Disciple: Your 6th No. has this day came to hand, and in haste I now take up my pen to reply. I cannot but admire your christian courtesy, as well as your ingenuity in pronouncing an argument, "perfectly ridiculous," when you find yourself unabled to answer it.

1. Your assertion that Simon wanted to purchase the holy spirit, is destitute of proof, without which honest men will not be likely to receive it. It was the power to impart the holy spirit to others by the laying on of hands, that Simon wanted to purchase. See Acts viii. 19.

2. There is no proof that Simon had "neither part nor lot" in the gifts of the holy spirit, but he had neither part nor lot in the power to impart it to others.

3. Peter does not charge him with wickedness, but in one thought, and exhorts him to pray to God that the thought or wickedness of his thought might be forgiven him. Now, Br. Disciple, "get over this if you can."

Why did you not attempt to show that Simon was not one of the them upon whom Peter and John laid their hands? That he believed and was baptised, you dare not deny, and that Christ said such should be saved, you dare not deny.—If you can show that Christ's promise failed in this case, do it, and that will end the matter. Until you do this I shall believe His word like himself, immutable.

We notice once more "Cornelius." In this case there are some matters you have always passed over.

1. In a former communication you asserted that the holy Spirit fell on Cornelius, to "seal the work of pardon upon his heart." I have called for scripture proof, but you have not even attempted to furnish any, nor can you find such proof in the Bible. Furnish it brother, or give it up.

2. You have more than once asserted that baptism was to "introduce and connect us with the discipleship of Christ." You will remember that all of Christ's disciples are all connected with him. They are in union with Him; He "is the vine, they are the branches."—You say Cornelius was saved before he was baptized. I ask you once more, what relation does a man hold to Christ who is not connected with his disciples? I must insist upon an answer. If you hold fast to your "third law in the kingdom of Christ," as expressed in a former number, all your labor since will be in vain in the case of Cornelius.

Your feeble attempt at wit in your remarks about baptism, and not believing with head and hands, &c., have no bearing upon me, for I do not wish baptism put in the place of anything else; I want it just to stand for itself.

Your remarks on Peter's preaching to the Gentiles, in my view, placed the Apostle in rather an unfavorable light, for as he had but one commission to preach the gospel (after the resurrection of Christ) and that was "to all the world," "to all nations," &c. Where you make him preach a different gospel to Gentiles from that which he preached to the Jews, at the beginning; you certainly make out that he preached a gospel that he was unauthorised to preach, unless you can show that Christ authorized two gospels.—Until you do this I shall feel safe on the ground I now occupy. The doctrine for which I have contended is already made out: Christ says, he that believeth and is baptised shall be saved: Mark xvi. 16. Peter says, repent and be baptised every one of you, in the name of Jesus Chrirt, for the remission of sins, &c. Acts ii. 38. Paul says, for as many of you as have been baptised into Christ, have put on Christ: Gal. iii. 27. You say, "a third law in the kingdom of Christ is baptism to introduce and connect us with the discipleship of Christ," and Christ says, His disciples are branches in him as the true vine." Mr. John Wesley says, by baptism we are regenerated and born again, hence it is called by the Apostle the washing of regeneration. Thus Christ, Peter, Paul and Disciple, makes baptism do all that I contend for, and Mr. Wesley makes it do more than I can believe. There is too much waterism about it for me. Go ahead, Br. Disciple, and give us proof, not assertion.

Yours, in the good hope, TIMOTHY.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE PITTSBURGH ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

Dear Br. Ragan: Permit me to assure you that it has not been through any intentional disrespect either for the President of the District, or the requirement of the discipline, that I have heretofore failed to 'report quarterly to you, the the state of my circuit;' nevertheless I confess myself guilty of a neglect of duty, in this matter, and now promise amendment, if forgiven, I shall be glad, if not, I shall be the more sorry. I very much regret, also, that so many of my brethren are in the same condemnation with me.

We are still favored of the Lord, with at least, moderate prosperity, on Pittsburgh circuit. Our congregrations are generally good, compared with times that are passed—very good—classmeetings are pretty well attended—spiritual and lively.—Some good accessions are still being made to our numbers, but not so numerous, as in the last year. But one case has yet occurred, in the year, requiring judicial process, and that has been attended with favorable results. The only exceptions to universal good fellowship, peace and harmony, of which I have any knowledge, are attributable to no worse cause than a difference of opinion among brethren, in the exercise of an honest and laudable zeal for prosperity of the church, and of course the exceptions are of momentary nature, and rather to be desired than a peace without followship, or harmony without energy or action; a single exception to the above statement, I ought also to make, but it is clearly attributable to a physical cause. There are persons, you know, who are constitutionally subject to a gloomy and depressive temperament, that leads them to view every thing through an alarming medium; and ever draw towards themselves, all that is awful, destructive, and distressing.—Owing to the prevalence of a morbid affection of the nervous fluids, a member of the church, is often kept in a state of the most painful irritation and depression, and if he have influence over others they also will be affected, and disturbed by his reiterated complainings of evils, difficulties and sorrows that have their existence only in his diseased imagination. In proportion to numbers and experience, I believe, I have never known, a greater aggregate amount of ardent piety, sound intelligence, and liberality of feeling, among any people—and the prospect of the future, permanent prosperity of Protestant Methodism, thro' their instrumentality, is at the present time better, than at any previous period in their history.

Early in the spring we organized a church of some eighteen members at New Brighton, (Beaver falls,) all of sterling worth—nothwithstanding the great numerical strength, and powerful influence of Episcopal Methodism, in all that vicinity, and the direct bearing of that influence against our success. I am confident in the hope, that this society, if faithful on its own part, and properly attended to by the conference, will become a very important point in our general field of operation. It has not been included in the plan of our charge, though with the consent of our quarterly conference, and the aid of unstationed brethren, we have been enabled to supply it with two weeks preaching, in view of its being a principal point in a new and promising charge, the ensuing year. At the pressing solicitations of the brethren at New Castle, my colleague has labored with that delightfully interesting, and prosperous society one-fourth of his time, and I learn with much acceptance and profit.

I have never before, felt myself so much embarrassed, as the present year, in endeavoring to improve the hopeful openings, that have presented, for the extension of our cause. Nor have I since the secession from the old church witnessed so much episcopal hostility to our interests. It would seem as though some of the dignitaries of the old fellowship, retained entire the spirit which actual them in the days of former proscription, conflict and strife; and we no sooner hear of its renewed development in the Advocate at New York, than we have also heard of it and witnessed it, in the love-feast and pulpits of our own vicinity, and by petty movements in violation of common courtesy, and far beneath the dignity of christianity, efforts have been made to intercept the progress of our cause, by getting up rival appointments, under circumstances, that very clearly indicated an unworthy object; and publicly exhibiting the charge of misrepresentation and slander against the entire church, without any other occasion than has existed for the past twelve years, except our renewed prosperity.

Last Saturday, Sabbath and Monday we held an extra quarterly meeting at Bakerstown, in the labors of which we were very profitably assisted by Br. Boardman, who has recently joined the church in Pittsburgh station, from the New Connexion, or Protestant Methodists, of England. The meeting was one of special interest and profit throughout. The love-feast especially, was favored with an extraordinary manifestation of the spirit of God. It was among the most melting, reviving seasons I have ever witnessed.

I should add, in conclusion, that the cause of temperance has recently been gloriously revived, and is now accomplishing wonders in this region. Sharpsburgh and vicinity is participating largely in the benefits of this very important reformation. There is reason now, rationally, to hope that the day is not far distant when the force of public sentiment will have driven from existence all the criminal usages and customs that hitherto have sanctioned and supported drunkenness, and its attendant sorrows. I rejoice with thankfulness that the people of my charge are united and almost unanimous in the liberal support and furtherance of every benevolent enterprise; not at all overlooking the cause of the oppressed and benighted of our own land.

Yours, in the gospel,

JNO. CLARKE, JR.

FREEPORT, SHELBY, IA., July 23, 1841.

Mr. Editor: I see in the Western Recorder an inquiry relative to where the next session of the Indiana Conference of the M. P. Church will be held. It will be held at the Union meeting house on Sugar creek circuit, 30 miles south east of Indianopolis, 7 south-east of Franklin Johnson county, on the line of said county, 5 north of Edensburgh, 15 south-west of Shelbysville, Shelby county, 1½ west of Blue river.

Our prospects on this (Sugar creek) circuit, are promising, but nothing special has occurred.

Yours, &c., SAM'L. MORRISON.

BUFORD, O., JUNE 30, 1841.

The third quarterly meeting for this conference year in the Eagle creek circuit was held in Buford. We had a good meeting,—the spirit of the Lord was with us. We had the aid of the locality on the circuit: the meeting commenced on Saturday and continued until Tuesday evening; the interest increasing till the last. Saints were made to rejoice, sinners tremble, and many of them became submissive to the King of kings, and rejoiced in the hope of glory. Twenty-three joined the church. The Lord is reviving His work on this circuit. I am in hopes that old things on this circuit will be done away and all things become new. I do not believe it is any harm to pray God to send the time quickly.

Yours, &c., S. H. EVANS

Dear Br: With pleasure I avail myself of a few leisure moments to inform you, and through you the lovers of Christ and His kingdom, that on the third and fourth days of the present month, I had the pleasure of attending a meeting on this (White river) circuit, in this county, where it pleased the Great Head of the church to manifest Himself in power divine, giving energy to the gospel, as preached unto the people, making it the power of God unto salvation to some precious souls, while others were constrained to say, God be merciful to me a sinner. Twenty were added to this church, which has not had an existence for two years, until the coming winter, whose numbers now exceed seventy members. A revival has been going on nearly all the time, if my information is correct. May heaven continue to prosper them.

The laborers present were our esteemed Br. Clingler, superintendent, Brs. D. H. Stephens, John Williams, Thos. Alexander, Cha. Williams, a promising youth and candidate for the ministry, and Br. Fletcher, of the Baptist denomination, who took a lively interest in the meeting. Among those that joined, there were the hoary head, the middle aged, the youth, with one accord, expressing a determination to live for God, and get to heaven by grace, through faith in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Yours, respectfully,

W. W. PAUL.

Waynesburgh, Pa., July 21, 1841.

Br. Springer: Having to write on business, it may not be amiss to add a word respecting the condition of our charge, tho' nothing [illegible] of very great moment, since my last communication to you. We recently organized a class at the round school-house, four miles east of this place, on the road to Jefferson. This is an interesting neighborhood, and many of the people out of church are our decided friends. We also organized a class at the Union schoolhouse, near Jefferson, some two weeks since. This is also a good neighborhood, and promises to be an appointment of considerable interest to this circuit. We have organized five new classes on the circuit, this year, all of which are interesting and important accessions to our cause here.

It is true that several of the classes on the circuit, are in rather a cold or lukewarm condition; but on the whole we have great reason to thank God, and take courage, being assured that our cause is good, and that faithfulness and perseverance will result in abundant success.

Yours, in Christ,

JAMES HOPWOOD.

OBITUARY.

For the Western Recorder.

It devolves on us to record the death of Miss SARAH ROSE, grand-daughter of Mr. James Stagg, and one of our church members at Bethesda, who departed this transitory life on the fourth of the present month, in the 22d year of her age, in the triumphs of faith, and with bright prospects of an endless felicity. She had made a profession of religion for about four years, and has left a widowed mother and several brothers to mourn her loss. Her last words were to request her dear surviving relatives to meet her in heaven. She expired with the utmost composure: peace be to her spirit.

"Nipt by the wind's untimely blast,
Parch'd by the sun's directer ray,
The momentary glories waste,
The short lived beauties die away.

"Let sickness blast, let death devour,
If heaven must recompense our pains,
Perish the grass and fade the flower,
If firm the word of God remains."

GONE AT LAST.—We learn upon unquestionable authority, that the doors of the West Union Bank have at last been closed, and its hundreds of thousands of bills have been thrown on the hands of the holders thereof as worthless.—Statesman.

ROBBERY.—We learn that on Friday afternoon, Mr. Justice, a runner in the Commercial Bank, was robbed as he supposes, between the Girard Bank and the corner of Third and Chesnut streets, of a wallet containing ten or twelve promissory notes and checks, amounting to about $9000, and Girard Bank certificates to the amount of $1000.—Phil. paper.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... AUGUST 4, 1841.

For the Western Recorder.

MOBS.

The recent and rapidly multiplying exhibitions of mobocracy in our country, cannot fail to excite alarm and fearful apprehensions in the mind of every reflecting patriot. Who does not see that the fostering and encouragement of the already prevalent mobocratic spirit of this age, will tend to the subversion of our government? Who does not see that the game is up with this Republic, unless the lisentious and law-breaking spirit of the land is speedily checked—unless the open and flagrant acts of mobocracy and violence, and the actors therein, are discountenanced and frowned upon by public opinion? The present generation of Americans, is a generation of mobocrats, and in justification of the very harsh remark, I point to the numerous exhibitions of 'lynching,' within the last ten or twelve years, in various sections of the country. The lynching propensities of the present age, will, in after-times, be regarded as one of its most distinguished characteristic features. What a proud position for Americans of the first half of the nineteenth century. What eminent renown—renown, nay, infamous notoriety.

It was not enough to satiate the fiendish spirit of mobocracy, to burn the Charlestown convent. That craven-hearted act of popular incendiarism and villainy, must be followed by tearing down flour stores, and destroying thousands of barrels of flour in the city of New York—by the hanging of five gamblers at Vicksburgh—by the burning of Pennsylvania Hall in Philadelphia—by the destruction of printing presses in Alton and Cincinnati, and private houses in Baltimore—by the burning of a negro at St. Louis—by the lynching of Amos Dresser, at Nashville, and more recently of a student at Oberlin, besides numerous other outrages of a similar kind, in all sections of our country.

But one of the most horrible exhibitions of mobocratic barbarity, has recently passed off in Kentucky, which presents some new features in the science of lynching, and it is therefore, that I am induced to make some remarks on the subject of mobs, generally.

The case to which I allude is the hanging of two men in Grant county, Kentucky, by a mob of seven hundred persons !! The men were in prison, suspected of an attempt to murder and rob. The insatiate blood thirsty mob, collected at the jail, forced open the door, carried the two men into the woods, at midday, where they were allowed the benefit of religious instruction several hours, and then hung and buried in satisfaction of mobocratic thirst for blood! Kentuckians! what patriots—how chivalrous—what magnanimity in allowing your victims the benefit of clergy!!

The new feature in the science of 'lynching,' to which I refer, is the accompaniment of these scenes of mobocratic violence, with religious exercises!!

The account given by an [illegible] of the county of Grant, of this revolting affair informs us that the proceedings in this wholesale murder were characterized by great order, decorum and solemnity—that a preacher officiated at the place of execution some hours—that one man obtained peace with God and manifested a willingness to meet his fate—that the other imploringly begged for two days only (from Saturday, the day of execution, until Monday) to make his reconciliation with heaven—that the magnanimous mob refused the request—that he told them he was unprepared to die, and that he spoke endearingly of his wife and children, and that his plaintive entreaties for further time, were wholly disregarded by the executioners—the conservators of morals, and friends of law and justice!! To cap the climax of generosity and benevolence the friends of the deceased were informed if they wished to get the effects or goods of their murdered friends, or any information concerning them, if they came there they should be treated like gentlemen!!

This I believe is the second instance in which public religious exercises accompanied lynching;—Oberlin, being a sort of semi-religious, fanatical pseudo philanthropic institution, it must needs set the example.—'A lynching to come off' there, to be characteristic, the exercises must be commenced by asking Divine aid and direction! To accompany these exhibitions with religious exercises, conveys to the minds of the actors, the impression that they have, to some extent, the sanction of christianity, and it is therefore that this new feature in the science of lynching, will rather tend to the encouragement, than otherwise of the outrageous and nefarious practice. And yet the benevolent heart does not wish to swing his fellow off the gallows, into eternity without an effort to prepare his mind for the awful change.

Mr. Editor, the evil is great—the remedy is with the courts—the clergy—the press—will they apply it?

Let the courts punish with the utmost rigor of the law the guilty participators—let the clergy lift up their voice like a trumpet and show the people the heinousness of such offences against the laws of their country—the wickedness of encouraging in any way whatever these popular outbreaks; and let the press speak out in trumpet tones, in reprobation of all who in the least countenances or encourage mobocratic violence. Let them show the dangerous tendency of such conduct, and hold up for public execration, the aiders and abettors thereof.

In despotism, and even in monarchies, the mass of the people have no voice in the enactment of laws for their government, but in this country, under our republican form of government, every free citizen participates in some way or other, in making the laws which operate upon him. There is therefore much less apology for the violation of laws here, than in despotic governments. Laws are made by men chosen by us—men living among us, having community of interest with us, and as they can be altered whenever a majority deem them unwise or injurious, it manifestly becomes our duty to yield obedience to them. The Father of his country says, 'respect for the authority of your government, compliance with its laws, and acquiesence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty.'

'All acts of popular violence strike at the very foundation of government, and are in the highest degree dangerous. When once introduced among a people sufficiently corrupt to tolerate them, their progress is fearful. Would you see, fellow-citizens what awaits us, what awaits our wives and children, if the authority of the laws is prostrated by popular violence? Behold it in the history of Revolutionary France—a history written in the blood of millions of Frenchmen—a history fraught with scenes of cruelty, which humanity shudders to contemplate.

'When once the infuriated passions of men have broken down the barriers of the law, they mock all other restraints, they sacrifice alike the purest patriots and the most virtuous citizens; nay, not unfrequently by a just, though unintended retribution, they, with the smitten viper, recoil upon themselves. Danton and Robispiere, let it be remembered, lost their own heads on the guillontine, which they themselves erected for others.' In the language of Washington, 'all obstructions of the laws, all combinations and all associations under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract or awe the regular deliberations and actions of the constituted authorities, are destructive of the fundamental principles of liberty, and are of fatal tendency.'

These are the valedictory admonitions,—this is the farewell and impressive language of the Father of his country—and all enlightened patriots must see and realize the important fact, that it is not a matter of secondary importance to yield obedience and support to the laws and regularly constituted authorities of the land. A contrary course tends to the corruption of the people—to the deterioration of the public morals—to the substitution of anarchy and confusion for wholesome laws and good order, and inevitably to the subversion of our liberties.

Obedience to the laws is the common duty of American citizens, and as the British admiral at Trafalgar announced to his soldiers that their country expected every man to do his duty, so, with equal propriety, can it be said to Americans, that, on this subject, their country expects them to do their duty.

If we would long maintain our liberties, we must be faithful observers of the laws, giving neither countenance nor encouragement to their violation, nor to the corruption of the morals of the community, and consequently to the destruction of that virtue which is one of the main pillars of our republican government, and upon which the renown and durability of the institutions of our common country depend.

LYCURGUS.

From the Philadelphia Chronicle.

THE MCLEOD CASE.—THE DECISION.—The decision of the Supreme Court of New York, on the application to discharge McLeod, meets with a response wherever the honor and rights of our country are properly estimated. We have from the very commencement of the correspondence between the British minister and our government, contended that McLeod must not be released until he has undergone a trial at the bar of the Niagara County Court for the crimes with which he stands charged—that the British government assuming the responsibility of his acts was a mere fudge—and that for them to step in and supersede American laws and jurisdiction upon American soil was an arrogation of authority, that, however well it might work in China, and would never go down in the United States. A proper sense of national honor dictated this course, and a fair construction of international law legalized it. Our laws, indeed, would be futile, if they could not protect the lives and property of citizens against the lawless acts of foreign mercenaries, committed within their jurisdiction; and we are proud to record, that while those of our presses and people, who are habituated to look to British opinion, and dicta as infallible, and to be obeyed, were advocating in both direct and indirect terms, the release of McLeod, because the British minister demanded it, and Mr. Webster half assented to it, the Supreme Court of New York have fearlessly voted the act upon correct and sustainable principles—such as will no doubt be confirmed by any judicial tribunal in the land to which it may be subsequently carried.

The release of McLeod was demanded upon the ground that he acted as an agent of the British authorities, and that the aggressions in which he participated is purely of national concern, and to be adjusted between the two governments only. The question of fact, upon which McLeod declares himself prepared to establish an alibi, is separated altogether from the question of jurisdiction—the only one upon which the Supreme Court was appealed to for a decision.

The answer is that McLeod could only be rescued from a trial upon the indictment for murder and arson, by showing that the acts of hostility were committed in a time of public war. "To warrant the destruction of property, or taking of life on the ground of public war, it must be what is called lawful war by the law of nations, a thing which can never exist without the actual concurrence of the law making power. This, on the part of the United States, is Congress; on the part of England, the Queen." "Now, so far was each government from being involved at that time, that all efforts was being made on each side to sustain unbroken peace.—The crime was committed upon American soil, in a time of profound peace and friendly intercourse between the two nations, by one of the provincial citizens." He was not pursued into British territory by our civil authorities, but having voluntarily returned to our soil, he was captured within the boundaries of the State of New York, while that national intercourse was still unobstructed, and, consequently, all parties bond by the laws of peace, under which he is clearly amenable to the legal jurisdiction where the venue is laid. The decision says:

"England, then, could legally impart no protection to her subjects concerned in the destruction of the Caroline, either as a party to any war, to any act of public jurisdiction exercised by way of defence, or sending her servants into a territory at peace. That her act was one of mere abritrary usurpation, was not denied on the argument, nor has it been denied by any one except England herself. I should not, therefore, have examined the nature of the transaction to any considerable extent, had it not been necessary to see whether it was of a character belonging to the law of war or peace. I am entirely satisfied that it belongs to the latter; that there is nothing in the case except a body of men, without color of authority, bearing muskets, and doing the deeds of arson and death; that it is impossible, even for diplomatic ingenuity, to make it a case of legitimate war, or that it can possibly claim to come within any law of war, public, private, or mixed.—Even the British Minister is too just to call it war; the British Government do not pretend it was war."

There are no facts more clearly laid down in the laws of nations, than the absolute jurisdiction of a nation over its own soil; its unquestionable right to punish aliens for offences against its laws, and that the authority of every sovereign ceases with the boundary of his dominions. "In whatsoever he has no authority he is no king and may be resisted; for wheresoever the authority ceases the king ceases too, and becomes like other men who have no authority." The civil authorities of New York, in arresting McLeod and holding him for trial, have done nothing more than there is precedent for, and that is clearly sanctioned by international law. The decision continues:

"This brings us to the great question in the cause. We have seen that a capital offence was committed within our territory in time of peace, and the remaining inquiry is whether England has placed the offenders above the law and above our jurisdiction, by ratifying and approving such a crime. It is due to her, in the first place, to deny that it has been so ratified and approved. She has approved a public act of ligitimate defence only. She cannot change the nature of things. She cannot turn that into lawful war which was murder in time of peace. She may, in that way, justify the offender as between him and his own government. She cannot bind foreign courts of justice, by insisting that what in the eye of the whole world was a deliberate and prepared attack, must be protected by the laws of self-de-[illegible]."

The decision is, throughout, an able document, and just such a view of the case as is consonate with strict right, and a just sense of national honor. What will Mr. Fox do now? is a query started from every quarter. What matters it to us what he does, or what England herself does? If we believe ourselves right, it is ours to maintain our position even should it be at the cost of a war: a war need not be feared at present, however—the swaggering tone of John Bull will settle down into sober second thought before such a consummation is reached then such a project will surely be abandoned.

MCLEOD.—The impression having gone abroad that McLeod's counsel would appeal from the recent decision of the Supreme Court, to the court for the correction of Errors, the Utica Observer states that they entertain no such intention, but in accordance with the request of the prisoner will proceed to trial immediately.

'The argument of the Supreme Court,' says that paper, 'is deemed to have settled conclusively the legal points in the controversy; and the hope of obtaining a reversal of its decision by an appeal to the Court of Errors, is not we believe, indulged by any body. McLeod is now in charge of the Sheriff of this county, in whose custody he will probably remain until his trial, which we learn, he is anxious should take place as soon as possible, being entirely confident, as he asserts, of his ability to furnish the most conclusive proof that he had no participation in the outrage for which he stands indicted.'

On the application of McLeod, the venue of trial has been changed from Niagara to Oncida County, and the examination will commence in September next. —New World.

WESTWARD HO!—The Milwauke Sentinel says: "There never has been a time when settlers were flocking into Wiskonsin in greater numbers than now. Every boat brings a large number of immigrants of the most respectable character, and the immigration by land is very considerable. The position of the Territory is an enviable one, and the inducement for settlers is greater than in any other portion of the West."

☞DURABLE WHITEWASH.—To make whitewash durable and prevent it from cracking, the water in which the lime is mixed should be fully saturated with salt, before the lime is put in.

A New York paper states that there is nearly one thousand five hundred grog-shops open in that city every Sunday.

WAR STEAMERS.—Since the publication of the report of Mr. King, of the House of Representatives, on the subject of a Home Squadron, public attention seems to be earnestly directed toward the matter. The New York Journal of Commerce, alluding to the course adopted by Great Britain, and the advantage she will possess in being able to turn her mail vessels into war steamers, thinks that with the economical views of the American Government, it can hardly be expected that we shall undertake to compete with England in the mode adopted by her; but nevertheless, we must have some contrivance by which we can resist whatever vessels she may send against us, or our seaports will be at her mercy. The most available & efficent plan yet proposed is thought by the Journal to be that lately suggested by Mr. Redfield. His plan is briefly this: to have always at hand a sufficient number of heavy Paixan's Cochran's bomb cannon to supply all our passenger steamers with one or two, or more, according to their capacity, strength, and power of working; and also to have a sufficient corps of naval artillerist, drilled to this especial service, and rendered as perfect in the science of gunnery as study and practice can make them. Engineers and deck hands, of the proper character, could be obtained without difficulty, it is persumed, in sufficient numbers, on the spur of the occasion. Thus provided, in ten days could be put afloat a fleet of armed steamers, which, in connexion with forts and other means of defence, would render the situation of an invading fleet very uncomfortable. Mr. Redfield has shown that passenger steamboats possess alertness, they would be far superior to the British or French steamers. They would also be less exposed to destruction by Paixan shot than heavier vessels, inasmuch as the shot would pass directly through them, instead of lodging and exploding on board.—There is no limit scarcely, to the force which in this way we could bring to bear upon an enemy on our own coast. With the preparations above indicated, it would be perfectly practicable, on very short notice, to put afloat five hundred armed steamers. The number of artillerists required would not be large: but they must be men of character, skill and courage, and must be paid accordingly.

Of course Mr. Redfield's plan does not supercede the construction, and use of a suitable number of heavy steamers, like those now building. But these alone, unless their number were much larger than it is likely to be at present, would be very inadequate to possible emergencies.—Phil. Sat. Ev. Post.

LONG SPEECHES.—The unconquerable propensity to talk,—to make long, uninteresting speeches on any and every subject,—is the greatest bar to the despatch of business in Congress. If instead of sending eminent orators to Congress, who must make speeches in order to sustain their reputation, we would send thither a greater number of sound, sensible, practical men, who have been more in the habit of acting than of talking, the doings of Congress would be characterized with more wisdom as well as despatch. The Newark Advertiser re-publishes the following extract of a letter by Mr. Jefferson, which may be appropriate by quoted in connection with this subject. "I served with General Washington in the Legislature of Virginia before the Revolution, and during it with Dr. Franklin in Congress. I never heard either of them speak ten minutes at a time, not to any but the main point which was to decide the question. They laid their shoulders to the great points, knowing that the little ones would follow of themselves. If the present Congress errs in too much talking, how can it be otherwise in a body to which the people send men who question every thing, yield nothing, and talk by the hour?"—ib.

CHARGE OF SEDUCTION.—The Rev. Mr. Van Zandt, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, at Rochester, it is stated in Mc Kenzie's Volunteer, has been held to bail in the sum of $3000, on a charge of having seduced a young girl, sixteen years of age. The complaint has been brought by the parents of the child, and is of so scandalous a character to bring against a clergyman, that nothing but the clearest proof should warrant a belief of it.—Such proof, if the facts were stated correctly, it seems, can be produced. Mr. Van Zandt is rector of Grace Church, in Rochester, with an amiable wife, and three or four lovely children, some wealth, a comfortable income, and denies all that cannot be proved against him.—The vestry have had their pastor under examination, and stopped his preaching, and it if said that the Bishop had arrived to conduct the spiritual investigation —Phil. Post.

EXECUTION OF THE BLACK MEN AT ST. LOUIS.—The four black men convicted at St. Louis of arson and murder, suffered the penalty of their crimes, on the 9th ult by hanging. About 15.000 persons were present to witness their execution. Each of the men addressed the multitude previous to the execution; and as usual on such occasions, piously enjoined them to take a solemn warning from themselves. Warwick never moved after the swinging motion was over. Seward struggled violently for the first few minutes; and Brown gave indications of life for nearly ten minutes; but Madison died without a pang.

SEASONABLE RELIEF.—The citizens of Troy held a public meeting after the disastrous fire at Waterford, and $2000 were at once subscribed to relieve the sufferers.

LOSS OF THE FRENCH STEAMER POLLUX. The catastrophe occurred at 11 o'clock of the night of the 17th. Her crew consisted of 50 seamen, and she had 46 passengers. Fortunately all on board were saved, except an old Neapolitan captain who was drowned. The following details had reached Marseilles: The Pollux sailed from Civita Vecchia at half past four o'clock in the evening. At eleven o'clock the man on watch exclaimed "A light ahead." The captain then went forward and observed that there were three lights, which designated a steamboat. It is said that the captain ordered the steersman to port his helm.—At this time the Pollux was sailing at the rate of thirteen knots an hour, and the Mongibello coming against her at the rate of eleven knots an hour. When the passengers observed that the two vessels were approaching each other, they exclaimed, "Stop, stop, you are going to sink us." The steersman put his helm hard up, but it was too late, the two vessels struck; the Mongibello's bowsprit carried away the chimney of the Pollux, and her bow struck in the side of that vessel. Then commenced a scene of confusion impossible to be described.—The steersman of the Pollux saved himself by springing on board the Mongibello, the crew followed his example, but the captain, quarter-master, and three others exerted themselves to save the passengers, though the water at this time reached their necks. The captain tho't he had saved every one, but the cries of distress were again heard on board the Pollux. A boat was then sent from the Mongibello, which saved seven persons, when her unfortunate captain fainted on the deck of the Mongibello. Every thing on board the Pollux was lost, the passengers' baggage and letters, and even the ship's papers.

☞TEMPERANCE.—The papers are filled with accounts of the most cheering character, of the success of Temperance principles. They are now triumphing over all opposition, and by thousands, even the drunkards, once considered hopeless cases, are rallying around the banner of "Entire Abstinance." It is gratifying to the lover of his country, as well as to the christian, to read the accounts of the celebration of the day of Independence. For a long time it was a day of dissipation and riot, resulting in disease and suffering. There is doubtless too much of this even now, but thousands who were accustomed to do evil have learned to do well, and have celebrated the day in a becoming manner.—The temperance gatherings were numerous, and comprised all classes of the community. The old and the young acted on that principle which is the guard of youth and the support of age; and the rich and the poor pursued together a course which will secure the possession of one, and advance the interests of the other; and peace and order, health and happiness are the results of these "cold-water" celebrations. May they be followed by the outpourings of the Divine Spirit, that those who are guarding themselves from intemperance, may by the grace of God be fitted for the pure enjoyments of Heaven.—Bap. Rec.

THE JEWS' RETURN.—Gentlemen who have paid particular attention to some of the remarkable prophecies of the Scriptures, believe that they see in the leading political events of the day many indications of the near approach of the millenium, when all nations shall be bro't to worship the true God. The return of the Jewish nation to Palestine, and the resumption of worship in the temple at Jerusalem, are regarded as among the events which must necessarily happen before that great purpose is accomplished. The political movement, here spoken of, taken in connection with the efforts of missionaries, who have obtained a footing on almost every section of the globe, may serve to show that the millenial era is probably not as far distant as the thoughtless effect to believe. The subject is one that affords food for much reflection, and proceedings of the allied powers in regard to the Holy Land, will therefore be watched with absorbing interest.—Am. Sen.

LOST SHIP.—The United States ship Brandywine, sailed this morning at 7 o'clock, under sailing orders, we understand, to return to the Mediterranean station.

Capt. Bolton who came home in this ship, has been relieved at his own request, and Capt. Geissinger is now the commander.

Captain Geissinger is the sole surviving officer of the gallant Wasp, having been then a Midshipman sent into Savannah with a prize, after the capture of the British sloops Avon and Pelican.

Nothing was ever heard subsequently of the Wasp, and her fate is only conjectured by the circumstance that a heavy British sloop of war arrived in a shattered condition in one of the out-ports, reporting that she had an engagement with a large American corvette and escaped. This probably, was the last noble effort of the doomed Wasp, foundering, perhaps, from the effects of battle and storm, but still unconquered.—American.

MAIL ROBBERY.—The mail was robbed on the 6th ult. between Augusta and Milledgeville, Ga., by two negroes. Among the packages of letters rifled was that of Augusta of the 5th, containing letters from New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, of the 2d June. Of the money abstracted, about $300 have been recovered.

We give below a letter addressed to Rev. W. Nast the editor of the Christian Apologist, translated into English, by Br. Nast and published in the W. C. Advocate. Do you think the priests are as poor as they represent themselves to be? —S W. C. Advocate.

From the W. C. Advocate.

LETTER FROM A CATHOLIC.—Dear Br. Elliott: The following article has been handed to me by a respectable Catholic German. I have translated it for three reasons, 1st. As a proof, that there is a spirit of free inquiry among the German Catholics. 2d. Because you, who are so well acquainted with the polity of the Roman Catholic Church, and the bearing she has upon the republican institutions of this country, would be far more able to answer the inquirer, and to make the proper comments upon this important subject than I. 3. That the aim of the writer, to have this subject publicly discussed, might be attained.

W. NAST.

From the Christian Apologist.

Mr. Editor: Although I am no subscriber of your paper, it falls sometimes into my hands, and the religious controversy, in which you are engaged, with the Wahrheitsfreund, (the German Catholic paper,) convinced me fully, that there is some truth in your attacks. Being a Catholic myself, I cannot agree with your religious views, and you must bring forward stronger reasons to convince me, that my faith is wrong; but I am no more a friend of the hierarchal doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church than you are, and against these you ought to war, if you wish to accomplish some good; for then you would unite with you, all lovers of the truth.

I hope my frank language will not excite in you unpleasant feelings. Convinced that you love truth, I take the liberty to turn your attention to the following point.

I suppose you know that the Bishop of Cincinnati owns all the property of all Catholic congregations in the State of Ohio, and this, I believe, is the case with all the bishops in the United States. What immense wealth is in this way concentrated in the person of a bishop, and what power over the minds of all the Catholics in this State is thereby given to him! Look, for instance, only at the real estate lately purchased in this city.

He, who should think, that this money power, concentrated in the person of a single individual, might become dangerous only in a political respect, is very much mistaken; for we know, that riches give power and therefore this money power, will, as soon as the reasonable time has come, be employed to suppress the other religious sects; and since liberty of conscience can only be where there is political liberty, the former will perish with the latter. But this is not all. The peculiar circumstances which are connected with this case, make the danger so much the greater.

The Bishop receives his office, not by the election of the Catholic congregations of this State, but by the authority of the Pope of Rome—temporal as well as spiritual foreign potentate, whose subjects, with their assistants, who are likewise not chosen by the congregations, which they serve, are obliged to render unlimited obedience to the commands of the Pope. All the Catholics of the United States are therefore guided by a foreign sovereign, who can feel no interest for our political institutions, and whose deadly hatred against every other religious sect is well known. He, who cannot see the detrimental consequences of this fact, must be blind.

The Constitution of the United States forbids every one, without special permission, to accept of a foreign office; and yet this privilege, made so much more important by large real estate, is taken without contradiction by the Roman Catholic. Or am I mistaken? This is the reason, why I wish this matter brought to a public investigation; for I wished either to have my wrong impressions corrected or I am in hopes, that the Legislature will take measures by which the danger, which I dread, may be averted, and the Bishop may not only be forbiden to gain more property, but compelled to give back what he already possesses.

I would not trouble you with this affair if I did not know that the subject being on religion, would not be admitted in our political papers of this city, and that the "Friend of Truth," although he hangs out the sign of truth, is not open to such inquiries.

TEMPERANCE CAUSE IN PITTSBURG.—The cause is going on well. All the wards of the city, and several of the towns, villages, and townships, immediately around have formed separate societies auxiliary to a general one; and we will try and give the names of the several officers, and places of meeting of all next week. About ten thousand of all classes have already joined the several societies in Pittsburgh and Allegheny, in the towns, and within a circle of five miles around the city—viz:

The Roman Catholic Church upwards of	2,500
Joined in the last month, since the arrival of Vickers and Small,	4,000
In all the other societies of our cities, villages, and churches,	3,500
	10,000

ANOTHER STEP.—The Exchange Hotel at Hartford, Conn., is hereafter to be conducted on temperance principles.

THE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE.

WEDNESDAY, ... AUGUST 4, 1841.

☞The obituary notice of J. S. Horne, of ...ia, in our next.

☞We call particular attention to the lead- article on our second page, on "mobs;" and ...e its appeals will be regarded.

☞"A Kentuckian," will have to excuse us ...n publishing his criticisms, unless he permit ...proper name to accompany them.

☞We have received a communication from ...n Observer," on the support of the ministry, ...ch contains some good things, but which we ...ge, without some amendment, would not be ...t to publish.

☞Br. T. Foster is among our most efficient ...nts. If others would follow his example we ...uld be much relieved and assisted. He visits ...delinquents, gets the money when he can, ...d when he cannot, takes their notes.

GRAFTED FRUIT.—We call the attention of ...reader to the communication of Mr. E. Nich- ..., in relation to his nursery, in this paper.— ...oydsville, the place of his residence, is five ...les west of St. Clairsville, O., on the Na- ...nal Pike.

TRUE POLITENESS.—A correspondent of the ...estern Reserve Cabinet, writes to the editor ...f that paper, inquiring what true politeness is. ...e editor responds; "it is to pay your own pos- ...ge when you write to an editor,"—which it ap- ...ars he had forgotten to do.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK for August, is received. ...is an interesting number; is embellished with ...steel engraving—the Light Keeper's Daughter, ...by Dick,—and colored fashions—five figures. ...whoever wants this work let them send $3, ...stpaid, to L. A. Godey, 211 Chesnut street, ...iladelphia.

THE HARVEST.—The Harvest is now secured ...th the exception of the oats. The wheat, in ...is neighborhood, will not yield more than the ...ird of an average crop. Hay, on the low lands, ...is greatly benefited by the late rains, and is ...obably better than last year; but the rain com- ...g too late for the upland meadows will make ...e crops short. Oats, we should say, will give ...average yield. We speak of this immediate ...ighborhood. The corn looks promising. The ...eather for the hay harvest has been remarkably ...e, and the article, generally, has been secured ...prime order.

THE MCCONNELSVILLE FRAY.—The political ...team ship of Morgan county goes on the high ...essure principle Surrounded with these circum- ...ances the editors of the two political parties ...rite against each other with much warmth, and ...equently deal in personalities. Mr. Teesdale, ...the "Standard," had charged Mr. Robinson, of ...e "Valley," who is also Treasurer of the coun- ..., with malfeasence in office. Excited at this, ...r. R. met his opponent on the 22d ult. in front ...his office door, and assaulted him with a hickory ...ne, as represented, something like an inch in ...ameter, and beat him over the head and should- ...s, so that the life of Teesdale was endangered ...r several days, from bruizes and supposed frac- ...ures of the skull.

Now both these gentlemen are strangers to us; ...e only know them editorially. As far as this in- ...ercourse is concerned they have both treated us ...indly, especially Mr. R. When we started our ...aper, he gave us, perhaps, the most flattering ...ommendation to the public that we have receiv- ...d. And if it be in our power we will some day ...eturn the favor. But still, as a conservator of ...he press, we cannot, conscientiously, let him ...ass without reproof. His act was part and par- ...el of the mobocracy of the day, which should be ...discountenanced by every friend of order. Be- ...ide, Br. Robinson, you have given your antago- ...ist, in thus acting, decidedly the advantage ...ver you in this controversy; for the public gen- ...rally suppose that when a man uses the cane, it ...is because he has no argument.

☞The following, from the Cross & Journal, ...of the 30th ult., will explain to our readers, how ...the papers are delayed and lost.

Post Office Miscarriages.—If some of our ...friends fail of receiving their papers in due time, ...they must not impute the blame to us. Our pa- ...pers are deposited regularly in the Post Office ...every Thursday evening, in good wrappers well ...tied, and with the name of the Post Office to ...which it is bound inscribed on one of the papers, ...so that should the wrapper come off, the Postmas- ...ter can furnish another, and forward it to its des- ...tination, as easy as to return it to us. But not- ...withstanding this precaution, packages are occa- ...sionally returned to us for re-direction. The ...Bedford package for July 2d, came back two or ...three days since, returned from some office in ...that vicinity; and the Reading package of last ...week came back on Monday, returned perhaps ...from Cincinnati. We started each package on ...again, and take this means to inform our subscri- ...bers in those places that this failure is not our ...fault.

☞The following note from Br. T. H. Stock- ...ton will shew that Br. Reeves has taken his de- ...parture for his native land:

"July 21.—Yesterday Br. and Sister Reeves went on board of a fine a new Liverpool Liner (the "Shenandoah,") as ever sailed.—The Me- thodist Protestants have in the city and districts of Philadelphia:—1. A new brick church in Ken- sington. 2. A congregation in the western part of the city. 3. The corner stone of a new church was laid on Monday last in the northern district. 4. An attempt is making to collect a society in Southwark. 5. The new Methodist Protestant chapel, corner of Wood and Eleventh streets, is to be dedicated next Sabbath. There are 500 members of the Methodist Protestant Church in the city and county of Philadelphia. Numbers are added weekly. We have four stationed min- isters.

July 23.—Br. Reeves preached four times and Sister Reeves once while in the city. The socie- ties were much pleased and profited. May they have a safe voyage, a happy visit, and a glad re- turn to greater usefulness than ever. I have no room for more. Yours, Resp'y. T. H. S.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE, August 4.—Flour 4,50; wheat 80 cents.

MASSILLON, July 22.—Flour, 4,75; Wheat 1,00.—Gazette.

BALTIMORE, July 24.—Flour—The sales of Howard street Flour has been quite limited this week, the old inspected lots at 5,50, and 5,62½ for fresh inspected. The stocks are small and receipts not increasing; and from the contin- ued dry weather which has contributed to exhaust the streams so as to militate against grinding— and crops of grain not sustaining, so far as they have been garnered, the calculations of the far- mer; and those growing, or outstanding, indica- ting nothing more favorable—induce dealers to attach more than ordinary value, and to hold the article with more firmness. Similar considera- tions influence holders of City Mills. Flour from new Wheat, to the extent of a few hundred bbls. has been sold at 6,00, in the fulfilment of con- tracts; at which price possibly other parcels can yet be had; but there are millers whose views are beyond 6,00.—Lyford.

NEW YORK, July 26.—Flour—Ohio Canal, 5,25, a 5,37½; Western Canal 5,50 a 5,56¼; Michigan 5,52a 5,37½.—Bicknell.

PHILADELPHIA, July 27.—Flour—For superfine flour, prices are steady, the demand but moderate, and stock light. We quote fresh ground, standard brands at 5,37½; Western 5,12½.—Bicknell.

Martin; who, after first stabbing Capt. REV. MR. PIERPOINT.—This trial is still pro- gressing at Boston. It was thought that if the present investigation should lead to his severance from the church, he would be followed by at least one hundred and forty proprietors, and adult pew- holders, and that the Sabbath school would en- tirely be broken up by the retirement of the teachers, who speak of the character of Mr. Pier- point in the highest terms, as a minister and a gentleman.

It pains us to record that on the 8th ult. at Cochransville, Chester county, Pa., an altercation took place between a Mr. Fleming, storekeeper, and Wm. Coo- per, a man employed by him. Cooper pushed Mr. Fleming violently against a fence, whereupon the latter seized a piece of lath, and in the act of raising or draw- ing it, Cooper threw a stone, which struck him with great force on the artery im- mediately back of the root of the ear, when he fell, and, it is supposed, did not breathe afterwards.—Ph. Cour.

SMUGGLING.—The custom house of- ficers at Baltimore, detected an attempt to smuggle a quantity of goods, by some German passengers on board the ship Eli- za, which arrived at that port recently. THE WILLIAM BROWN PASSENGERS.—A correspondent of the Richmond Complier says:

"On board the ship Richmond, now in our river, is a portion of the passengers belonging to the ill-fated ship William Brown, consisting of eleven females and a boy. You will recollect the inhuman fate of a portion of the passengers of this ship after they had been on board a boat about three days: they were with fiend-like barbarity torn from their remaining rela- tives and friends, and consigned to a wa- tery grave by brute force, upon the pre- text that it was necessary for the preser- vation of the balance. The boy now here witnessed the destruction of his fa- ther and mother—torn ruthlessly from him, without the ability to yield them as- sistance. These destitute human beings are now upon our shores, fit objects, in- deed, for the generosity of the charitable and humane. Will not our good citizens come forward to alleviate their anguish and distress? Will they not come for- ward in this hour of need, render the sit- uation of these females somewhat com- fortable, and enable them to reach their destination, which is, I learn, Pennsylva- nia? Let those who have the will and the ability, open a subscription at Lynch's Coffee House. Their example will no doubt be followed by those who may have a mite to bestow.—Bick. 27th ult.

FROM WASHINGTON.—On Wednesday, the House passed the Bill making a pro- vision for a HOME SQUADRON, by the unexampled majority of ONE HUN- DRED & SEVENTY SIX VOTES. It appropriates $789,310 for the pay and subsistence, erection and repairs, medi- cines & contingent expenses of 2 frigates, 2 sloops, 2 small vessels, and two armed steamers, to be employed as a home squad- ron.

Two other important bills were also re- ported—the one (essentially the same as the bill reported in the Senate on the same subject) to establish a Fiscal Bank of the United States; the other to establish a uniform system of Bankruptcy. Both bills received their first and second read- ing.—ib.

The news from Washington is cheer- ing. Thousands will be gratified to learn that in the Senate on Friday, the Bank- rupt Bill was passed to its third reading (which is considered tantamount to its pas- sage.)

The motion of the Opposition to amend the bill so as to include State corporations was rejected by a vote of 34 to 18.—ib.

THE ILLINOIS BANK ROBBERY.—An offi- cer of the Bank, writing to St. Louis, states that the entire loss of the Bank is $82,492,82; of which $36,340 was in cur- rent bank paper, $14,350 in branch pa- per of other banks—less $5,918 of unfil- ed notes which were not taken. Gold, $8,063,54; silver, $5,432,28. In addi- tion, nearly all the bills discounted are stated to be missing—say over $100,000 supposed to have been burnt, as some tra- ces of them were found in the fire place. The discount ledgers, and all the valua- ble books were torn into fragments, and scattered in all directions over the floors. Boxes of silver were left open on the floor. Nothing has transpired to give a clue to the robbers, though a thousand rumors are afloat.

PIECE OF WRECK.—The piece of wreck recently taken into Penobscot Bay in Maine, and supposed to be a part of the wreck of the steam ship President, proves to be a carline or beam, 10 by 6 in. quite new, 12 feet of deck plank, 4 or 5 in. wide. It was found in lat. 43, lon. 70. The low- er side of the plank was painted white, the carline was first painted white, and af- terwards a light yellow. It is supposed to have belonged to a ship which was cast way east of Castine.

MORMONISM.—The Galena (Ill.) Budget cautions its readers against believing the stories circulated in the newspapers, with regard to the Mormons in the West, and their hostile preparations. It says that at the rate Jo Smith's strength increases it will be about a million of years before he will be able to cope with the power of that State.

For the Western Recorder.

Dear Sir: The Recorder came to me having the article headed, "Grafted Fruit Trees want- ed" marked with a pen. In accordance with the request it contains, I inform you that I expect to have from eight to twelve thousand trees the coming fall, that will be from 4½ to 7 feet high. They are chiefly two years old from the graft or bud. We have set over 22,000 grafts the present spring, and we expect to bud at least 10,000.—The weather has been so unusually dry, I expect to loose a great many grafts—very likely one-third. The grafts of this season will probably be from 2 to 4½ feet high. I have about 200 kinds of apples, 100 kinds of pears, and a less numerous variety of peaches, cherries, plums, appricots, grape-vines, goose-berries, currants, rasp-berries, &c., it hav- ing been my aim in every instance to obtain the best.

My selections are from the following sources:

1st. The surrounding country, being such as have proved themselves to be superior. Of this class are the largest number of my apple grafts. Among them may be named: The Bow, Queen, Early Pennock, Sharp's Early Bank, Cash Sweet, Lant's Sweet, Angle Sweet, Monarch, Rambo, Codlin, Belleflower, Warren Pippin, Pennock, Russett, Rhode Island Greening, Pearmain, Willow, Never-fail, Ever-sound, Fall Pippin, two kinds of Newtown Pippins, Fall Vandever, Red Vandever, English Red-streak, Roman-stem, Green Winter Sweet, Mounds, &c. &c.

2d. The second class were selected in the Mi- ami country chiefly from the selections of the Shakers, Cyrus Wharton and Nathan Linton, who have fully proved them in that country.—Among these may be mentioned: Apples—Swarr, Esopus Spitzenberg, Large Green Winter, Gold- en Russett or Sheep Nose, Sweet Russett, Cum- berland, Spice, &c. Pears—Linton, a new and superior winter pear, and Wharton and Belans- ga, (also new and very superior,) Orange Burga- mot, Winter Orange, Ambretta, Royal Winter, Elizabethtown, Green Chissel, St. Michael, Shaker's Winter Pear, &c.

3d. A few kinds of Mr. Evans, nursery man, near Salem, Columbiana county, Ohio, viz:—Blockley Pippin, Prince's Everlasting, Monstrous Pippin, Cook's Green, Winter Sweet, Shippon's Russett, Fall Sweet, &c.

4th. Of David Thomas, Greatfield, Cayuga, New York, long a leading writer for the Genesee Farmer, and his son is now co-editor of the New Genessee Farmer: Jonathan, and over twenty other kinds, including Pears and Cherries.

5th. Of Robert Manning, of Salem, Massa- chusetts. This gentleman has a high standing for integrity and correctness. I have had $40 worth of grafts of him within the present and past year, beside carriage. He imports from every part of the world, and proves the new varieties on his own farm. He has over 1400 varieties, actually bearing, including all the new Flemish Pears, &c. He has upon his honor sent me the choicest of his collection, and from an examina- tion of books and newspapers, I feel highly satis- fied with his choice. I obtained them at what he esteems the very low rate of 25 cents the varie- ty, but as the grafts have not hitherto got here in time, I have both years lost a number of the va- rieties, and about eight or ten is as many as I have succeeded to make now of any kind, and consequently I will have but few of them to sell. They include a majority of the very choicest Pears and Apples named and described in Hen- rick's Orchardist. Of the Pears I may name, Easter Buene, Wirtemberg, Charles of Austria, Glout Morceau, &c. &c.

6th. Of Robert St. Clair, near Baltimore: 14 varieties of Peaches, and 6 of Cherries, and 3 of Apples—James River, Black Coal and Hop- kin's apple.

7th. Of J. E. Steer, nursery man, Loudon county, Va.: 11 varieties, including Loudon Pippin, Roll's Juneating, Steer's unknown cher- ry, (the best he has ever seen,) Love's Pear, &c.

The first class I will sell on my own knowledge, the others on that of those from whom I obtained them, and their character in books and agricul- tural journals. I shall as soon as possible prove them all on my own lands. Grafts that have cost me high I must sell at such prices for awhile. Others are: Apples 12½ cents each, or $10 per hundred. All others, 25 cents each, or $20 per hundred. Trees one year from the graft and 3½ feet high, will be furnished at $90 per thousand, and were I planting a large orchard, I had as leave plant this as any other size bating not over one year in time. I say this from experience.—Before fall I will send a printed catalogue.

Respectfully, yours,
E. NICHOLS.

JOHN BURNS.

P. S.—Br. Brown's quarterly meeting is at the same time, and he requests me to say that he ex- tends the same invitation, J. B.

Mr. Editor: As the matter on which we write is of considerable importance to the itinerant ministers, and preachers of the Pittsburgh Dis- trict, we whose names are hereunto subscribed, have agreed to venture a call on the stewards of the circuits and stations, to make conference collections, in accordance with the rules of our discipline. Our superintendents will every one of them be asked at conference, if they have re- quired the stewards to do their duty in relation to this matter. So sayeth a resolution of our last Annual Conference, and we want them all to be ready to answer in the affirmative—and especially do we want a good lot of money, by ministers, preachers, and delegates, paid over into the hands of the conference steward, to meet the deficiencies of those ministerial brethren, who have labored hard the past year on poor cir- cuits, and have received but little to feed and clothe themselves and families.

Yours, truly,

SOLITUDE AND PRAYER.

Some lone retreat to me is sweet,
When in a melancholy mood,
Where all is still save the whippoorwill,
Chanting in the lonely wood;
At fall of night, from mortal sight,
Awhile to steal away,
Disrob'd of care, to spend in prayer,
The solemn hour of parting day.
On this solitude let none intrude,
Far hence be every wand'ring foot,
Till alone I now may moan,
At some tall poplar's shaded root.

THE EXPERIENCE OF A DRUNKARD'S WIFE.

The following contains the experience of a woman, who, for many years, had been afflicted with almost intolerable sufferings from being the companion of a drunkard—read at a Temperance meeting held in the 2d Associate Reformed church, in Pittsburgh, June 21st, 1841.

"FRIENDS—I feel it my duty to attempt to give you the experience and sufferings of a drunkard's wife. A "Reformed Drunkard" may try to guess the feelings of his wife, but he knows nothing about it. I know by sad experience of 18 long years what they suffer.

My sufferings began at the time (when in a fit of intoxication) my husband enlisted as a soldier. Not knowing what had become of him, I started through the city in search of him, and found him at the place of rendezvous. I used every means to get him discharged but all in vain. One of the officers insisted on my going to Florida with my husband, but I considered that too gross an insult to my character, for I maintained a good one. I loved him dearly and could not bear to see him dragged from me; for he and the infant I had were all that was dear to me in this world, having been left a desolate orphan.

Being determined to obtain his discharge by some means, I stole him away and concealed him in the house of a friend. A band of soldiers came to the house, and with drawn swords demanded him of me; or where he was concealed. This was a heart rending pang, almost too great to be endured, yet I was firm to my purpose. I sent him to the country by night, then, with letters of recommendation, I started with my infant to the city of Washington to the Secretary of War, there plead my own cause, and by tears and entreaties obtained his full discharge, returned home, paid $15 at the place of rendezvous, and obtained permission for him to return home. This was a source of great pleasure to us both, for, when sober, he was one of the best of husbands; and I loved him dearly. He promised to do better, but this did not continue long; he soon sunk again into all the vices of the town. Although at his trade he earned from $15 to $20 a week, myself and children were often without bread to eat; I was obliged to take in work to save us from starvation, and furnish him with bread when he failed to do it. At length he became so destitute of shame and sensibility, that he would stand in a grog shop and sell to the fiend-like landlord the clothes off his back, and even take mine, and sell them for money to obtain drink. Like a raging maniac he would fight and quarrel abroad, and then come home and vent his spite on me, breaking and destroying every thing in his reach. Still, by tears and entreaties, I strove to prevail on him to renounce his evil practices, referred him to the example of his pious father, and endeavored to impress upon his mind the awful responsibility that rested on him as a father, to set a good example before his dear children, begging him, at the same time, to have compassion on me and remember his marriage vows. Frequently have I on my bended knees implored his mercy; but did this move his heart? No!! What was his reply? "You d——d——! You think to coax me out of some money." Now, my respectable audience, what do you suppose were my feelings on receiving such words from him, who had solemnly promised before God and man to love, comfort and support me all the days of my life? If my heart was made of adamant must it not melt at thus beholding myself a helpless victim in the hands of a merciless tyrant, having neither father nor mother, or sister or brother to fly to in the hour of despair? Often have I sat alone over a few glimmering coals till 2 or 3 o'clock: sometimes till the break of day, waiting with breathless anxiety, to hear his footstep, fearing lest he had fallen by the hand of some ruffian, and often did I pray that God would protect him and bring him home, drunk or sober, believing he would be safe while with me. Often have I set over the bed of a dying child for days and nights alone, while he was spending abroad what I needed at home—without one word of comfort or sympathy from him who should have shared all my griefs and sorrows, and ought to have poured the balm of consolation into my wounded heart; but, alas! this comfort was not for me. I bore my griefs alone, unpitied. This often caused me to become indifferent to every thing around me; but on looking up to my children, worse than fatherless—I was again aroused to action, tried to bear up under all my trials, knowing that their support depended on my efforts. At one time, painfully do I recollect it, I had an infant sick for some months, at length it partially recovered, but from the effects of the disease, it was left entirely blind. During its sickness I thought my husband tried how bad he could be. Not able to work and attend the sick child, I was without bread for those who were well, or money to get medicine for the sick one. One night, while in this condition, I gave my scanty meal to my children, the last morsel in the house, I then sat down to finish some work to take home in the morning that I might get something for breakfast; while thus employed, my husband came home at midnight and demanded some supper. I had none to give him, he flew into a rage, swore he would kill me, seized me, threw me across the table, breaking some of the dishes on it, seized me by the hair, and tried to beat my face upon the broken dishes; but being strong, I extricated myself from his grasp; frightened almost to phrensy, I fled from the house. I then drew near the door and begged him to hand me the poor blind child; he snatched up the tongs, and made a blow at my head, swearing he would kill me. Oh! the thought of that awful night almost freezes the blood cold in my veins! I had the child lying on a bed under the window; he stood over it and with the tongs beat out every pane of glass, and then the sash itself, while I stood imploring him to give me my babe. The poor blind sufferer was crawling about over the broken glass, crying, mamma! mamma!! while its dear little face was bleeding in several places. At length I got it out of the house and ran away with it in my arms to one whom I thought to be my friend; but, to my astonishment and grief I was refused admittance, telling me they had often advised me to leave the vagabond, and they would do all in their power for me, but if I would live with him I must put up with what I got. I sat down on the steps with the poor blind child in my lap, forsaken and forlorn, feeling as if I was forsaken both by God and man. But it is in vain for me to describe my feelings. It is impossible for me to describe, or you to conceive what I felt.

After some time I returned to my house and saw the watchmen take him away. I sat down to finish some work, that I might get something for my children's breakfast. I never shall forget one morning when he arose; I requested him not to go from home that morning, "I have been up all night," said I, "and the child is dying." His reply was, "Dying!—Hell and Damnation! she has been dying these six months!—let her die and be d———d!" On uttering these awful words he left the house, and stayed away four days. The child died accordingly that day, and what was my situation at that time? I had no clothes to lay out the corpse, nor a spot of ground to bury it in, no money to bury the dead nor to buy bread for the living. I closed up my house, and when the neighbors inquired how the child was, I said, no better—would not let them know it was dead—my feelings being so much wounded at my wretched situation, I was unwilling that they should know it. I kept the corpse three days, not knowing what to do. In the meantime I sent one of my children to search for my husband; he could not be found. In the last extremity I applied to a gentleman of my acquaintance to assist me to bury my child.—He said he would if I would promise to leave my husband. I told him if he would bury it, I would work for him till I should pay for it, but I would not leave my husband. I said I had always discharged my duty as a virtuous wife, let him deviate from the path of rectitude as far as he might. I had taken him for better for worse, and was determined to enjoy the comfort of a clear conscience, which was still a source of consolation to me.

I do not disclose these facts to impress your minds, with the idea that my husband was a brute, for in his sober hours he was a kind and affectionate father; they are given merely to show what intemperance will make a man do, when under its baneful influence.

This is but a mere outline, but a drop out of the ocean of my sufferings, which continued for 18 years, and in all probability they would have continued to the present time, had it not been for the blessed influence of Temperance Societies, and the grace of God. I am happy to say, that for the last four years he has been a reformed man, and now we enjoy peace and plenty, friends and respectability.

Now, if there is a drunkard in this assembly who has a wife, let him seriously reflect that she, too, has feelings as well as I—that her heart is now wrung with anguish. Oh! pity, pity her, before it is too late; do not break the heart that has confided in you for support and consolation. Do not murder the innocent sufferer that has taken shelter under your protection. Now prove yourself a man and save yourself and the dear partner of your bosom from all the woes and all the horrors of Intemperance, by giving us your names.

THE RUSSIAN JEWS.—There are in Russia upwards of two millions of Jews. They have 1,007 Congregations; 586 synogogues; and 2,377 schools for children; very recently the Russian government has prohibited the publication of any books, except in the Russian language.—The consequence is the Jewish Printers are all thrown out of employment, for their books were all printed in German or Hebrew. They had no less than 60 printing establishments, whose workmen are thrown out of employment.—Cin. Chron.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

CASABIANCA.

There was a little boy about thirteen years old, whose name was Casabianca. His father was commander of a ship of war called the Orient. The little boy accompanied his father to the seas. His ship was once engaged in a terrible battle upon the river Nile. In the midst of the thunders of the battle, while the shot were flying thickly around, and strewing the decks with blood, this brave boy stood by the side of his father, faithfully discharging the duties which were assigned to him. At last his father placed him in a particular part of the ship, to be performing some service, and told him to remain at his post till he should call him away. As the father went to some distant part of the ship to notice the progress of the battle, a ball from the enemy's vessel laid him dead upon the deck. But the son, unconscious of his father's death, and faithful to the trust reposed upon him, remained at his post waiting for his father's orders. The battle raged dreadfully around him. The blood of the slain flowed at his feet. The ship took fire, and the threatening flames drew nearer and nearer. Still this noble-hearted boy would not disobey his father. In the face of blood, and balls, and fire, he stood firm and obedient. The sailors began to desert the burning and sinking ship, and the boy cried out, "Father, may I go?" But no voice of permission could come from the mangled body of his lifeless father. And the boy not knowing that he was dead would rather die than disobey. And there that boy stood at his post, till every man had deserted the ship; and he stood and perished in the flames. Oh, what a boy was that! Every body who ever heard of him, thinks that he was one of the noblest boys that ever was born. Rather than disobey his father, he would perish in the flames. This account has been written in poetry; and as the children who read this paper may like to see it, I will present it to them here:

The boy stood on the burning deck,
Whence all but him had fled,
The flame that lit the battle's wreck,
Shone round him o'er the dead.

Yet beautiful and bright he stood,
As born to rule the storm;
A creature of heroic blood,
A proud, though childlike form.

The flames rolled on; he would not go
Without his father's word;
That father, faint in death below,
His voice no longer heard.

He called aloud, "Say, father, say,
If yet my task be done,"
He knew not that the chieftain lay,
Unconscious of his son.

"Speak, father," once again he cried,
"If I may yet be gone,"
And—but the booming shots replied,
And fast the flames rolled on.

Upon his brow he felt their breath,
And in his waving hair;
And looked from that lone post of death,
In still, yet brave despair.

And shouted but once more aloud,
"My father, must I stay?"
While o'er him fast through sail and shroud,
The wreathing fires made way.

They wrapped the ship in splendor wild,
They caught the flag on high,
And streamed above the gallant child,
Like banners in the sky.

Then came a burst of thunder sound—
The boy—oh! where was he?
Ask of the winds that far around
With fragments strewed the sea.

With mast, and helm, and pennon fair,
That well have borne their part,
But the noblest thing that perished there,
Was that young faithful heart.

TRUE COURAGE.

"Coward! coward!" said James Lawton to Edward Wilkins, as he pointed his finger towards him.

Edward's face turned very red and then the tears started into his eyes, as he said, "James Lawton dont call me a coward."

"He is afraid," said Charles Jones, as he put his finger to his eye and pretended to cry.

"I am not afraid," said Edward; and he looked almost ready to give up; for John Taylor came forward and said, "Come on then, and show that you are not afraid."

A gentleman passing by said, "Why do you not fight the boy, tell me the reason."

The boys all stood still, while Edward said, "I will not do a wicked thing, sir, if they do call me a coward."

"That is right, my noble boy," said the gentleman. "If you fight with that boy, you really disgrace yourself, and will show that you are more afraid of the laugh, and ridicule of your companions, than of breaking the commandments of God.

"It is more honorable to bear an insult with meekness, than to fight about it.

"Beasts and brutes which have no reason, know of no other way to avenge themselves; but God has given you understanding, and though it be hard to be called a coward, and to submit to indignity and insult, yet remember the words of the wise man—"He that ruleth his spirit is greater than he that taketh a city."

"Suppose you fight with this boy, and your companions all call you a brave fellow, what will this be when we are called to stand before God?

"Many a poor deluded man has been drawn in to accept a challenge and fight a duel to show his bravery, and thus displayed to all, that he was a miserable coward, who was afraid of the sneer and laugh of his companions. Rather follow the example of that brave soldier, who when he was challenged to fight, said, "I do not fear the cannon's mouth, but I fear God."—Juvenile Reformer.

THE OATH OF UNIVERSALISTS.

The following judicial decision is in accordance with several others which have been made within a few years past in different States of the Union. The correctness of the principle on which it is based, must be manifest. Nothing tends more to weaken the power and destroy the very meaning and nature of this solemn form of appeal to God, than administering the oath to men who, by one means or another, have brought themselves to believe that the wretch who dies with perjury upon his lips meets as cordial a welcome from God as the teller of truth.—Cin. Valley.

IMPORTANT JUDICIAL DECISION.—The Augusta Chronicle states that Judge Andrews of the Northern Circuit, (Georgia,) held at the late term of the Supreme Court of Oglethrope county in a capital case, that a person could not be sworn as a witness in a Court of Justice, who did not believe in the existence of a God, the obligation of an oath, and a future state of rewards and punishments. He maintained with the Supreme Court of New York, that "Religion is a subject in which every man has a right to think according to the dictates of his understanding. It is a solemn concern between his conscience and his God, with which no human tribunal has right to meddle. But in the development of facts and the ascertainment of truth, human tribunals have a right to interfere. They are bound to see that no man's rights are impaired or taken away, but through the medium of testimony entitled to belief; and no testimony is entitled to credit unless delivered under the solemnity of an oath, which comes home to the conscience of a witness, and will prevent a lie arising, from his belief that false swearing would expose him to punishment in the life to come. On this great principle rest all our institutions, and especially the distribution of justice between men."

THE BIBLE.—Whoever has mingled in much society, as a christian pastor, has had the means of becoming convinced of the utility of a general circulation of the Holy Scriptures. We have had the pleasure of seeing the rich preferring it to his uncertain riches, and the poor man perusing it to the forgetfulness of his poverty.

Young men and maidens, turn aside from the giddy mazes of ordinary pleasures, and find inexpressible delight in the revealings of its holy, and soul inspiring pages. Neighborhoods have exchanged their vices, and under its influence, have embraced the virtues and hopes of christianity. Whole families under its guidance, have abandoned their follies and their contentions, and have turned to the Lord. No such praise can be either said or sung of any human production.—The Bible speaks and breathes of our home in heaven. It is the spiritual and the inspired in this life, by whose teachings we are both taught and fitted to believe in the life which is to come. Entire reliance on its promises inspires a sublime faith, and conformity to its precepts, in our temper and habits, leads us to a useful and an honorable career of life.—Bap. Rec.

NEW MODE OF MURDERING.—The body of a man, from which the head and hands had been severed and secreted, was discovered lately about 4 miles from Newport, Perry county, Pa. Near it were found a pistol and butcher knife. Probably he was a pedlar or drover from the West, and was thus novelly murdered to escape detection, so that the body thus mutilated could not be recognized. Our country is swarming with murderers and thieves, principally from foreign lands we presume. If our laws are not strictly guarded by a firm police, good citizens, and the fostering of religious principles, some of us who think little on these things will find ourselves in eternity, without suspecting the instrument that produced the change.—Cincinnati Reformist.

THE MISSOURIUM.—The gigantic skeleton of a so called animal is now being exhibited in this city. It is 32 feet long and 15 high—of course the living animal was considerably larger. The bones were excavated from the banks of the river, "La Homme de Terre," in Benton county, Missouri. It has been ascertained that the Missourium resembles the Leviathan as described in the book of Job. It being a tropical animal its being found in this country either proves that this country was once a tropical one by some alteration in the course of the earth or sun, or that its carcase was floated here by the flood from the old world.—ib.

MORE OF THE WILLIAM BROWN.—Joseph Stetson, another of the crew of this ill-fated ship, who was in the long-boat, arrived at this port a few days since, in the ship Crescent, Captain Ball, from Havre. He states that notwithstanding the various rumors which have been published condemning the conduct of the mate for throwing the passengers overboard when he did, but few, if any, he is convinced, if placed in the same position, could have decided with more impartiality. He even goes so far as to say, that had the mate hesitated, his command would not have been waited for: the danger and the only means of relief were too well known to the whole crew to require orders from any quarter at so critical a moment. The mate, in ordering them to lighten the boat but spoke the sentiments of the whole crew. He unhesitatingly avows that he did his part towards lightening the boat.

William Miller's statement which was published in the "Post" of the 18th of June, he says, is substantially correct, and just such a one as he conscientiously could make himself. He also states that Messer, alias Norton, assisted to lighten the boat as well as any one; and pronounces the story about drawing a knife a sheer fabrication, for there were only two knives on board, neither of which was in his possession.

We learn from another source that Captain Ball of the Crescent, had spoken in the highest terms of Stetson, as an able and experienced seaman, and in every way worthy of confidence and encouragement.

The long boat of the William Brown is now on board the Crescent. Although strong and roomy, she is but poorly qualified to stow forty-two people, and live, in any sort of rough weather. It would be well for those who have condemned the mate and crew without a hearing, to go on board the Crescent and look at the long boat.—Boston Post.

Camp-Meeting Notices.

BROWNSVILLE, LICKING, O., JULY 15, 1841.

Br. Springer: We intend holding a camp-meeting three quarters of a mile south west from this place, on Mr. Jacob Brown's farm, to commence Friday the 20th of August at 11 o'clock, to which we invite Brs. T. Foster, Thrap, Baldwin, Linder, Marshall, Fairchild, Maynard, Scott, and all others who can conveniently attend. We request all those who wish to build Wooden Tents to meet for that purpose on Saturday the 31st of this month.

WM. MUNHALL,
DAN'L KINNEY.

There will be a camp-meeting held for Ligonier circuit, three miles west of Ligonier town, on the ground occupied last year, to commence the 6th of August. As the meeting is appointed to suit Br. Ragan's visit we hope that he will not fail in his attendance. We also solicit the assistance of Brs. McCullough, Robison, Davis, Lanham, Clark, sr., Hopwood, Fordyce, Addis, Cullin, and any of our brethren, stationed or unstationed, who can assist us.

W. W. TIPTON, Sup't.

A camp-meeting, for Miami circuit, will be held at the old camp-ground, near Sidney, O., commencing on the 13th of August. As we will much need help, we earnestly solicit the aid of Brs. McGuire, Hunt, Devore, Young, Dalbey, Besse and J. Flood, with all others, who can conveniently attend. J. M. FLOOD.

CAMP-MEETING.—It is concluded by the brethren of Pittsburgh circuit and Allegheny station to hold a camp-meeting, at the old ground, on the land of James Clarke, in the vicinity of Sharpsburgh, (by Divine permission,) commencing on Monday evening, August 23

The brethren of Union circuit will perceive that our appointment, to some extent, conflicts with theirs, but unavoidably, as the harvest of this region will not permit it earlier, and later would not give time for the families in the station to prepare for the conference among them, after their return from the meeting. The friends of the Pittsburgh station are expected to participate in the meeting as on former occasions. And ministering brethren from Ohio and Youngstown circuits, and any others who can, are respectfully invited to our assistance. JOHN CLARKE, Jr.

July 16, 1841.

A camp-meeting for Mt. Vernon circuit will be held on the old camp-ground, 5 miles north-west of Mt. Vernon, commencing on the 13th of August, to which we invite the following named brethren, viz:—Springer, Marshall, Maynard, Kinney, Thrap, Myers, Mercer, Dorcus, together with all others who can attend.

C. CADDY, Sup't.,
J. B. ROBERTS, Ass't.

Frederick, Knox, O., July 17, 1841.

Such is the press of business upon our hands at the present, that it is with reluctance we yield our consent to comply with the pressing request to attend the Mt. Vernon camp-meeting, though under other circumstances it would be a pleasure But such duties we cannot conscientiously cast off; if, therefore, it will suit the convenience of some of the brethren to call with us, on the Wednesday previous to the meeting, so that we can go a few miles the same evening we will accompany them to Mt. Vernon.—ED.

CAMP-MEETINGS IN THE OHIO DISTRICT.

In the arrangements for camp-meetings and quarterly meetings the present season, I find that our brethren of some contiguous circuits have unwittingly fixed upon the same time, and have mutually solicited ministerial aid. As therefore some of the preachers are invited and expected to attend at different points at the same time, I fear the evils of disappointment and lack of help at some of the meetings. In view of preventing as far as may be this unpleasant result, the brethren will permit me, through this medium, to offer a few suggestions, below respectfully submitted.

The appointments already published are as follow:

Camp-meeting in Lima circuit, near Westminster, Aug. 6.—J. M. Young, superintendent. Those brethren from Miami, Union and Findley circuits, who can do so, are solicited to attend.

Camp-meeting in Findley circuit, near Williamstown, Aug. 13.—J Guest, Sup't.

Camp-meeting in Miami circuit, near Sidney, same time.—J. M. Flood, Sup't.

Quarterly meeting for Twin creek circuit, near Oxford, same time.—J. Flood, Sup't.

The Findley meeting, from its remoteness, will undoubtedly be necessitous.

Then the Miami meeting, I fear, may be crippled by the other meetings simultaneously held, north and south.

Will it not be well for the ministers in Lima circuit to divide—for our aged Br. Keran, (if able,) Br. Young and Br. Besse, to attend either the Findley or the Miami camp-meeting, as may be determined between themselves?

Then, cannot Br. Hunt and colleague, the two old Br. Inskeeps, Br. Davis, Br. Hamilton and Dr. Green, of Union circuit, and Br. D. Moore, of Miami circuit, attend the Findley camp-meeting?

At the same time, if Br. McGuire, Br. Crall, of Springfield, Br. T. Fall, and any other unstationed ministers or preachers from Springfield or Union circuit, who have it in their power, will attend the Miami camp-meeting, they will be gratefully and cordially received as "helpers in Christ Jesus." Also, Br. Betson and Br. Stephens, jr., if they can attend the Lima and Miami camp-meetings.

Camp-meeting in Union circuit, near Middleburg, Aug. 20.—J. C. Hunt, Superintendent.—The brethren of Findley, Lima, Springfield and Miami circuits, and any others who can are solicited to attend.

Camp-meeting in Rehoboth circuit, at Brother Floyd's, near Clarksville, same time.—R. Dobbins, Sup't.

Then, on the Thursday following, (26th) is to commence a protracted meeting, at Pt. William, Xenia circuit, to close on the Sunday evening preceding the conference. Br. D. hopes it will suit the brethren to the south, to attend one or both of these meetings on their way to conference. He particularly solicits the attendance of Brs. Snethen, McGuire, Evans, Hughey, Boyd, Barnes, G. G. Moore, Euans, Rose and Edwards, and any others who can come and help. I hope Br. Ostrom will attend as many of the meetings as he can.

I have not information of the time of the Cincinnati camp-meeting.

I trust that any other ministering brethren, either itinerant or unstationed, who may happen not to be named in the above notices, will consider themselves also to be kindly solicited to attend any of the above named meetings.

May kind heaven smile upon the efforts of His servants, and send gracious and glorious displays of His saving and sanctifying power. Amen.

MUTUAL RIGHTS
AND
Ecclesiastical Reform.

IT has been suggested by those whose opinion is worthy of regard, that a periodical work in pamphlet form, devoted principally to the interests of the Methodist Protestant Church, and to an examination of reform principles advocated by the ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, previous to the formation of the Associated Methodist Churches, now known as the Methodist Protestant Church, would meet with approbation and support. Solicited to test the validity of this opinion by experiment, the only ordeal by which matters of this kind can be definitely settled, the subscribers propose a monthly publication under the above title.

The first object of this work will be to collect and preserve, in a convenient and durable form, the principles espoused and defended by those who sought to reform the polity of the M. E. Church, and check the mal-administration of her itinerant ministers. While the plan of the work will admit essays on church government generally, we shall confine its columns more particularly to bring before the public a succinct view of the commencement, progress and consummation of events that lead to the secession of many ministers and members from the Methodist E. Church, and ultimately established the separate organization of the Methodist Protestant Church.

The present period seems to be a favorable one in view of bringing before an intelligent and candid public the controversy that existed between the friends to a radical and scriptural ecclesiastical government, and the Bishops and hierarchy of the Methodist Episcopal Church.—The undue excitement produced by interested persons in that communion, to divert the public attention from the merits of the pending controversy, has now subsided—and the influence of those persons being now neutralized, because of their motives and conduct being generally known, and the public mind being prepared for a dispassionate examination of the subject, points out the necessity and expediency of the proposed publication.

The work will be published simultaneously in Boston and New York, once a month, in the octavo form, to contain some thirty pages, elegantly printed, with good type and fine paper. The price will be two dollars a year, payable in advance, or on the reception of the first number, which will be put to press as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers are obtained to warrant the expense. Any person obtaining six subscribers, and forwarding the money, will be entitled to the seventh copy.

Persons holding subscription papers will please return the names of subscribers as soon as practicable. It will be admitted by all who have taken an interest in the objects contemplated by the subscribers, that as a Church, we owe it to ourselves and the community at large, that we should present matters in their true light, that after we are gone, posterity may judge between us and our opponents in view of the truth and justice of our course. Many of the writings of the early Reformers have gone out of print—the protests against unrighteous clerical assumptions ought not to be lost. Let then, a simultaneous effort be made at once, by our friends, and we shall send forth an antidote to the poison that has afflicted many.

AN INQUIRY, &C.

A Statement of the Doctrine of an Unoriginated, Infinite and Eternal Prescience, as it is currently and implicitly received by a very large proportion of the Christian World.

NO. IX.

THE DOCTRINE OF AN ETERNAL PRESCIENCE CONTAINS NO MOTIVE TO PIETY OR MORAL DUTY, AND IS INCAPABLE OF AFFORDING ANY KIND OF IMPROVEMENT OR INSTRUCTION TO EITHER THE HEARTS OR THE INTELLECTS OF HUMAN BEINGS.

Upon the assumption of an eternal prescience of all moral actions, it would be easy to prove, that the probation of human beings would be altogether unnecessary and perfectly useless. For if the issue of human life be certainly foreseen, what manner of purpose can be possibly answered by the probation of man? Why not place every human being at once, in the very situation to which it would be certain, on their premises, that he would finally arrive? I will maintain, and I challenge the objector to prove the contrary, that such an arrangement of the final condition of human beings, would be every way as compatible with the justice of God, as any probation under a certain prescience of its final issue could possibly be rendered. For if the final issue of human life be certainly known, then the final issue of human life must be certain in re; and if the final issue of human life be certain in re, then the issue of life must be infallible; and if the issue of life be infallible, then it is not possible for it to miscarry or vary from its anticipated termination: and therefore it is not possible for any probation, under a certain prescience of its final issue, to answer any salutary purpose whatever, upon either the righteous or the wicked, either upon him whose final happiness is certain and secure, or upon him whose final and eternal misery is infallibly anticipated. Indeed, to say of such a probation as would comport with a certain and eternal prescience of its final issue, that it would be destitute of utility, were to treat it with a civility and ceremony to which it would be by no means entitled. For to speak the naked and uncommuted truth, such a probation would exhibit nothing in the character and conduct of the Deity, but a capricious malignity of spirit toward the wicked, and it would exhibit nothing towards the righteous themselves, but a prodigality of kindness, that would be equally capricious. It would be a wanton experiment on the accuracy of the Divine foresight, a mythological gamble, as puerile as it would be useless; since it would display no contrivance, and would answer no salutary purpose whatever; and would be played without risk, and without even an abstract possibility of failure.

It would defy the ingenuity of man fairly to deduce from the doctrine of eternal prescience any single motive whatever to the practice of piety and virtue. The doctrine stands upon precisely the same ground as that of unconditional and eternal reprobation, and the one is just as barren of rational inducement to practical godliness as the other. And it is somewhat remarkable, that the pious predestinarians are about as shy of the doctrine of reprobation as anti-predestinarians usually are of the doctrine of eternal prescience: and that they generally adopt the same line of policy towards their respective doctrines, viz: That of retaining them tenaciously in their creed, and passing over them in their public instructions. The retention, on either side, cannot, perhaps, be fairly attributed to any other cause than the force of education, and the authority of a pious and implicit credulity: the rejection, in some cases, is to be imputed to ecclesiastical policy, and a deference to public opinion and public feeling; and in other cases it is to be attributed to an intuitive and involuntary conviction of the total inutility of the doctrines in question.

I once heard of an eminent and worthy dissenting minister, who, on a certain occasion, was lamenting in the hearing of a pious female, that his ministry had not been more successful in the conversion of sinners to God. The lady, with great frankness and good nature replied, pray, Mr. M———, has it not been quite certain, from all eternity, what number of sinners would be converted under your ministry? And if so, is it possible for any diligence or zeal of yours to augment that number, or is it possible for any want of diligence or fidelity in you to diminish the sum? The minister in question was a person of too much discernment not to perceive the conclusiveness of the good lady's reasoning: but I am sorry to add, his orthodoxy got the better of his reason; or to express the same sentiment under another form, his piety was stronger on the side of his education and his implicit faith, than it was on that of his moral feeling and rational convictions; for he did most unequivocally acknowledge his firm belief, that the number of persons who would be converted under his ministry was foreseen and certain, and was consequently alike incapable of addition and of diminution. The lady might have easily pushed forward the argument to the following consequence. If the number of sinners who will be eventually converted to God under your ministry be already certain, infallibly certain, and alike incapable of addition and diminution, then is it possible for God himself either to diminish that number, or to augment that sum? And if it be not within the reach of omnipotence himself to effect any alteration in that anticipated arrangement, to what purpose do you preach, and to what purpose do you pray? But such glaring inconsistencies are by no means peculiar to persons of supralapsarian principles.

Every minister who believes the doctrine of eternal prescience, however hostile his feeling may be towards the doctrine of eternal predestination, would, under similar circumstances, be entangled in equal perplexities. A minister who believes in the doctrine of prescience, must also believe that the number of persons who will ever be eventually converted under his ministry, must be the object of an absolute certainty; that the person and name of every individual, as well as the sum of the whole, must be as certain and immutable as the throne of God; and that it would not be in the power of any being, human or divine, either to diminish or to augment the sum. The advocates of prescience, apart from predestination, are far more inconsistent than their predestinarian brethren. They believe in the anticipated certainty of the issue of human life, and maintain it with as great tenacity as any fatalist on earth can possibly do; and therefore, they have not only got the formidable task of reconciling the certainty of the issue with the righteous government of God, but they have a task which is equally formidable, that of reconciling the certain issue of life with the freedom of man. And thus we see the advocate of prescience is brought within as perplexing a dilemma as the abettor of predestination, and upon either the one or the other of its horns he must be eventually transfixed; and I call upon him, as an ingenious and honest man, either to reject the doctrine of prescience, or to renounce the doctrine of human liberty. Many of those worthy persons who retain the notion of an eternal prescience, while they reject the doctrine of eternal predestination, would be shocked by any warm and faithful discourse on their own favourite doctrine. Many of them would be quite chilled with horror at hearing the notion of an eternal prescience clearly stated, and warmly enforced, and vividly described, and pursued into all its dark and mazy labyrinths, and pushed forward, by fair conclusion, into all its revolting and tremendous consequences. Never did ghost or goblin damned, present half so hideous a spectre to the eye of superstitious credulity, as this horrible doctrine would do to the pious feelings of the religious world.

I pretend not to be able to amplify so awful a subject into all its fearful and appalling ramifications; so chivalrous an undertaking would require a fertility of fancy, beyond the fecundity of my imaginative powers, and a graphic ability far beyond the execution of my pen. If, however, I were to stand up in a congregation of pious anti-predestinarians and address them in the following manner, advancing no premises and deducing no conclusions but such as would be obvious to every mind, and accessible to the meanest capacity, what kind of impression is it likely would be made upon the feelings of my auditory thereby? If I were to say, my christian friends; let me beg your serious and devout attention, while I address you on the solemn and momentous subject of your eternal salvation. And in doing, this I shall begin by stating to you that most salutary and most edifying doctrine, the eternal foreknowledge of all things by the great Author of our being, the object of our worship, my dear people, most assuredly knows, what persons in every country and in every age of the world, will be eventually and eternally saved; and He knows what persons will be eternally lost. He knows the sum of the number on each side of this tremendous alternative; and He knows, with certainty, both the person and name of every individual that will be lost, and of every one that will be saved, in every country, and in every age, from the beginning to the end of the world. Moreover, my beloved brethren, this knowledge in the Deity, is not a modern discovery of yesterday, but is as unoriginated and eternal as His own existence. The Deity foreknows, with infallible certainty, which of you, my dear hearers, will finally perish, and which of you, will be eternally saved.

The final issue of life may, indeed, appear to be doubtful to short sighted creatures like you and me; but with God, the final issue of the life of every human being, is the object of a certain and infallible and eternal anticipation. Moreover, my beloved people, in relation to my feeble ministry, He knows too how many, and to what particular persons, at different times, my ministry will be the savour of life unto life, and to how many it will be the savour of death unto death. He also knows to which of you, my dear hearers, my present ministrations will communicate any real and permanent good, and which of you will sit under my present edifying discourse, without receiving any lasting edification. And, moreover, in relation to those of you, who are at this time the subjects of genuine repentance, and are seeking redemption in the blood of Christ, the Deity most assuredly knows the year, the day, the hour, the precise moment, in which you will obtain the blessing of Divine mercy. He also knows how many useless and unsuccessful efforts, in the mean time, you will make to obtain mercy thro' Jesus Christ. And, He knows precisely, under what particular circumstances you will ultimately obtain that blessing, whether alone or in company, whether under a sermon, or in the exercise of prayer; and He knows in the mean while, how many sermons you will hear, and how many prayers you will offer to God before you will be ultimately successful. The Deity does most assuredly know, when you shall have obtained the blessing of pardon, whether you will afterwards retain the possession of it faithfully to the end; or whether you will afterwards be guilty of backsliding from God, and of measuring your wayward steps back again to the world. And moreover, if He knows you will become a backslider, He also knows whether you will become a final apostate, and whether you will afterwards be restored to His favor. In your anticipated departure from God, He assuredly knows what crimes you will commit, and to what lengths of iniquity you will proceed, and the exact amount of guilt that you will accumulate, and how many days, and months, and years you will continue in your backsliding state. He knows how many times your conscience will reproach you during the time of your apostacy, and, how many times you will be admonished by the persons who may watch over your soul.—He knows—but I will pursue the sinuous and deceitful labyrinths of this contemptible doctrine no farther.

I will, however, ask my readers, whether such a mode of public preaching would be any thing like feeding the people with the bread of life, whether it would contain any single particle of religious edification, and whether it is likely that my congregation would even recognize the features of their own creed; and whether, in spite of their education and their prejudices, and in defiance of their orthodoxy and their implicit faith, their pious feelings would not rise up with indignation and horror; and whether such an amplification of the doctrine of eternal prescience, would not sound in their ears, like the percussions of impiety, and the loud explosions of the foulest blasphemy. I demand of the advocates of eternal prescience, what are the motives which this doctrine supplies to the practice of piety and moral virtue. That my eternal destiny is the object of a certain prescience, can be no rational inducement to gratitude;—it contains nothing that would inspire any filial complacency towards the Divine Being;—it contains no consolation for the poor and afflicted;—no hope for the penitent, nor any encouragement for the returning prodigal. It contains no inducement to strive against sin;—nor any to cleave unto that which is good;—it contains nothing to animate our hopes, and nothing to allay our fears. It offers no motive to sympathy, nor any to the exercise of an active charity. It contains no excitement to emulation: nor any to congratulation and praise. It is like a polar and perpetual winter where there is neither vegetation or animal life. Every thing you touch is ice, every thing you see is either ice or snow; and nothing but the howlings of an eternal storm salutes your ears. If ever the world be blest with a perennial spring of religious prosperity;—if ever the blessing of christianity should bring all its benign and renovating energies to bear upon this, our fallen world, it must be preceded by the dissolution of this fatal charm; and fatalism, under every form and in every attire, must be entirely expunged from the creed of every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people. Then, the sun of righteousness will arise upon the poles of the moral world; the barriers of eternal frost will be broken up;—solifidian avalanches that have for ages been raising their proud summits to the skies will warm and melt, and drop and disappear forever;—dreary deserts of perpetual snow will cast off their pale winding sheet of death, and be clothed with the green vesture of eternal fertility and joy;—the stagnant sea will break through his hoary incrustation, and lift up his roaring voice in peals of eternal praise. All nature will join in the universal chorus, Hallelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.

But finally, the doctrine of eternal prescience is as barren of mental deduction as it is of moral and religious inducement; it is as incapable of imparting any profit to the human intellect, as it is of communicating any moral or religious good to the heart. It has no relation whatever to any art or science, or any branch of literature; it has no bearing upon any duty or enjoyment of life;—there is no possibility of educing from it any kind of improvement, for any single faculty of the human mind;—it presents no field for the luxuriations of the fancy, or the sportive sallies of wit and humor. Here are no profundities for the soundings of investigation, nor are there any data for the calculations of chance, or the arithmetical process of numbers;—here are no logical premises, and here are no logical conclusions;—the subject does not contain a single atom of material for the employment of the synthetical or analytical powers of the human mind.

It would defy the most active, the most creative, the most luxuriant fancy to give any rational, or even any tangible form to the doctrine of eternal prescience. It is total and unjustified insignificancy itself;—it is an object of legitimate and unmingled contempt. I therefore appeal to the common sense of mankind;—I appeal to the human conscience: I appeal to the moral intuitions of the human heart;—and I appeal in the name of that Being, who teaches us, that all scripture given by inspiration of God, is profitable for doctrine, and instruction in righteousness;—and I ask, why will men retain in their creed what they will reject as being unfit for public inculcation? And how can people dignify, with the epithet of orthodox christianity, a miserable and contemptible dogma, from which no person on the face of the earth, is able to deduce either motive or instruction, or is able to apply it to any rational or salutary purpose whatever?

JOHN.

For the Western Recorder.

Br. Springer: Having obtained a promise from you to publish occasional letters from me, during our absence and visit to our native land, the first is now presented. Disliking many apologies from the pulpit, and no less so from the press, I ask to promise only one remark. It is this: that the writer has in view the satisfaction of the limited circle of our own personal friends. Some accounts of places visited between Sandusky and Youngstown were written, but are now expunged to give place to subsequent incidents of travel. Among the expunged items was an extended notice of a controversial discourse, delivered in Fredericktown, Knox, O., on Female Preaching, in reply to a minister of that place. As that gentleman has published his sermon, I should have desired to publish the reply, were we not on our journey. As it is, let this allusion to the facts suffice, at least for the present.

It will be expected by our friends in some places, that we explain the causes of delay on our way to the sea-board, for we have lingered as if loath to leave the land. From Youngstown I hastened back to New Liston to attend a quarterly meeting. In this I was disappointed, having been wrongly informed of the time. However, that warm ride was not in vain, (nor importunely, the returning visit,) for Br. Beatty had not returned, having "married a wife," and been informed that in all probability the "Conference Missionary" would be there to fill the pulpit.—But not the pulpit alone, was the place of service for that day. For four of the members discharged what they believed to be their duty—publicly to confess Christ in the solemn ordinance of baptism by immersion. It was a solemn, and apparently, a profitable season to many. A numerous company of spectators convened to witness the performance of this religious rite, the threatening thunder storm notwithstanding. Three out of the four of those who thus "took up their cross" and followed "the Saviour's example," were women. It is pleasing to witness such moral courage in female disciples.

The next Sabbath we spent in Youngstown, a place where we had bestowed much labor; found things there about par. Their principal obstruction to prosperity is a DEBT on the meeting house. That still remains like an incubus upon the breast of the society; nay, rather upon the bosom of one dear old man! When will it be removed? It so happened that there was no other preaching in town, and of course our congregations were numerous, and as the services partook of the valedictory character, the attention was fixed and solemn. May these efforts not be lost.

Thence, after packing up and fixing our affairs, our next port was (intended to be,) Pittsburgh. But we must needs go through New Castle, seeing that there, two years since, we labored hard to procure for that infant society, a place and a name among the churches of the Redeemer.—And especially so, seeing that last winter they were blessed with a glorious revival, and many added to their number. Here we, like Paul and his colleagues, who, though hastening on their journey to Jerusalem, tarried a whole week with the disciples at Troas, that they might break bread together on the Lord's day; so we were constrained to remain with these kind friends over the Sabbath, and meet together at the table of the Lord. And on Monday evening we renewed our covenant at the love-feast, to love one another with a pure heart fervently. We had solemn and interesting services during the evenings of the week, but on Sunday, at the sacrament, and on Monday evening, at love-feast, we had blessed meetings, and an affecting farewell at the close of the discourse which immediately followed. We hope this meeting will renew the confidence of this young promising society, that "the God of heaven, He will prosper them; therefore they His servants will arise and build."—Here then, one week was spent, not in our previous calculation.

Thence we made Pittsburgh, where we found it expedient to extend our stay one week beyond expectation, viz: one Sabbath in Allegheny, and one in Pittsburgh. Our inward thought had been that one Sunday would suffice for both cities. As the sanctuary in Pittsburgh was being cleansed and painted, the first Sunday was spent in Allegheny. Here an incident may be recorded. On Saturday evening, while sitting on the porch with Br. Shinn, enjoying the pleasures of the scene and the hour, a clergyman came in company with a brother to request Br. Shinn to officiate next morning for the chaplain of the Penitentiary, who was absent for the benefit of his health. After some conversation Br. S. consented, and I promised to accompany him. Accordingly, about 8 o'clock, Sunday morning, we were at the door of that great prison house of convicts. We were directed through the hall into what I will call a long, narrow, solemn looking chapel. Not as ancient, but full as gloomy a looking place as the church of my youth. And here pardon the penning of a reminiscene of boyhood. In that antiquitious edifice, where in infancy my god-fathers and god-mothers most solemnly pledged themselves that I should "renounce the pomps and vanities of this wicked world, and all the sinful lusts of the flesh, and live a sober, righteous and godly life," a few feet a little south-west of the baptismal font, stood the large, long church ladder, by the aid of which my juvenile feet have oft ascended to the dismal cove above, where the fearful foot was wont to step upon the joists and walk from end to end of that doleful habitation of birds, in search of the nests of owls. And often did the heart beat high with fear on hearing the dolorous voice of the dam. But to return from this digressive reverie across the Atlantic to the Penitentiary in Pennsylvania. In this long narrow chapel were two tiers of pews on either hand, one above and the other below.—Along the extended aisle below, and in the walks above, were several saxtons, [keepers] with soft slippers promenading with spectral silence, as if to prevent the unseen audience from interrupting the minister by audible respiration. The car-like pulpit was at the nether end of the railway, in the gallery, and could easily be removed from end to end of the chapel, or stop opposite any one of the pew doors, which were near on either hand, as if this contrivance was to cover any exigency of deafness in any of the pew-holders. But ordinarily, it would seem, that it remains at the southern end of the rail-way, and the preacher stands on the short cross walk in the centre of the aisle above, though, instead of an aisle proper, the space is occupied by the rail-road and the side walks. Probably the phrase above—unseen audience—may require a word of explanation. Unlike the usages of some other places of the kind, here the congregation is not visible to the speaker. This has a strange appearance to a minister at first. We were apprised of the fact before we entered the gates. But by the aid of imagination, this defect may be in a great measure supplied, for the massy outer doors of these penitentiary pews were part way opened by the saxtons, to afford the occupants an opportunity of hearing through the windows of the inner doors. These near midway open doors, not only indicated that a listener was there, but they appeared to me like the thirsty open mouth Maize craving a shower of heavenly refreshing truth.—But from the character of the inhabitants, probably, we might rather view them as the huge long ears of the wild Assine children of men. Br. Shinn preached a very solemn and appropriate discourse from Mark i. 14, 15. The writer closed by prayer.

On leaving that dreary habitation, my eye caught sight of two human faces, one on either side of the rail-way, seemingly anxious to behold the man who had been breaking to them the bread of life. Upon the whole, I think it a wise plan to have these convicts by themselves during the service, because of the greater probability of their giving the truth of God a solemn hearing. Like visiting the sick, to go the imprisoned is profitable to our own souls, and we are assured by the Saviour that it is acceptable to God. Br. Shinn proceeded thence to his appointment in Pittsburgh, and I repaired to my room for retirement before preaching.

At half past ten I had a numerous audience, and an attack of that distressing ministerial malady, the PULPIT FEVER. This was not expected to come on in this place, though it was looked for in Philadelphia. However, the Lord gave liberty of speech, and the people were very attentive. In the afternoon Hannah held forth to a crowded assembly.—And again we found it good to be there. In the evening the fever did not return. The Lord was felt to assist in the delivery of His word. Some physical gestures probably appeared to some as if the preacher was "killing snakes." But he little regarded these awkward appearances, if but the "old serpent's" head is bruised.

Monday afternoon a "mass temperance meeting" was held in front of our meeting house in this city. You have heard of the great and unprecedented revival of this blessed reform, thro' the instrumentality of a few missionaries from Baltimore—reformed drunkards, who, like the early Methodist ministers in preaching the gospel, instead of reading or repeating a dry discourse upon the abstract question and qualities of ardent spirits, or regular lectures upon the virtues of sobriety, they simply relate their own painful experience in their inebriety, and the happiness attendant upon their change of life. And instead of feeling their voluntary pledge a BONDAGE, they rejoice in their emancipation from the tyranny and dominion of "KING ALCOHOL." Several thousand have signed the pledge—declared their independence, in these twin cities, during this temperance protracted meeting. May they hold fast for life; and may this great moral movement prove a spiritual harbinger to prepare the way for the evangelical triumph of the Son of God!

On Friday afternoon, in Pittsburgh, we were among the vast multitude who attended the procession on the interesting occasion—the passing of the remains of our late President Harrison. The sheet affords not space to describe the solemn and impressive scene, or append reflections upon the subject.

Next Sabbath we were in Pittsburgh. It was their sacramental Sabbath. The ministerial arrangements for the day, the same as in Allegheny. Hannah had an additional appointment in the evening for the Episcopal 'pewed' Methodists over the river. This being the first day this house has been occupied since its cleansing, &c., together with the celebration of the eucharistic feast, it is devoutly wished that the church will set out afresh for the kingdom of heaven, and 'cleanse themselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, and perfect holiness in the fear of God.' The kindness of this people in both stations, to the Conference Missionary, demands a thankful remembrance. God bless them!

Monday 5th. Temperance meetings and Sunday school celebrations.

Tuesday evening we left the cities of smoke,' on board a canal boat for Philadelphia. Several friends spent the afternoon with us at the beautiful and plentiful mansion of Br. C. Avery, which was the more agreeable, seeing here we left the District, and that appeared like leaving home. While we know and feel that the blessing of God alone is sufficient for us, yet it is encouraging as well as pleasing to receive the warm demonstrations of the friendship and sympathies of the brethren in the Lord. Left a little after 9 o'clk.; found many passengers on board; but all were comfortably bedded. Slept sound. In the morning, remembering a piece of eccentric devotion of a pious minister at table one morning last winter, "thanked God for good friends, good food and good health," &c., so I was ready to say, bless God for good sleep, a good boat, a good captain, and good passengers. Before noon, however, a draw-back on our enjoyment was endured: busy and loud card playing was carried on on one hand, and chequers on the other.—And these things tolerated in open defiance of the following wholesome rule: "All gambling strictly prohibited."

The "Evangelical Family Library" was on board, and for the use of the passengers; but what avails that to the depraved mind of man, so long as cards and dice are allowed! As dinner time approached, the card players dispersed. Fortunately I was standing near the captain when these gamblers came clamorous from the cards. I inquired if gambling was not prohibited on board by rule? While the captain was framing a conservative reply, the leading gamesters observed, that the proper construction of the rule was to prohibit "gambling for money." It is notable that card players need something to sustain them in their sins. The first sublime scene observed was at the foot of "Chesnut-ridge." The landscape there is delightful. In turning a corner at the foot of this beautiful elevation, I cast my eyes upward on its long green back, the feathered foliage on its lofty head appeared to wave within a few feet of a little star, that twinkled in the same line of view.

8th. This morning we crossed the celebrated Allegheny mountains,—"the back bone of America;" the weather was fine, the scene grand, and at places sublime, but I confess my exalted expectation was not filled. Neither did the "inclined plains" wear the appalling appearances we had looked for. But there is quite an agreeable contrast between this rail-road, and some of the "Ohio rail-roads" in the "swales" of Sandusky. An amusing incident occurred this afternoon on the canal. We observed a boat approaching, with many passengers on board; of course all eyes must look, and soon they were observed to be emigrants from Germany, of the lower class; and as we passed them, some witty flippancies were uttered by some of that class of travellers, whose glory is in a hearty laugh, and as we were taking the last look as we passed the stern, to complete the exhibition of the ludicrous, the boat was honored with the illustrious and sage name of 'Congress.' Instantly the flashes of wit ran all around; and who could forbear inquiring for Clay, Benton, &c. &c.; it scarcely need be said that a cataract of risibility instinctively burst forth from the multitude At this the writer esteemed it not a sin to smile. In the afternoon, cards were again introduced, accompanied with the usual merriment, which is quite annoying to religious people. Hannah called the captain into the ladies cabin, and inquired of the laudibility of the conduct. His reply was similar to the one spoken of before, with this difference,—he did not understand that card playing is gambling, where no property is at stake. But the greatest difficulty with him was that one of the proprietors was on board, and he would play. Alas! he might have added, and profane too! To his discredit be it spoken, that my ears heard profanation fall from his lips, for the time he was on board, more than from any other man! But what surprised me most was, to hear from the cap ain, that we were the first travellers, who had uttered complaints against those games of amusement. If this be true, fie on the professors of christianity, who have given their silent sanction to these works of darkness. Much more were written upon the subject, but space will not admit it here.

Arrived safely in Philadelphia Saturday evening; found Br. Stockton waiting to receive us in his affectionate arms. Next day, spent a happy Sabbath. It was rendered uncommonly interesting to us, through meeting Br. O'Bryan, the founder of a sect in England, among whom Hannah was converted, and travelled about ten years! He is laboring in a missionary capacity in this city and suburbs. Truly this is a beautiful place. And doubtless, the inhabitants are emphatically and pre-eminently worthy of their destinguishing appellation—"the city of brotherly love." Pray for us. Yours, &c. WM. REEVES.

THE QUARTERLY CONFERENCE OF PITTSBURG CIRCUIT—BRETHREN PORTER AND CULLIN—AN EXPLANATION.

Mr. Editor: The following resolution was adopted by a very full meeting of the quarterly conference of Pittsburgh circuit, the writer alone objecting:

WHEREAS, a publication has been made in the 83d No. of the Western Recorder, which reflects injuriously upon brethren Porter and Cullin—upon this body, and to some extent upon our superintendent. Therefore,—

Resolved, That Br. Jno. Clarke be authorized and respectfully requested to correspond with the editor, in view of a satisfactory explanation of the whole matter.

The duty imposed on me by the act of the quarterly conference, is one I had rather decline, if I thought the greater good would result from thus doing. I fear the ultimate want of success in giving an explanation that will be satisfactory to all: and I dread collision with the feelings or prejudices of any of my brethren. Inasmuch, however, as "truth injures no man," if you will permit the following brief narrative of the facts in the case, to go out after the publication above referred to, the object of the brethren may be obtained, and no person injured.

I believe the matters with which the brethren feel agrieved, are, 1. The protest of some brethren in the Pittsburgh station, in which "the proceedings in the case of licensing brethren Porter and Cullin," are characterised as "a violation of the discipline," "an unjustifiable interference with the station," "opening a wide door for anarchy," and are attributed to the "superintendent of the Pittsburgh circuit." 2. The action of the Annual Conferance predicated upon the representation of said protest. 3. The editorial statement, that the young men had applied to the quarterly conference of the station, and were rejected by that body. 4. The editor's manner of condemning and rejecting their explanation on account of its style, when it is supposed that with equal convenience, he could, upon the authority of their communication, have corrected the main facts in the case, in a proper style.

The whole matter may be deemed rather trifling, yet the injury resulting from it, is known to be somewhat serious, especially to the young men; and if this little effort to repair that injury will be in any degree successful, none will be more thankful than the writer. The case is simply this. The young men believing themselves called of God to the ministry—their superintendent and leader, and most of their brethren regarding them as worthy—were brought out before the church, occasionally, in the regular appointments, upon the week evenings. They were also (I understand, unanimously) recommended by the class of which they were members—and were kindly aided in their studies by Br. Shinn, of the examining committee. Thus far toward applying to the quarterly conference of the station for license they went, but no farther. In the meantime they met with circumstances, (we do not recite them,) which were severely repulsive and afflicting to their feelings, and on account of which I was advised by their friends, (among whom was the superintendent of the station, and their leader, Doctor M. Adams) to open their way, within my charge, which was closely neighboring, and in which they were perhaps, as generally and as well known, as in the station. I accordingly obtained an interview with one of them, (Br. Porter) and was informed then by him, that they both had made up their minds decidedly, never to suffer themselves to come before the quarterly conference of the station for license to preach; and that they were entirely satisfied that it was their duty to remove their standing from that church, and that the church's interests, as well as their own required that they should. I also knew that they were advised to this step, by very judicious members of the station. From this time on, they identified themselves with the circuit, and were cordially embraced in the affections and confidence of the people, and their public efforts were highly appreciated and commended. Yet they attended upon the instructions of Br. Shinn, and did not present certificates from the station, until the approach of the quarterly conference, by which they were licensed; but it was generally, and well understood by the people of the circuit for a length of time before, that they were candidates for the ministry among them, and all the steps required by the discipline in cases of granting licenses, were fully and properly taken in their case on the circuit, and the quarterly conference which did unanimously license them, was as competent to judge, and act in such cases as most other similar bodies in the connexion. Nor is it likely the case would have been further heard of, after the rise of the Annual Conference, but that a similar protest to that which had been there acted on, was also presented, six months after, to the quarterly conference of the circuit.

Now, it is admitted that under ordinary circumstances the case would furnish a precedent of injurious tendency, that ought carefully to be guarded against; yet in view of the causes which influenced the young men in leaving the station, I believe the whole transaction proper and judicious, nor can I conceive that the discipline, either in spirit or letter, has been violated, either by them or the people of the circuit. In relation to this, however, we are perfectly willing that those in possession of all the facts should judge.

The foregoing is written in the spirit of kindness toward all concerned, and if not satisfactory to all, we sincerely hope it may be injurious to none.

Respectfully,

JNO. CLARKE, JR.

GEN. JACKSON.—It has been said that the old General never drank any ardent spirits. This was substantiated by his negro slave, who said that "Massa no drink rum, but then he drink his coffee strong enough to kill the debil."

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... AUGUST 11, 1841.

Methodist Episcopal Matters.—A controversy existed between Rev. J. C. Smith and Rev. T. P. Jones of the M. E church in Lawrenceburg, Ia. Probably the former was the preacher in charge and the latter a local minister. Jones being slandered in the Cincinnati Christian Advocate, the citizens of Lawrenceburg, from sympathy took part with him, and signed the following certificate which was forwarded to the Advocate for publication, but Dr. Elliott refused it a place in his paper. It was then published in the Lawrenceburg "Beacon."

Lawrenceburg, June 14, 1841.

This is to certify that we, the undersigned, citizens of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, are personally acquainted with the Rev. Thomas P. Jones, and deem it our duty to say to all who feel any interest in the matter, that we regard the publication in the last number of the Western Christian Advocate, of Cincinnati, claiming on its face to be authorised by the Leaders, and Stewards of the M. E. Church of the Lawrenceburg station, in refence to the said Jones, as an act of injustice to him personally, as well as uncalled for by the interest of religion, and the well being of the church of which he was late a member. Having heard his public explanation of the whole matter, we are constrained to say that the proofs brought forward in vindication of his conduct, are of the most satisfactory character, and we cannot but believe that in publishing him to the world, in the manner he has been published, great injustice was done to him not only as a christian, but as a citizen of our common country.

We further certify that we have been acquainted with the Rev. Thomas P. Jones, since he has resided in our town, about eight months, and, until the late unfortunate excitement which gave rise to the publication before alluded to, we never heard aught against his character, but held him to be an able and zealous preacher, and an humble and pure christian.

Disclaiming any desire or intention to intermeddle with the unfortunate controversy between Mr. Jones and Rev. John C. Smith, this certificate is given as an act of sheer justice, as we conceive, to the party injured.

(Signed by 75 citizens.)

Jones has withdrawn from the church. A "Christian Advocate!" Open its columns to slander the brethren, and then close them against a defence. The fact is no man's reputation is safe in the M. E. Church.

The Olive Branch and Methodist Protestant.—The Olive Branch has been perpetually passing unqualified enconiums on the Methodist Protestant. But it seems from the following allusions to the article to which we recently referred, in the Protestant, that he is also beginning to bristle up at the impertinence of that paper. The editor of the Olive Branch has not thrown off one episcopacy to let another straddle him quite so soon.

As it respects our "hostility" to the Protestant; although we are opposed to such an organ, yet for the church's sake we respected it, and would have treated it courteously if had behaved itself.

Methodist Protestant.—Our worthy and gifted Br. Reese of this paper, feels hurt at the intimations given from various quarters that he has not in that journal devoted himself as much as necessity required, to the exposition of the distinctive peculiarities, and to a defence of the Methodist Protestants, against the wily arts, misrepresentations and open persecutions of the Episcopal Methodists. This he has a right to do, and to justify his course to the church in whose employment he is engaged. He has also a perfect right to take his own course while holding his present responsible office, and to dissent from those who choose to conduct their portion of the Methodist Protestant press differently. But his severe reprehension and harsh judging of his brethren, is wholly uncalled for, such as that they throw around facts the flourish of rhetorical vehemence and bombastical vituperation, and charges them with being guilty of religious quarrels, and of catering for the morbid appetite, and furnishing gross food. Now we will be content that this reproof should fall upon ourself, Brother Springer, or Brother Wallace, who may not claim the respect due to great age, or extraordinary services, though we certainly have not been idle spectators. But when it is thrown upon the venerable and gifted men, who write for our columns, who have been some fifty years in the ministry, and have suffered martrydom in the cause of reform, we repel the charge; coming as it does, from a young, though worthy brother, who never felt the 'iron hoof' of that despotism we have thrown off. We assure Br. Reese that our best brethren regret that he should so much have neglected the Methodist controversy. Letters lie before us from six or seven of the master spirits of reform, strongly showing their feeling on this subject. We quote from one from Georgia, which we received by yesterday's mail. It is from the pen of a member of the Convention of 1830. "Our Baltimore brethren tired out, and seemed to decline the contest, and thousands were left in the dark. We have lost much by striking our flag of 'mutual rights.'" The letter contains much more to the same effect, and we would publish it were it not so highly complimentary to our own course. This is but a specimen of even a multitude of letters which we have received at different times. And surely Br. Reese ought to respect public sentiment from the most distinguished members of our church, its master spirits, indeed, its very founders. Brother, take your own course, but let us, and especially those good old brethren, take theirs, without walking out of your way to stigmatize the productions of their pens, or to arraign and judge their motives. As for ourselves we have done what we could for the Protestant, and shall continue so to do. The intimation that there would be an attempt to remove the Protestant at the next General Conference, is of little importance; at any rate, the brother and those concerned, ought to be willing to trust the representatives of the church. We do not think there is hostility to the Protestant among our members any where. We never saw any thing of the kind, except in the case of Br. Springer and a few brethren in New York. We have said more than we intended, but the editorial of Brother Reese last week seemed to call for something.

Singular Trial of the Rev. E. Smith, at Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh, Pa., July 24, 1841.

The Devil among the Preachers—Abolition, Falsehood, and Slander in the Methodist Conference—Ruffles and Rings recognized in Preachers' Wives and Daughters—Rev. Edward Smith Lynched by the Conference—Quaker and Methodist Opinions, &c. &c.

Our religious community here have been thrown into great excitement by the trial of the Rev. Edward Smith, of Cadiz, Ohio, upon a nominal charge of slander, &c., before the Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The trial closed last night, and as the Herald is noted for its religious intelligence, I send you a synopsis of the trial for the edification of your numerous pious readers, as I doubt whether they would otherwise be enabled to see it, for the minutes of the conference will not show the under current in this trial, nor the real matter that was at issue.

Brother Smith, the defendant, is a man about fifty years of age, six feet high, large in proportion, grey hair, red face, full sonorous voice, talented and eloquent, formerly of Virginia, but recently of Ohio, has been twenty years a Methodist preacher, but, during the last year has become an active abolitionist, delivers lectures, circulates books, &c.

Bishop Roberts presided, evidently a venerable, good tempered prelate, for he seemed determined not to allow the obstreperous members of the conference to put him out of temper; the foling reverened gentlemen were the principals in the prosecution, and they seemed to be desperately anxious to convict Brother Smith, whether the evidence or the conference would or not.

Brother Hopkins, a tall, grey-haired, hard-featured man, with a wooden countenance without expression, except sometimes, when it becomes somewhat Satanic.

Brother Hudson, with his sleak, subdued countenance, the very counterpsrt of Dr. Cantwell, in the "Hypocrite:" he could play the character to the life.

Brother Cook, the Secretary, a thin man, with a thin squeaking voice, and a nose indicative of his not having yet joined the Temperance Society.

Brother Wesley Kenney, with a red head, and a wish-washy, unwholesome looking face, who always giggled and jerked his shoulders up and down in glee, if any point of evidence seemed to tell against the defendant.

These gents, and two or three others, seemed to pursue their Rev. brother with that holy hatred and religious ferocity, which ecclesiastics only are capable of and their abominal prejudice was so apparent, that it was a matter of common remark among the lay spectators, in my hearing.

But to the trial. Smith was charged, in the first instance, with being an author, and in that capacity had "stolen literary property, and had thereby robbed the original author, of the fruit of his labors." Upon this charge, the committee reported that there was no evidence to sustain it, but (O! these buts) he "had quoted largely without giving credit." Smith replied, by pointing out the absurdity of the committee, in acquitting him of the charge preferred against him, and then accusing him of something else, and then offered to prove, to the satisfaction of the conference, that he had given the proper credit in such cases. The prosecutors (persecutors?) finding themselves thus foiled, agreed that this charge should lie upon the table, amidst the smiles of the audience at the ridiculous position in which they had placed themselves.

The other charges were, that he had said that a certain gag resolution, passed at a former conference, to prevent preachers taking part in abolition proceedings, originated in the Bishop's Council, and that two of the council were appointed to bring it into conference.

That he had said, that if the Bishop sent him into Virginia he would not go.

That in a sermon preached a short time ago, he had slandered the church and his brethren, by saying that the church tolerates crimes worse than those tolerated by the Catholic church in the darkest ages; by saying,

That the church ordained men to the ministry, whose arms were steeped in blood up to the elbows; by saying,

That the church tolerates worldly pomp and vanity, for a preacher had said, "he did not care what people wore, so that their hearts were changed," and by saying,

That the church was as bad as the world, &c. &c.

Brother Hopkins testified, that he was in the pulpit with Smith, when the sermon was preached; that he expected that Smith would say something exceptionable; that therefore he took notes of part of the sermon; that he applied the above language to the Methodist church, and that such language was a slander upon the church and the ministers.

Brother Rich testified, that he had heard the sermon upon that occasion, and two or three times before, that he thought it was a good sermon then, and thinks so yet; that he understood the language above as applied to the general church, and not the Methodist church in particular. (Here a member got up and asked Rich if he was an abolitionist? About half a dozen jumped up, and all spoke at once, some saying he ought to answer, and others saying it was a shameful question, for what had he to do with it? The galleries said tst. tst. tst. tst.—at last he went on without answering.) He had heard many others say it was a good sermon, and it was only the enemies of Smith who said to the contrary. (Brother Kenney, he with the red head, here got up, and wanted to know if the witness was justified in saying it was Smith's enemies, who expressed a contrary opinion? Brother Smith rose, and suggested whether a witness must not be permitted to answer in accordance with the truth of the matter, or whether he must be dictated to as to what he shall say.) Other evidence was adduced connected with the gag resolution, and Smith rose to reply. His defence would have obtained his acquittal, in any just or impartial court of law or equity in Christendom, where men felt themselves free to act, and were not ecclesiastics.—But some, as I have stated, were prejudiced against him right or wrong—others did not vote at all, and some were afraid to vote against the leaders, for when they rose to vote against him some remained seated till they saw the leaders up, and not many remained seated, then their couraged oozed out, and they rose sheepishly against him. Smith answered the charges seriatim and spoke about three hours. The following is a very brief outline of his defence:

He said, that to substantiate a charge of slander the words spoken must be slanderous, and they must be untrue; if either failed then it was not slander. With reference to the gag resolution, the evidence proved that it was the subject of common conversation in the Bishop's Council, that one of the members never heard of it till he heard of it there, that all the council agreed in a desultory way that there ought to be a resolution, that the resolution was shown to all the members of the council but one, that it was two members of the council who brought it into conference, and got it passed; all circumstances were proved by the prosecutor's own witnesses, and it was upon these notorious facts, that he had founded his statement that the gag resolution originated in the Bishop's Council—any man would say the same thing from the same circumstances; but forsooth, he must be charged with falsehood and slander, because there was no "vote" or "official action" in the case, on the part of the council, though the main fact was substantially true, that he had asserted; and he was only partially mistaken in connexion with a trifling adjunct of the case! How can there be slander in this case, where the admited authors of the gag resolution, consider, that to have originated the resolution was a meritorious act? According to this logic, to ascribe a meritorious act to the Bishop's Council, is to slander the Bishop's Council. "O foolish Galatians," "who hath betwitched you, that ye should err from the truth?" Such a trumpery charge as this, indicated the spirit with which this prosecution was got up.

But he had slandered the church and the ministry in a sermon. They were these—Last fall, immediately after he began to take an active part as an abolitionist, Brother Hopkins wrote to him, accusing him of bad faith and want of honesty, admonishing him not to follow abolition pursuits, and containing some vituperation and abuse. Some correspondence passed between them, (which was read) in which the whole matter of complaint was abolition; and nothing else but abolition. This is the whole secret of this prosecution, there was nothing in Methodism, or its discipliue, to prevent him from being an abolitionist. So it would not do to bring a prosecution for that. Some other means must be adopted, and Brother Hopkins was the man for this dirty work; when he was in the pulpit with him, when he was preaching, what was he doing? Was he praying for him? No! He was watching for him. Well, he ought to watch as well as pray, that is, if he was watching for good; but here he was watching for evil. He "suspected;" aye that's the word. He suspected that something exceptionable would be said, so he took notes to make sure of it. People can generally see what they are looking for—and now this false issue is got up. But after all, were the allegations he had made in the pulpit true, or not true? That is the question. Every syllable he had uttered was true to the letter. He spoke of the church in general, as Brother Rich had testified. The church did tolerate crime, worse than was ever tolerated by the church of Rome, in the dark ages, Roman slavery was a system of legalized murder, which Christianity eradicted in the third century. Feudal slavery succeeded, but that did not separate families, or destroy the marriage relation, and to the eternal honor of the Irish be it said, they struck the first blow against Feudal slavery, in Armagh, in the 11th century, and from that beginning, in about 200 years feudalism ceased to exist. From the 14th to the 15th centuries was the darkest period of Catholic Rome, during which indulgencies appeared; these were the worst of all; but none of them equalled American slavery. It was, as Wesley had named it, "The sum of all human villanies."—"The vilest kind of slavery that ever saw the sun."

But another point had been urged. He had said that the church ordained men to preach with their arms steeped in blood to the elbows.—(Here he read an extract from Wesley's Tract on Slavery, in which it is said that a slave-holder's bed, and board, and house and furniture, and person, altogether, were stained with blood.) This ought to be good evidence in a Wesleyan Methodist Conference, and what he had said was nothing at all as compared with what Wesley had said, and it was all true verily.

It was charged against him that he had said the church tolerated worldly pomp and vanity.—This was all true. "The Methodist Church does tolerate worldly pomp and vanity."—(Here a brother rose and said, "We cannot sit here quietly, and hear the church slandered in this way. I protest against this proceeding."—Smith—"What does the Brother mean? Does he mean to say that the Methodist Church does not tolerate worldly pomp and vanity? (A pause and no reply.) Does that Brother mean to say that the Methodist Church does not tolerate ruffles and rings! (Another awkward pause but no reply.) Because if he does the proof is here at hand. There is no denying it. There are Methodist preachers' wives and daughters who do not receive their love feast tickets because of worldly pomp and vanity, because of wearing ruffles and rings, and that is all the notice taken of the matter, and still they remain members. But the Brother says that this is slander, and the indictment says this is slander, while the truth of the matter is not denied. The truth of the allegation is admitted and yet it is slander. 'O, tell it not in Gath, publish it not in Askelon,' that to utter the truth of the Methodist church is to slander the Methodist church. Is it come to this, sir! If the conference be willing that this should go forth to the world as their rule of action, I am willing to take my share of it, for if to utter the truth be slander I shall continue to slander all the days of my life."

The last charge against him was, that he had said he would not obey the Bishop, if he sent him into Virginia. To this charge he pleaded guilty, but offered in justification some of the laws of Virginia, which he read.

They provide, that any abolitionist going into that State, and practising his vocation as specified, should be fined from 50 to $200, and be imprisoned in the penitentiary from two to five years. He said these were the laws, and he was an abolitionist, and an officer of an abolition society, and therefore could not remain quiet. That Christ had said, "When they persecute in one city flee to another." That he had done so, and would do so, and if the Bishop told him one thing and Christ told him another, why, he would obey Christ rather than the Bishop. He had said what had been charged, and it would have to stay said.

After Smith concluded he retired, after first saying that if any one would proceed and make a speech against him he hoped to be called in to hear and answer it; but notwithstanding his request, several did deliver themselves of speeches against him in his absence. Brother Cook, the Secretary, he with the nose, in particular was very bitter and Jesuitical, but without attempting to impeach the grounds of his defence. The specification of slander was then put and carried, by sixty-seven to twenty-four. There were a few of the members who seemed to be shocked at the palpable character of the proceedings, but many, particularly the leaders, evinced their gratification by their countenances lightening up, and their eyes glistening with joy at their achievement.

The Bishop looked very grave, but seemed more sorry for the conference than for Smith.

The specification was then put (moved by Brother Hudson) of his having said that he would not go into Virginia if the Bishop sent him, thereby "encouraging a spirit of rebellion, and breaking his own ordination vows." Brother Mackabee suggested that he certainly had not disobeyed the Bishop yet; and his merely saying what he would do in a possible contingency, was no crime. This common sense suggestion was totally disregarded. The mob preachers seemed to be animated by the spirit that once animated a mob of Jews, when they cried, "away with him, away with him, crucify him, crucify him," in spite of all law, and evidence, and justice, and common sense. This specification was carried by 71 to 12—many not voting at all.

Then came the decapitating resolution: "Whereas, the Reverend Edward Smith has been found guilty of slanderous and false representations of the church and his brethren, &c. &c. and of having encouraged a spirit of rebellion, &c. &c., therefore, he ought to be, and he is hereby, suspended from all official connection with this conference till he repents, &c." Moved by brother Cook.

A member here rose and moved that the two words above, "and false," be left out; for whether they were slanderous or not, they certainly had not been shown to be false. After some humming and hawing, brother Cook, graciously condescended to say that he had no particular objection to let the words be struck out, and they were struck out accordingly.

Another member here offered an amendment to the resolution, in the shape of a resolution of censure upon Smith for his imprudence, but this was voted down by acclamation. It seemed that nothing less than the ecclesiastical life of brother Smith would satisfy the morbid appetites of these reverend ecclesiastical butchers, and the resolution was carried, 62 to 17—many not voting.—The whole number present, as near as I could count them, was from 100 to 105.

When Smith was brought in, and heard the result from the Secretary, he notified them of his appeal from their decision to the General Conference, and said that it was not likely he should ever repent at all, but for the balance of his life, he would be governed by the principles of Methodism—that the conference had conferred a never-dying honor upon him, for he would henceforth be considered as the first victim amongst Methodist preachers who had been sacrificed to appease teh spirit of slavery in the south.

Thus ended this trial, of three days' length.—I am neither an abolitionist nor a Methodist, and I neither know the parties, nor care a pin about either of them—but as a cool and dispassionate auditor of the whole affair, I say that the conference is guilty of persecution and injustice; and as I was coming out of the chapel, I heard a steady Quaker say to his friend: "There is not a temporal jury in all Pittsburgh that would bring in a verdict of slander upon such evidence; and if they did, they ought to be punished for slander themselves."

There are many Methodists here who are upon the fence in connexion with abolition, and this trial has sent them over with Smith. They now publicly say that conference has no more business to interfere with preachers for their abolition, than they have for their being in favor of wooden pavements, that this whole trial was got up upon a false issue, to get rid of Smith; and one proof of it was, that all the resolutions against him, in every stage of the trial, were all previously prepared, ready cut, and dried, and signed, ready to be used in their appropriate places, long before the evidence was adduced in public. The fact is, Smith is to the preachers what the Herald is to the wall street papers—he possesses more ability than the whole box and dice put together, and "they hate the excellence they cannot reach."

Yours, &c. G.

Episcopal Methodistical Affairs in Lowell.—Two weeks since we gave a statement of facts in relation to the course which has been pursued towards the two Methodist churches in Lowell, in consequence of which they resolved not to receive the preachers sent them by the Bishop. Since that time every possible measure has been pursued by the Presiding Elder and his preachers to divide and distract the members, but as yet they have met with very limited success. The great mass of the church remain firm to their purpose. The result, so far as St. Paul's church is concerned, is, the Presiding Elder has removed the preacher from this church, and appointed him to preach in the old church on Chapel Hill. But notwithstanding this removal, he still claims jurisdiction for him, and the preacher claims for himself jurisdiction over the church worshipping in St. Paul's house. This is a new feature in Methodist economy, and a usurpation not often surpassed, even in these days of arbitrary rule.

The doctrine set up by the Presiding Elder is, that the members are required to leave their house to which the preacher was first appointed, and from which he was rejected, and go to the old house in another part of the city, to which the preacher is now appointed, or they will be liable to be expelled for neglecting their own meeting, the same as though they were constantly to attend the meetings of some other denomination. This we say is unconstitutional, and absurd in the extreme. The Presiding Elder has no power to remove the people, or require them to move themselves. If any constitutional charge can be brought against the church, it is for rejecting the preacher from the house to which he was appointed, but no charge can be brought against them for refusing to leave that house and attend worship in another.—The people have a right to locate their houses where they please, and worship in them. Indeed the thing required is impossible, for after the preacher had retired to the old house, and drawn off all that were disposed to go with him, there were more left to worship in the usual place than could find seats in the house to which they were required to go.

But we will not argue against such lynch law, for it is too absurd to require refutation. Moreover, the brethren will never submit to it, but will maintain preaching in St. Paul's church every Sabbath.

On the other side, at Wesley station, the brethren still adhere to their position, that they will not receive the preacher appointed there, though things have not come to so decisive an issue in that church as in St. Paul's. There has been no attempt to draw off a party from the church at Wesley Chapel. At St. Paul's this has already been tried. Who now are the radicals? It is the opposers of abolition that have left the church. The enemies of radicalism have become so radical as to secede from the body of the church in St. Paul's station, and have gone off by themselves.

As soon as we can find time and room, our readers shall have a more full account of the proceedings.—Lowell Adv.

Another British Outrage.—The supercargo of the brig Robert, at New York, from Rio Nuner, informed the editor of the Courier, that just before he sailed, the crews of a British frigate, and a brig from Gambia, landed at Rio Pongos, and burnt a factory at that place, belonging to a native female, and containing a large amount of property deposited there for sale by English and French merchants at Gambia, together with about $2,000 worth of goods belonging to a house in New York city. In the factory was stored a quantity of gunpowder, which exploded, killing two of the crew of the frigate, and wounded several others. The frigate had just arrived from England, touched at Gambia, and proceeded immediately to the Rio Pongos. The British cruizers were annoying the American traders as much as possible, for the purpose of driving them off the coast.

Crops around Harrisburgh.—The Reporter of Friday, the 23d ult., says:—The harvest is nearly all gathered, in the valley around us. Immediately about the town, the crops of wheat and rye have been very light—in some instances scarcely half a crop. In this end of Cumberland county the same lightness of crop exists. In the upper end of this county, the grain has yielded about an average quantity.

New Methodist Churches.—The new Methodist church at the corner of Wood and Eleventh streets, was consecrated on Sunday last, when an eloquent and impressive discourse was delivered by the Rev. T. H. Stockton. The edifice was commenced only a year ago last June, and is remarkably neat and beautiful.—The congregation which now numbers over two hundred members, first assembled about three years ago, in the Hall of the Pennsylvania Institute. They deserve great credit for the manner in which they have prosecuted this laudable undertaking, and for the success which has thus far crowned their efforts, during a season of great monetary embarrassment. But they seem anxious to extend their sphere of operations, and have as stated laid the corner stone of a new church a few days since, in Elizabeth street, north of the Girard Avenue. This is intended as a mission station, and will be under the pastoral charge of the Rev. Mr. Kelsey. In no part of Philadelphia is the population more rapidly increasing. Already an excellent congregation might be obtained, and in the course of a very short time we may expect to see this new building consecrated, and under auspices every way favorable. Within a stone's throw, indeed, of the place on which the corner stone was laid, are dwellings to the extent of several hundred, with new buildings starting up in almost every direction.—Phil. Post.

The Hottest Day.—Sunday last, according to the report kept at the Philadelphia Hospital, was the hottest day of the season. On Saturday, the thermometer was at one time as high as 93—but on Sunday it stood at 94. On the first of the month, it also stood at 93, when at the highest point. The accounts from the neighboring cities also tend to strengthen the impression, that Sunday, the 25th of July, was characterised by more oppressive heat, than any preceding day for several years.—Phil. Post.

The Maria Cornell Case.—The Sunday Morning News of New York, announces that it is about to publish a narrative of the confessions of Levi Cass, seaman on board the U. S. ship Fairfield, in which he acknowledges the participation of himself and others in the "murder of Sarah Maria Cornell," for which the Rev. E. K. Avery was indicted and tried.

THE WESTERN MOTHERS.

The following is a most thrilling story from M'Clung's book:

"On the night of the 11th of April, 1787, the house of a widow, in Bourbon county, became the scene of an adventure which we think deserves to be related. She occupied what is generally called a double cabin, in a lonely part of the county, one room of which was tenanted by the old lady herself, together with two grown sons, and a widowed daughter, at that time suckling an infant, while the other was occupied by two unmarried daughters from sixteen to twenty years of age, together with a little girl, not more than half grown. The hour was 11 o'clock at night. One of the unmarried daughters was still busily engaged at the loom, but the other members of the family, with the exception of one of the sons, had retired to rest. Some symptoms of an alarming nature had engaged the attention of the young man for an hour before anything of a decided character took place. The cry of owls were heard in the adjoining woods, answering each other in rather an unusual manner. The horses, which were inclosed as usual in a pond near the house were more than commonly excited, and by repeated snorting and galloping, announcing the presence of some object of terror. The young man was often restrained by the fear of incurring ridicule and the reproach of timidity, at that time an unpardonable blemish in the character of a Kentuckian.

At length, hasty steps were heard in the yard, and quickly afterwards several loud knocks at the door, accompanied by the usual exclamation, "who keeps house?" in very good English. The young man, supposing from the language, that some benighted settlers were at the door, hastily arose, and was advancing to withdraw the bar which secured it, when his mother, who had long lived upon the frontiers, and had probably detected the Indian tones in the demand for admission, instantly sprung out of bed, and ordered her son not to admit them, declaring that they were Indians. She instantly awakened her other son, and the two young men seizing their guns, which were always charged, prepared to repel the enemy.

The Indians finding it impossible to enter under their assumed characters, began to thunder at the door with great violence, but a single shot from the loophole compelled them to shift the attack to some less exposed point; and, unfortunately, they discovered the door of the cabin, which contained the three daughters. The rifles of the brothers could not be brought to bear upon this point, and by means of several rails taken from the yard fence the door was forced from its hinges and the three girls were at the mercy of the savages. One was instantly secured, but the eldest defended herself desperately with a knife, which she had been using at the loom, and stabbed one of the Indians to the heart, before she was tomahawked. In the mean time the little girl, who had been overlooked by the enemy in their eagerness to secure the others, ran out into the yard, and might have effected her escape, had she taken advantage of the darkness and fled, but instead, of that the terrified little creature ran round the house wringing her hands, and crying out that her sisters were killed.

The brothers, unable to hear her cries without risking every thing for her rescue, rushed to the door and were preparing to sally out to her assistance, when their mother threw herself before them and calmly declared that the child must be abandoned to its fate—that the sally would sacrifice the lives of all the rest without the slightest benefit to the little girl. Just then the child uttered a loud scream, followed by faint moans, and all was again silent. Presently the crackling of flames was heard, accompanied by a triumphant yell from the Indians, announcing that they had set fire to that division of the house which had been occupied by the daughters, and of which they had undisputed possession. The fire was quickly communicated to the rest of the building, and it became necessary to abandon it or perish in the flames. In the one case, there was a possibility that some might escape; in the other their fate would be equally certain and terrible. The rapid approach of the flames cut short their momentary suspense.—The door was thrown open, and the old lady, supported by her eldest son, attempted to cross the fence at one point, while her daughter carrying her child in her arms, and attended by the younger of the brothers, ran in a different direction. The blazing roof shed a light over the yard but little inferior to the light of day, and the savages were distinctly seen awaiting the approach of their victims.—The old lady was permitted to reach the stile unmolested, but in the act of crossing, received several balls in her breast and fell dead. Her son, providentially remained unhurt, and by extraordinary agility, effected his escape. The other party succeeded also in reaching the fence unhurt, but, in the act of crossing, were vigorously assailed by several Indians, who, throwing down their guns, rushed upon them with their tomahawks. The young man defending his sister gallantly, firing upon the enemy as they approached, and then wielding the butt of his rifle, with a fury that drew their whole attention upon himself, and gave his sister an opportunity of effecting her escape. He quickly fell, however, under the tomahawk of his enemies, and was found at day-light scalped and mangled in a shocking manner. Of the whole family, consisting of eight persons, when the attack commenced, only three escaped. Four were killed upon the spot and one (the second daughter) carried off as a prisoner.

"The neighborhood was quickly alarmed, and by day-light about thirty men were assembled under the command of Col. Edwards. A light snow had fallen during the latter part of the night, and the Indian trail could be pursued at a gallop. It led directly into the mountainous country bordering upon Licking, and afforded evidences of great hurry and precipitation on the part of the fugitives.—Unfortunately a hound had been permitted to accompany the whites, and as the trail became fresh, and the scent warm, she followed with eagerness, baying loudly, and giving the alarm to the Indians. The consequences of this imprudency were soon displayed. The enemy finding the pursuit keen, and perceiving that the strength of the prisoner began to fail, instantly sunk their tomahawks into her head and left her still warm and bleeding upon the snow. As the whites came up, she retained strength enough to waive her hand in token of recognition, and appeared desirous of giving them some information, with regard to the enemy, but her strength was too far gone. Her brother sprang from his horse and knelt by her side, endeavoring to stop the effusion, but in vain. She gave him her hand, muttered some inarticulate words and expired within two minutes after the arrival of the party. The pursuit was renewed with additional ardor, and in twenty minutes the enemy was within view. They had taken possession of a steep narrow ridge, and seemed desirous of magnifying their number in the eyes of the whites, as they ran rapidly from tree to tree, and maintained a steady yell in the most appealling tones.

The pursuers, however, were too experienced to be deceived by so common an artifice, and being satisfied that the number of the enemy must be inferior to their own, they dismounted, tied their horses, and flanking out in such a manner as to enclose the enemy ascended the ridge as rapidly as was consistent with a due regard to the shelter of their persons. The firing quickly commenced, and now for the first time they discovered that only two Indians were oposed to them. They had voluntarily sacrificed themselves for the safety of the main body, and had succeeded in delaying pursuit until their friends could reach the mountains. One of them was instantly shot dead, and the other was badly wounded, as was evident from the blood upon his blanket, as well as that which filled his tracks in the snow for a considerable distance. The pursuit was recommenced, and urged keenly until night, when the trail entered a running stream and was lost. On the following day the snow had melted, and every trace of the enemy was obliterated. This affair must be regarded as highly honorable to the skill and address, and activity of the Indians, and the self-devotion of the rear-guard, is a lively instance of that magnanimity of which they are at times capable, and which is more remarkable in them, from the extreme caution and tender regard for their own lives, which usually distinguishes the warriors."

THE RECORDER AGAIN.—The Editor of the Re- der, Protestant Methodist paper, seems ready cry with rage because we will not publish all is pleased to write about us and our doctrine. now calls upon us to republish a very long ar- le in his paper, of July 21st, filled with bit- ness and misrepresentation—and he makes a at noise about our illiberality in not comply- with his former request. Keep cool, Br. ringer! Don't get into a passion this warm ather. Nobody shall harm you. When we ve said things falsely of you or your sentiments, u shall be heard through our columns. But if, cause we do not choose to publish all and every ing that every body requires of us, we must be ed illiberal—so be it. On the principle you down, sir, I might fill my paper every week th articles from Mormons, Methodists, Baptists, tholics, Presbyterians, and other sects, to the clusion of every thing else. While I will nev- knowingly do injustice to any man, I must be own judge of what is most proper for me to int. And no man need to write such false and ter things against the Universalists, as the ar- le alluded to abounds with, and expect to ghten me into a republication of them by the y of 'illiberality! illiberality!' If Br. Springer ooses to fill his paper with long articles that a- ount to nothing, he is welcome to do it. Our aders expect something better; and we cannot nish them by copying an article that would ake nearly two columns of our paper, and which ter all, for the most part, is decidedly and noto- ously untrue.

1. The Star says our article "for the most rt, is decidedly and notoriously untrue." What ristian politeness! Yet this is the man who horts us to "keep cool." After refusing us a aring, he politely indicates, some two or three mes, that we are a *. We have here forci- ly brought to our mind the remark of Mr. A. ampbell, in his conflict with Skinner; he stated e had found many gentlemen among the Uni- ersalists, but they were not among the clergy.

2. "I must be my own judge," says the editor, of what is right and proper for me to print."— hat is the true language of Popery. The editor f the Star is the man. He knows it. He is so fallible in his judgment that all others must ubmit to his dictum. Ministers of all other rders are hypocrites and enthusiasts; they sus- ain their hearers on dross and chaff, &c., but he as the true bread and the pure gold. He is the nan and wisdom and piety will perish with him. But really, to be serious, the most laughably ri- diculous idea, of the article before us, is, that the essays of Methodists, Baptists, &c., would be an mposition on the columns of the Star. Now, ve have not, in our judgment, examined a paper o large amount of whose columns are filled with uch puerile stuff as those of the Star. However, ve are disposed to make all suitable allowances for the editor's taste; for, we know it to be a fact, that one man will fatten on sour crout, while another could hardly live in the room where the vessel which contains it was situated.

3. The Star makes a great clamor about our requesting him to publish our articles. We made this request in our last, on condition he should see cause to "make any remarks" upon us, and assigned as a reason, that remarks made upon any "article without giving it entire, were usually little better than public slander," which we have found verified in this case. We have no particular desire to be seen in his columns, as we could not conceive it would be any way creditable to be found there; but, if he should make remarks upon us, it was no more than an act of justice that he should give us a hearing.—Now, for the fact, that he has grossly misrepresented us, we appeal to our readers. A man capable of such injustice to another, as the Star has manifested towards us, we could neither trust with our reputation or our property. We have not thus treated him, for we have given all his articles, entire, before we strictured them; so that our readers could be their own judge, whether or no we misrepresented him.

4. We are here represented as being greatly excited—even to "rage." Now, Br. Editor, this notion grows out of your own imaginary importance. We have no doubt but you think you are of sufficient consequence to provoke the excitability of your neighbors. Pshaw! man; if you knew our opinion of the subject, you would not give yourself much uneasiness about our "rage." For us to become highly excited at any thing you would say or write, would be, as the poet sings, like—

"Ocean into tempest wrought,
To waft a feather or to drown a fly."

5. Why need the editor be so very pettish and angry about our requesting a hearing in his columns? Surely we have offered him a place in ours by way of compensation. It is likely we have from three to five readers to his one. Who knows how much light his "Star"—his splendid luminary might impart to the benighted understandings of the readers of the Recorder? How will he account to his master for this opportunity lost of doing good? Ah! me thinks, all this time, that Br. Gurley concludes that prudence is the better part of valor. He has, no doubt, taken this lesson from Hudibras:

"He that fights and runs away,
May live to fight another day:
But he that is in battle slain,
Will never live to fight again."

6. The editor complains of our "bitterness." Why, my dear brother, it often becomes necessary to administer, to a diseased man, nauseous medicine. It is a 'bitter' pill, but the Doctor says you must take it; its operation will be healthful.

Western Transportation.—We have no variation to notice, the rates to Pittsburgh by Wagons remain at 1.00 per 100 lbs.; and to Wheeling 1,25.

The Home Market.—There were about 400 head of Beef Cattle in market on Monday; 150 of which were taken by the butchers; 160 drove to other neighboring markets; and the rmainder laid over. The prices paid were 3,62½ a 3,25 live weight; ranging, probably, at something less than 5,25 a 6,50 per 1,00 lbs.—Lyford.

ITEMS.

THE BANK BILL.—The National Intelligencer says—The Bank Bill which has gone from the Senate to the House, founds the power for establishing branches for local discount on the consent of the States respectively.

If any objects, there can be no such branch within her limits.

If she assents expressly, or, if after one session of her Legislature, she is found not to object, her assent is to be presumed; and this seems reasonable, because if she have opposition, she will express it, and her silence may imply either her wishes, or that she has no objection.

In this respect the bill appears to have followed the provisions of the laws of the United States on other subjects.

WATER WORKS.—We learn that Wm. Monaghan, Esq. to whom was assigned the contract for excavating the reservior for the waterworks, commenced operations on Monday last. The Council are using commendable diligence in promoting the rapid progress of the enterprize.—Zanesville Gazette.

STEAMBOAT BURNT.—The N. O. Picayune of the 22d ult., states that the steamer Athenian, running as a packet between that city and the Balize, took fire on the morning of the 20th ult., while wooding at Grand Prarie and burnt to the water's edge.

RECOGNIZED.—President Tyler has officially recognized Francisco Arrangoiz, as consul of the Mexican Republic to the port of New Orleans.

CROPS.—From accounts, presented through papers and letters, we infer that the Grain crop of the U. States will be considerably less than an average one.

ARMS FOR FEMALES.—It is stated that in the small town of Redditch, in the county of Worcester, England, there are upwards of 70,000,000 of needles manufactured every week!

BEES.—Mr. Rice, of Ripley, Erie county, Pa., has an estensive establishment for keeping bees. Twenty years ago, he had one swarm—from which in twelve years, he had 396 swarms. The Erie Gazette states that they had then become so powerful that they commenced depredations on the neighboring tribes, going out on predatory excursions to the distance of two or three miles, much to the annoyance of their unfortunate neighbors. He then killed off a number of swarms, and obtained over two tons of honey for the New York market.

A BACHELOR'S IDEAS OF A WIFE.—A wife should have eight qualifications, which begin with the letter P.—Piety, Perseverance, Patience, Prudence, Patriotism, Politeness, Penetration and Portion.

That which should be first of all, and most in consideration, which is Piety, is now a-days, the least of all, the last of all, and with many not at all. That which should be the last of all, and least of all in consideration, which is Portion, is now become first of all, most of all, and with some all in all.

COPPER IN JAMAICA.—Copper has been found in Jamaica, embedded in a mixtra of carbonate of lime. It is of good quality, and the only question is, will the quantity be abundant.—Some miners are about to be introduced from England for the purpose of solving the query.

METHODIST CLERGY IN ROBES.—The New York Express remarks that a large and fluential portion of the Wesleyan Methodist clergy in England, it is said, are favor of wearing sacerdotal robes. We see it stated in a Halifax paper that the Rev. Mr. Bunting, an English Wesleyan Methodist, lately appeared in full robes, as also another gentleman of that church the ladies of whose church had presented him with a full suit; and in addition, the London Wesleyan Magazine for the last month, is embellished with a portrait of the Rev. Matthew Richey, Wesleyan Missionary at Toronto, Canada, in full robes and collar.

THE GREAT BANK FORGER.—It turns out that Mr. J. H. Sylvester, arrested at Louisville, Ky., as the great bank forger, is not the Mr. Dawson, alias Mr. Parker, alias Mr. Brittain, who passed forged certificates of the Commercial Bank of New Orleans, on the Bank of Kentucky, the Commercial Bank of Cincinnati, and on Messrs. Little & Co. of New York.

The Louisville Journal says, after examination he was discharged on the charge of being the bank forger, but was held in custody to answer for another charge, that of being a fugitive from New Orleans.

THE WHEAT CROP IN MICHIGAN.—The Detroit Advertiser gives a most encouraging account of the wheat crop. The simple fact that the crop looks poorly in two or three counties in New York will not materially effect the supply. The increase of the product, since last year, in the counties within thirty miles of Detroit, is greater, we are sure, than will be the deficiency in New York. And in the State of Michigan there will be an increase, over last year's product, of more than the entire product of the Genessee Valley, for the crops in Michigan seldom looked better.

A VENERABLE MINISTER.—The editor of the New York Baptist Register says he listened to a discourse a few Sabbaths since, from Father Harvey, now in the 107th year of his age. He still retains possession of his mental faculties, his enunciation is distinct, and his physical powers vigorous, and he appears to be not over 80 years old.

FREDERICK COUNTY BANK ROBBERY.—The Governor of Maryland has issued a proclamation offering one thousand dollars reward for the discovery of the robbers of the Frederick County Bank, and a free pardon to any one implicated in the robbery, who will make such disclosures as may lead to the arrest and conviction of his associates.

A SPECK OF WAR.—The Woodstock, N. B. Telegraph mentions a report that two companies of American troops have gone to the neighborhood of the Restook; and anticipates the speedy return of the troops that lately left Madawaska.

DOGS AT THE SAME PRICE.—"Well, Polly, I made a monstrous fine trade this morning; I sold our dog for fifty dollars." "Why, man alive, how you talk! and where's the money?" "Oh, I wasn't paid in money—but I've got two pups worth $25 apiece."

A MISTAKE.—The person recently arrested in Louisville, and who was supposed to be Dawson, the great Bank swindler, proves to be the brother of that person, whom he resembles very much.

MORE NONSENSE.—The learned faculty of Amherst College, Mass., have been rendering themselves ridiculous by granting permission to President Tyler to use the letters L. L. D. after his name. The sapient gentlemen, no doubt, considered that the affairs of the nation would be better administered by granting the President such a tremendous privilege. The sound sense and good taste of the community are fast doing away with such puerile foolishness, for a majority of the people consider that a man is no more wise, learned, or esteemed, by attaching to his signature a long string of capital letters. —Phil. Chron.

CONFESSION OF THE NEGROES.—The St. Louis Eveniug Gazette says: According to the statement of Madison he was born in Virginia, the slave of Asa Brockham, and was sold when 12 or 13 years of age to a negro trader by the name of Blakely and taken to New Orleans.

He soon obtained the full confidence of his master, returned with him to Maryland, and was encouraged by him to tell "false tales" to slaves, whom he wished to purchase, and to aid him in coaxing off, or in stealing and secreting others. The slaves were told that their master was from a free State, and that they would be taken to Canada, out of the reach of their masters. To the women and girls he held out the prospect of marrying rich white men, and of living in style and splendor. Blakely in connection with his partners, having collected from 80 to 100 slaves, started by land to New Orleans.

On their return to Washington, a plan was formed by which Madison's master was to sell him as often as he could, after which he was to run away and go back to him. He was sold in this way to Mr. Clay, at Washington, for $1300, and soon after joined his master in Baltimore. He was afterwards sold for $1000 in Virginia, and again he resumed as before. Near Orange Courthouse, he states that his master robbed the vault of a merchant of a large amount of money and bills, amounting to abont $100,000, and set fire to the building, which was entirely destroyed. On their return to New Orleans, Madison was sold to Mr. Blanchard, and the purchase money, 900, was given by his former master, to him as a reward for his fidelity.

After this he was engaged, as he states with a man named James Buel, a clerk of Mr. Blanchard's, in obtaining goods on forged orders. Soon after, Madison concealed himself in the store of Mr. Williams, which he robbed of $300. Afterwards, the store of Mr. J. H. Fields, of Bienville street, was robbed of $3000; and in company with a man by the name of Learned, $27,000 was obtained from the Bank on a check altered from $200. About this time, a partner, named David Rook, was taken into the concern, and the firm turned their attention to stealing negroes running them to Mobile and selling them at auction.

Such are a very few of the cases of negro stealing, robbery and other acts of villainy, in which Madison was engaged previous to his coming to St. Louis.

Here he was engaged with others, in robbing the stores of Mr. J. R. Scott, Mr. Goodell, Messrs. Braun & Hollander, Sinclair, Taylor & Co. and E. & A. Tracy; and here his career has been brought to a close on the scaffold.

A termagant told her spouse that she believe he was related to the devil; 'only by marriage,' was the reply.

The Western Bank Robbery—Later news from Jacksonsville—Confession of Town, the Bank Robber.

We last evening received the St. Louis Republican of the 24th ult., containing intelligence relative to the bank robbery, at Jacksonsville, (Ill.,) one day later than that given in the Chronicle yesterday.—The Republican says:

"On Saturday night, the 19th, H. D. Town, the Teller of the Bank, made a full development of the facts connected with the robbery to Col Mather, and said the destruction of the books was resolved upon in a moment of desperation, at the loss of character consequent upon a discovery of the long series of depredations upon the funds of the institution.—This course commenced soon after he went into the Bank—three years since—and which he had great difficulty in concealing from the former Cashier.

He became more adroit as he proceeded in his frauds, and was able to deceive the present Cashier, who had unbounded confidence in him. Town averred most solemnly, that the whole sum used by him was a little less than 4,000 dollars, which will be the only deficit. The money taken from the vaults of the Bank was all recovered on Monday night. It was buried in three places. A part of it in the Diamond Grove, part of it north of town on the barrens, and the gold in the stable lot. The process of robbery was commenced on Friday night, and ended on Sunday night. In his confession to Col. Mather, he implicated no one else, nor did he at any time afterwards. He assigned as a reason for destroying the books of the Bank, that had he not done so, they would have established his past frauds; and that if he had been immediately arrested, he never would have made any disclosures. During the week subsequent to the robbery, he accused nobody, and when anybody was named as the suspicious person he would say he believed they were guilty.

Col. Mather took the money with him to Springfield, and the citizens followed him, as heretofore stated. He was overtaken about six miles from Springfield, and taken back. As soon as he arrived, a large crowd collected, and it was with difficulty that an entrance could be effected into the Court House.

The examination was commenced, but postponed to the next day; when Colonel Mather detailed all the circumstances, and the confession which had been made to him. Town was fully committed. Bail to the amount of $9000 was required, but as it was deemed too high, he was removed to Springfield, by habeas corpus, to procure a reduction of the sum.

To show that the excitement which prevailed, it is stated, that some of the citizens who followed Col. Mather, rode 60 miles in five hours—first to overtake him, and then to return and give the news that he was on his way back.

Throughout the whole affair Town acted with perfect indifference, and even after his arrest he wrote a note to his wife 'not to be uneasy, that he was innocent and that a righteous God would assert it,' &c.

He was up to the time highly esteemed, and but a short time previous was a candidate, before the Parent Board, and came within one vote of being elected Cashier of the bank.—Great sympathy is expressed for his family and friends.

In a letter written by Town, on the 21st he says:—"I have need of friends, though I do not deserve them.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the New World.

TEN DAYS LATER

FROM ENGLAND.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP

GREAT WESTERN.

The Great Western steamer, which left Bristol on the 14th ult. arrived in port on Thursday afternoon, in season for us to present our London Correspondent's letter, and the number of Barnaby Rudge for July 10, in both country ane city editions.

FROM OUR FOREIGN CORRESPONDENT.

London, July 13, 1841.

THE ELECTIONS.

Up to the present time the returns are:

	Reformers.	Tories.
English Boroughs,	176	166
English counties,	22	121
Ireland,	32	30
Scotland,	27	20
	257	337

The Reformers have gained 36 seats, and the Tories have gained 69 seats.—Even O'Connell the great, lost his election in Dublin, and had to post himself off in a great fever to Meath, where they "returned" him without any contest.—The final Tory majority will probably exceed 60, which will enable them to hold the reins longer than they have done for the last twenty years. Well, the people were disposed to have a change of some sort, now they will have it, for better or worse.

Queen Victoria, it is whispered, is to give birth to a Prince of Wales in September. It must be a prince, for she positively assured "Albert," last November, that the "next one should be a boy"—so says the Morning Post, and of course, Royalty and the Post must know.—Meanwhile her Majesty has engaged to make visits to the country seats of the Marquis of Westminster, the Duke of Bedford, and the Earl Cowper.

The Queen of Hanover is dead, and the English Court is ordered in mourning in consequence.

In Paris and other places in France, there was lately a smart shock of an earth-quake. At Naples there have been several shocks during the month of June.

Jones, the boy who was found in Buckingham palace, was liberated from prison a few days since, but being seen prowling about the palace again, they took the liberty of giving him a free passage to Austrulia.

SIX DAYS LATER.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM-SHIP

ACADIA.

The British Royal Steamship Acadia, arrived at Boston, Monday morning, at half past 2 o'clock. She left Liverpool on the afternoon of the 29th, and made the passage in twelve days and a half. Her approach up the harbor was announced by rockets from the ship.

The Columbia arrived out on the 14th.

There is no later news from China, and no tidings of the steamship President.

Mr. Swartwout, ex-Collector of New York, and a most famous financier and absquatulator, came passenger in the Acadia. He don't look quite so hearty as when he perambulated Wall street.

The British association commenced its sitting on Thursday, the 20th of July, and will continue until the 4th of August.

Two policemen were killed in an election riot at Carlisle. Two persons are in custody who were active in the affray.

The Echo du Ford states the extaordinary fact that a woman of the Commune of Berlaiment in that department, has been "twice delivered of twins within the last eight months and a half."

An application is about to be made to the Pope to select a resident Cardinal in Ireland.

Russia is showing great activity in her arsenals. Several war steamers are building of large size.

The English funds assumed a much firmer aspect on Saturday than has occurred for some time past, and the gloom which has been hanging over all the market, has, in a great measure, dissappeared.

GREAT BRITIAN.—The elections are now nearly complete, and the Tory interest is entirely triumphant. The new Parliament stands something like this—

Tories,	368
Liberals,	285
Tory majority,	83

A Ministerial paper informs us that an important event is going to take place, which is likely to throw the approaching meeting of Parliament into the shade. A "National Conference of Ministers," of all "Religious Denominations," is to be held at Manchester, "commencing on Tuesday, August 15, 1841"

FRANCE.—Some of the accounts from Paris state that the Government were of the opinion that the disturbances were at an end. Nevertheless intense anxiety prevailed respecting the nature of the instructions given to the Commissioner extraordinary despatched thither. A species of truce had been concluded between the provisional and military authorities, which would lead to the apprehension that the affair will not terminate without a further conflict.

Madame Laffarge, it seems, has not poisoned herself as reported. A letter from Tulle, in the Commerce, says:—"She is finishing the writing of the memoirs, which will form four octavo volumes and the copyright has been sold to a book seller for a good price, more certainly than it is worth, as regards the morals of society. She is also preparing her defence for her trial in the affair of the diamonds, which will be brought before our tribunal next month. We are assured that she has subpœnaed more than fifty witnesses, and the procureur-general forty.

The new treaty signed by the Five Powers for the pacification of the East, is condemned by the French opposition journals. They are displeased at a return to reason, on the part of the French Cabinet.

At Paris, and throughout the centre of France, palpable shocks of an earthquake, and some strange meteorigical phenomena have occurred.

Meantime he will accept of our thanks for his good will.

Br. Carson, you say you have forwarded the money for your subscribers, &c. Nor has your worthy friend Little, paid us any thing; he owes $2.

The last quarterly meeting for Warrensville circuit, will be held in Montville, on the 21st and 22d; Br. Earl is invited to assist.

Br. Bamford of Warrensville circuit, informs Br. Stockton, that he will be accountable to him, at conference, for two copies of the Christian World, $3.

There will be a protracted meeting held in the township of East Union, near Carr's Tavern on the road running directly from Wooster to Canton and New Lisbon on the last Saturday and Sabbath in August. Our ministerial brethren from adjoining circuit, are invited to attend with all others that can. The above named place is on the direct rout from some of our western circuits to Pittsburgh or Allegheny city—the place of holding our next Annual Conference. Our brethren from Sandusky, Bucyrus and Mt. Vernon circuits, could come directly though on this route. We hope our brethren will try to come to our assistance. We hope our brethren on the Newark circuit, will come over to Macedonia and help us. A. W. RUSSELL.

We shall have a camp-meeting on the last Sabbath in August, at Pleasant Bethel, on this circuit, to commence on the Thursday previous. Our brethren in the ministry are respectfully invited to attend and help us. You, Mr. Editor, will please come if in the compass of your power.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: Every individual member of the church should have a deep concern for his own happiness, how he may grow in grace and piety, and at last secure the final approbation of the Judge of all the earth. After attending to our personal salvation, it is natural that we should have a solicitude for the welfare of others. If we are anxious for the welfare of the church generally, or that branch of it which we are attached to, we will frequently meditate in our minds, what can be done to further her interest; what can be done to enlarge her borders; what can be done to strengthen her stakes. Preaching and praying have done, and still may do, we acknowledge, a great amount of good. But is there not some thing else for the Methodist Protestant Church, to do in the Ohio District, before she will be in that elevated, and respectable position, where her best friends desire to see her? Our nation, if not rapidly, is gradually advancing in population, wealth and science, and does not every admirer of our church polity, and every member of our fellowship, desire to see the Methodist Protestant, Church filled with intelligent ministry and members, with well planned stations and circuits, with respectable and commodious houses of worship? We think there will be but one answer to the above,—all respond in the affirmative. Do not many of our sister churches excel us in many particulars, especially in erecting churches, in making their ministers comfortable, in regard to temporal things? Is it because they have a better gospel, or because they are more pious, and labour more in God's vineyard,or because they are more wealthy? We think not. The writer is of the opinion, that the circuits are generally too large, and too much of the minister's time taken up, in long unprofitable journeys, when he had better be cultivating and storing his mind with evangelical truth. Do not many of our preachers have appointments to preach at places comparatively unimportant, and where there is no reasonable probability of establishing a permanent church? If because we have two or three members in some distant neighborhood, where other denominations mostly occupy the ground, is there a sufficient reason why a minister should have to ride ten or twenty miles, to preach to them solely? If there were no possibility of their getting to heaven, without it, by all means he should go. But this is not the case. For any christian to suppose he could not go to heaven from any other denomination besides the one he belongs to, is to limit the Holy One of Israel. The advice given in the old discipline,was to preach where they could get the most attentive hearers. Our opinion is, that our preachers, generally, have too many preaching places, that is, more than they can properly attend to; better attend to a small vineyard well than to have a large field or district to go over and not properly cultivate it. A moderate number of preaching places, well selected, we think, is the better way, and let the minister do all he can to strengthen the same with worthy and respectable members. I see no utility in our members preaching in churches belonging to other denominations, only occasionally. If invited, in general, it will not answer any good purpose,—suspicions and fears of supplanting will arise.

Every denomination has its distinctive features and peculiarities. Let each denomination enjoy them and erect its own standard. There is something in the idea of one denomination attemping to supplant another, except it be to expose false doctrine, beneath a noble soul. We cannot help thinking it unfortunate that Methodist Protestants, should consent to be called, and call themselves, Radicals. Methodist Protesant is sufficiently expressive, beautiful and prepossessing, without taking up a name opprobiously given, and does not appear to have any definite, settled or fixed meaning, when used as a noun, and applied to a church member. If it ever had any applicability to us, it must have been before we were organized in the Methodist Protestant Church. Others of course may do as they please, but we reject the term altogether as not being found in our church constitution or discipline. The writer cannot consent to be called by a name never adopted by any church, or legislative authority. It is true people will call him what they please. But never by his consent shall they call him a Radical.

As we have almost inadvertently expressed ourselves in favor of the name, Methodist Protestant, we will mention a circumstance that occurred very near this place, a short time ago.—A Methodist Protestant minister appeared in the neighborhood, in which, if they were known at all, they were known as Radicals,—but they had no society—he informed them that a Methodist Protestant minister would be pleased to preach to them. The name appeared new,—one man in particular thought it over in his mind, a Methodist Protestant minister, what does it mean, I must go and hear him. It seemed as if the name charmed him;he went and heard the Methodist P. minister, and was pleased with the M. P. minister, and with the gospel preached by him, and immediately set about seeking religion, joined the M. P. church—subscribed for the Western Recorder, a good family newspaper, published by a minister of the M. P. church, under the patronage of several conferences of the M. P. C.—and bids fair with his wife and eight others to make good Protestant Methodists. SPECTATOR.

Pleasant Ridge, Ham. O., July 16, 1841.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: As some strange things have occurred of late in our city,and you like to hear of anything of that character, I therefore take the liberty of relating a few, with some thoughts which suggested themselves on the occasion.

The Methodist Episcopal Church held its Annual Conference in this place last week. The Rev. Edward Smith, a member of that body, was charged by his Presiding Elder, Hopkins, with having slandered the ministry of said church, by saying they passed a gag-law to prohibit the liberty of lecturing on the abolishing of slavery, and also of being guilty of the crime of slavery.

Sir, then followed, one of the strange things alluded to. The ministry of that church, and the church itself, in its legal enactments are all the same, and when we spake of the enactments of the church we spake of the acts of the entire ministry. Then it follows that when E. Smith speaks of passing a gag-law, and the like, his charge implicates the entire ministry, and now, sir, what have we before us? A conference of ministers sitting in judgment in their own behalf, to judge of a charge made against themselves. The prosecutor is one of the same party, and he is also the principal witness, and when he was objected to, as supposing he might be partial, a member remarked he was the very best witness. We say so too, he was the best to carry their point. He would be likely to let nothing slip his memory, as he was one of those spoken against, and as he was the prosecutor, he of course, would be inclined to make his charge good. Finally, the slander charged against E Smith, though it was the truth, yet because it was considered disreputable to the parties, it was decided to be a slander.

Another of these of the strange things is: on hearing E. Smith lecture on slavery. He spoke well on the subject, was powerful in argument and his ability is good, yet in all his display of zeal and philanthropy for the people of color, he never seemed to take one moment's tho't for the liberties of the white members of his own church. How, I ask, can this be accounted for? The lay-members of the M. E. Church purchase all the property, raise money to establish all the institutions of learning; they supply the means of establishing Book-rooms, pay their preachers, &c., &c., yet they have no more privileges as church members than the slaves in the south, with this exception, that they cannot be bought and sold. The gag-law operates on them to the fullest extent,and yet E. Smith never felt for the white man, but helped to bind fast his chains.

Now, I ask, sir,what is there to induce the community at large to implicate themselves in a struggle for the liberty of the slaves in the south where the ministers of the M. E. church are concerned? They have said in the gen'l conference of 1828 that the lay-members had no rights, they would acknowledge no such rights; then it is vain to expect any thing from that people. Mr Smith feels now the unlimited power of Methodist Episcopacy. The gag he helped to prepare for others is now put on his own jaws, and the lashes of the whip still smart on his back. It will be found that until the members of the M.E.C. exercise themselves in behalf of the slave, the ministry will never effect any thing; they will ever unite in retaining that power they have usurped,and every thing must be tributary to that end.

AN OBSERVER ON PASSING EVENTS.

Pittsburgh, July 24, 1841.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Buckhorn, Ohio, July 14, 1841.

Br. Springer: Since I last wrote we have had several interesting meetings.—Our third quarterly meeting was held at Evansburg. We were favored with the labors of Brs. Ragan, Foster, Maynard, Beatty, and the rest of our brethren on the circuit. The members were much refreshed at the sacramental board, and on Monday we had a blessed good time, and our spiritual strength much renewed.

Two weeks from our quarterly meeting we had a protracted meeting at New Comerstown, and were favored with the labors of Brs. Warren and Burgess.—Our class in this place was small,and almost disheartened in consequence of death and removal, but at our protracted effort the few remaining members were greatly encouraged. Six joined in with them to travel with the class to the Heavenly Canaan. We trust they are in a good way, and may the Lord speed them on their journey.

The week following we had an excellent meeting at Br. Henderson's class, and the following Sabbath at Coshocton we had another meeting to profit. Our prospects are quite flattering in Coshocton. They have had an increase of about twenty-five members this year; they have excellent prayer and class meetings.—For all these mercies we desire to be grateful to our common Parent. We have lively meetings generally in all the classes. May God revive His work of grace in all our hearts, and finally bring as to the haven of repose. Yours, &c.

W. L. BALDWIN.

Eldersville, Pa., July 26, 1841.

Br. Springer: Our congregations are generally good. I may add, still increasing in number, order, and respectability. It is true we have not many accessions this year, but we hope to hold our own, and think that the day is not far distant when we shall have a plentiful harvest on this circuit. We have 5 or 6 good meeting houses on the circuit, and our Middletown brethren are about to take down their old one and build a new one. We have also a good Parsonage house, and a large garden lot attached to it; we have also got the house furnished with such articles of heavy furniture as it will need, which will remain stationary. The Ohio circuit in this respect deserves praise, and we do earnestly wish that others may follow her noble example in this respect.

The circuit is also a firm believer in the doctrine advanced by the great Apostle of the Gentiles, in the 9th chapter of his 1st letter to the Corinthians, "the laborer is worthy of his hire, for God has ordained that they that preach the gospel should live by it." And our circuit not only professes to believe, but proves that she does,by her works;but I presume that this is sufficiently known to all the District. It is true, as it refers to this present year, we are some little behind, but when we look at her past course, and her present efforts to sustain herself, yea and her liberality to her brethren,or adjoining circuits and stations; yes,she has this year contributed between one and two hundred dollars to her brethren, for the purpose of building churches, and when we look at all these things, is there any room to fear that she will not still sustain her noble and honorable stand in the District? No, sir, we would disdain to fear: and may I not add, is there any room to fear that our heavenly Father will not smile, and yet bless them with the out-pouring of His spirit, and with the conversion and ingathering of precious and immortal souls? Surely we think there is no room to fear—He will come and will not tarry. Amen. I remain, yours, &c.

JOHN HERBERT.

OBITUARY.

For the Western Recorder.

Br. Springer: Our old friend and brother JOHN S. HORNE, is no more seen nor heard amongst us. He died on the 24th inst. This good brother was born, August, 1780, in York county, Pa.—Experienced the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, in early life, and attached himself to the M. E. church, in which he remained until the secession and the expulsion from said church, of the Reformers, in 1828.

He emigrated to Cincinnati in 1818, where he remained until 1827, when he removed to Xenia. It is believed that he was appointed class-leader in the M. E. church, pretty soon after he became located in Cincinnati; and thus served the church during his residence there, and afterwards in the same capacity in Xenia, until his health became so impaired that he could not get to the house of God without great difficulty. He was one among the first that called for an alteration of the government of the M. E. C. He became a member of the Union Society, and also a patron of the Mutual Rights—and when he heard of the expulsions of his brethren, and class mates, he immediately determined to follow them, and was accordingly one of the first members of the new organization.

He remained firm to his principles, uniform and exemplary in his life, undeviating in his piety, and of course he was peaceful in his death, having frequently, during his last and lingering confinement and affliction, expressed a strong confidence in his God; and an assurance of immortality and eternal life.

He has left a worthy widow, who with myself, are all that are left of those that seceded, and twelve children, a number of them of adult age. The community and especially the society of which he was a member, together with his family, are sensible of a serious loss in the death of this devoted christian man.

Yours, respectfully,
J. H. MCPHERSON.

Xenia, July 30th, 1840.

MORE LYNCHING IN ILLINOIS.—The Galena Gazette of the 8th ult., says that from various sources it learns that Daniel Driskill, together with Aiken, has been arrested, and the former tried and sentenced to be shot on the 7th by the sovereign mob. The press of the Rockford Star, which was honest enough to rebuke the proceedings of the former mob,was assailed by their majesty, and nearly destroyed on the night of the 5th.

CONVICTION OF MADAME RESTELL.—On Tuesday evening, about eight o'clock, the trial of this female for a misdemeanor in producing the miscarriage of Ann Maria Purdy, by the use of instruments, terminated in a verdict of guilty by the Jury. Public opinion responds to the verdict as a righteous one. It is to be hoped that the lesson of public justice thus taught her. will not be lost upon the unhappy woman on whom the vengeance of the law has fallen.—Zanes. Aurora.

THE WALKER.—The man who walked all day, from the corner of Ann street to the Park for a dollar, won his wages.—The condition was that he should walk at the rate of at least five miles an hour; and the first hour, by actual measurement, it was found that he had gone six miles and almost three quarters. Up to twelve o'clock, (five hours) he had finished twenty-seven miles. He commenced again at one, and finished the day's work at six, having walked fifty one and a half miles in exactly ten hours.—Sat. Eve. Post.

AMERICAN BOOKS.—The Baltimor American mentions it as a singular fact, worthy of notice, that the "Permanent Temperance Documents" of the American Temperance Society, are now used as the English text book in the schooll at Shishewan, in Persia.

SAGACITY OF A DOG.—The Richmond Star relates the following on the authority of a gentleman engaged in the affair, which plainly shows the remarkable sagacity of the dog:

On Monday last, a dog, belonging to this gentleman, accidently fell into a well; and he for the moment gave him up as lost. But as a sort of desperate effort to save the dog, he directed a boy to let a rope he had, down it into the well, in the hope that possibly it might catch around his leg or neck. No sooner, however,did the rope come within his reach. than the dog seized it with his teeth, and the parties above finding it had secured him, began to draw up; when about half way up he lost his hold and fell back. Again the rope was let down, and again the dog seized it, and he was drawn nearly to the mouth of the well,when his bite gave way and the third time he fell into the water. Once more the rope was let down, and this time the dog took so thorough a hold that he was brought triumphantly up,and when set down in safety, shook the water from his hair, and wagged his tail, apparently as proud of the exploit, as the other parties were gratified with it. The circumstance is a curious and interesting one.

Camp-Meeting Notices, &c.

CAMP-MEETING.—It is concluded by the brethren of Pittsburgh circuit and Allegheny station to hold a camp-meeting, at the old ground, on the land of James Clarke, in the vicinity of Sharpsburgh, (by Divine permission,) commencing on Monday evening, August 23

The brethren of Union circuit will perceive that our appointment, to some extent, conflicts with theirs, but unavoidably, as the harvest of this region will not permit it earlier, and later would not give time for the families in the station to prepare for the conference among them, after their return from the meeting. The friends of the Pittsburgh station are expected to participate in the meeting as on former occasions. And ministering brethren from Ohio and Youngstown circuits, and any others who can, are respectfully invited to our assistance. JOHN CLARKE, Jr.

July 16, 1841.

ALLEGHENY, PA., JULY 28, 1841.

Br. Springer: PLEASE NOTICE.—The members of conference are requested when they visit us for conference, those that cross the Monongahela, will please to call on Brother G. Brown on Fifth street, between Wood and Smithfield, Pittsburgh. Those that come in by other ways will please call on me at my house, adjoining the M. P. church, East Common, Allegheny, that they may be directed to their places of lodging during the session.

The time of our fourth quarterly meeting is fixed to commence on Friday 3d of September, hoping to be favored with the presence and labors of some of the brethren who may be able to be with us. As the conference commences its session on the Tuesday following, may not we hope for help from those that have to leave their charges some days before the commencement of conference, to be here in time; come brethren.

JOHN BURNS.

P. S.—Br. Brown's quarterly meeting is at the same time, and he requests me to say that he extends the same invitation, J. B.

Mr. Editor: As the matter on which we write is of considerable importance to the itinerant ministers, and preachers of the Pittsburgh District, we whose names are hereunto subscribed, have agreed to venture a call on the stewards of the circuits and stations, to make conference collections, in accordance with the rules of our discipline. Our superintendents will every one of them be asked at conference, if they have required the stewards to do their duty in relation to this matter. So sayeth a resolution of our last Annual Conference, and we want them all to be ready to answer in the affirmative—and especially do we want a good lot of money, by ministers, preachers, and delegates, paid over into the hands of the conference steward, to meet the deficiencies of those ministerial brethren, who have labored hard the past year on poor circuits, and have received but little to feed and clothe themselves and families.

Yours, truly, GEO. BROWN,
Z. RAGAN,
JNO. BURNS.

THE FIRST NUMBER OF WHICH WILL BE ISSUED ON THE FIFTEENTH DAY OF OCTOBER NEXT.

Edited by Thos. Affleck.

THE Western Farmer and Gardener is published in monthly numbers of 24 large octavo pages each, with the addition of one or more copperplate engravings, and an extensive advertising sheet, all neatly done up in a printed cover—at one dollar a year, payable in every instance in advance.

All payments by mail must be made in bank notes of par value in Cincinnati, or in such notes as are perfectly current, and generally bankable in the State in which the subscriber resides; and all letters to the Publisher, (except such as contain articles for publication, and which may be addressed to the Editor) must be post paid.

The Publisher assumes the risk of loss by mail, of all letters and remittances conforming to the foregoing conditions, and which have been properly committed to the mail, or to the hands of a Post-master.

The Post-master General states, that "a Post-master may enclose money in a letter to the Publisher of a newspaper, to pay the subscription of a third person, and frank the letter, if written by himself."

Subscriptions must commence with the beginning of some one volume, and can in no instance be received for part of a volume.

The first number of the third and of each subsequent volume, will be sent to every subscriber to the work, with a request to retain the number and remit, if they desire the work continued to them—if not, they will return the number as early as possible. Without payment of the subscription price in advance, it will in no instance be continued—the very low price at which the work is published, and the difficulty of collecting so small a sum, must be the excuse for enforcing this rule.

Any subscriber, postmaster or any other person, may obtain subscribers either as a friend to the work, or for his own profit on the following terms:

Six copies for $5—no allowance can be made on a less amount than five dollars remitted.

Twenty per cent commission on twenty-five or more subscribers:

MUTUAL RIGHTS
AND
Ecclesiastical Reform.

IT has been suggested by those whose opinion is worthy of regard, that a periodical work in pamphlet form, devoted principally to the interests of the Methodist Protestant Church, and to an examination of reform principles advocated by the ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, previous to the formation of the Associated Methodist Churches, now known as the Methodist Protestant Church, would meet with approbation and support. Solicited to test the validity of this opinion by experiment, the only ordeal by which matters of this kind can be definitely settled, the subscribers propose a monthly publication under the above title.

The first object of this work will be to collect and preserve, in a convenient and durable form, the principles espoused and defended by those who sought to reform the polity of the M. E. Church, and check the mal-administration of her itinerant ministers. While the plan of the work will admit essays on church government generally, we shall confine its columns more particularly to bring before the public a succinct view of the commencement, progress and consummation of events that lead to the secession of many ministers and members from the Methodist E. Church, and ultimately established the separate organization of the Methodist Protestant Church.

The present period seems to be a favorable one in view of bringing before an intelligent and candid public the controversy that existed between the friends to a radical and scriptural ecclesiastical government, and the Bishops and hierarchy of the Methodist Episcopal Church.—The undue excitement produced by interested persons in that communion, to divert the public attention from the merits of the pending controversy, has now subsided—and the influence of those persons being now neutralized, because of their motives and conduct being generally known, and the public mind being prepared for a dispassionate examination of the subject, points out the necessity and expediency of the proposed publication.

The work will be published simultaneously in Boston and New York, once a month, in the octavo form, to contain some thirty pages, elegantly printed, with good type and fine paper. The price will be two dollars a year, payable in advance, or on the reception of the first number, which will be put to press as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers are obtained to warrant the expense. Any person obtaining six subscribers, and forwarding the money, will be entitled to the seventh copy.

Persons holding subscription papers will please return the names of subscribers as soon as practicable. It will be admitted by all who have taken an interest in the objects contemplated by the subscribers, that as a Church, we owe it to ourselves and the community at large, that we should present matters in their true light, that after we are gone, posterity may judge between us and our opponents in view of the truth and justice of our course. Many of the writings of the early Reformers have gone out of print—the protests against unrighteous clerical assumptions ought not to be lost. Let then, a simultaneous effort be made at once, by our friends, and we shall send forth an antidote to the poison that has afflicted many.

SCHOOL BOOKS.
Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the hackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

AN INQUIRY, &c.

...tement of the Doctrine of an Unoriginated, ...inite and Eternal Prescience, as it is cur...tly and implicitly received by a very large ...portion of the Christian World.

NO. X.

...OCTRINE OF THE NUNC STANS, OR THE NO...N OF UNSUCCESSIVE EXISTENCE, IS PERFECTLY ...NTELLIGIBLE, AND AS INCONSISTENT WITH ...ND REASON, AS IT IS WITH THE PLAIN AND ...OPHISTICATED MEANING OF THE HOLY SCRIP...RES.

...e popular notion, that the existence, and ...quently the acts and the knowledge of the ..., are inaugmentable and unsuccessive, is ...f the most irrational figments that was ev...oduced by the human fancy; and this spec...ve delusion is the sole consequence of con...ding the notion of universal existence, with ...of an eternal continuity of being, or to speak ...ain and popular terms, of confounding every ...e with always. Were it not that people are ...rally under the strong prejudices of educa... and the implicit influence of an erroneous ...gogy, it would be intuitively evident to the ...rstanding of every man, that neither the ...oses nor the actions nor the knowledge of ...Deity, can be possibly all of the same date. ...e creation and the deluge, the Exodus of the ...ent Israelites, and the incarnation of the ...of God were successive in their actual oc...nce, and must therefore be as successive in ...nnals of eternity, as in the history of man...; nor would it be in the power of omnipo...e to render them either coeval or co-existent. ...Deity must of necessity have resolved to ...te the first human pair, and must have ac...y created them, before He could have execu...his purpose, and before he could have even ...ed his purpose of expelling them from the ...en of Eden; and he must certainly have ex...d them from that happy place long before ...deluge; and he must have brought the de... upon the earth long before he delivered the ...ent Israelites, and drowned Pharaoh and the ...otians in the Red Sea; and he must have ...ght out the Israelites from Egypt long before ...ent his incarnate Son into the world to re... mankind

...he before mentioned events have actually ...n place already, and therefore they must be ... occurrence both in relation to God and in ...tion to all other beings. But the general re...rrection of the dead, although it has been pre...ed, and as we believe, absolutely and infalli...predicted, has not yet actually transpired. ...t solemn event, being future in its actual oc...rence, cannot possibly be at this moment, eith... present or a past event, either to the Deity ...o any other being. Why, I ask, why will ...ple suffer themselves to be enslaved by the ex...tant and unlimited demands of an implicit ...dulity? How long will it be before mankind ...t be convinced that christian faith cannot ...ibly be at various with human reason? If I ...to believe that events may be past in their ...ual occurrence, and present to the divine ...d, or that they may be future in their actual ...rrence, and present to the divine mind; and ..., in short, there is no past or future with the ...ty, but that all occurrences, as well in the ...tory of the divine existence, as in that of cre...d beings, are to him of the same date and ... same duration, I must have a credulity that ...thing could choke, a mental gullet that would ...nit the entire mountain of Kimboraso from its ...x to its base, and would swallow at one sin...gulph all the congregated waters of the sea.

...Let me ask my readers, whether it is not at ...s very moment, to-day, and not to-morrow, ...h the Deity as it is with ourselves? Does not ... present moment identify the same point of ...ration in the existence of God, as it does in ...my own existence? And must not all coinci...ce and co-existence between the Deity and ...ated beings be as successive in relation to the ...e as they are in relation to the other? Did not ...e Deity exist during the mortal probation of A...m, and does he not now co-exist with my reader ...d myself? And is it possible to identify these ...stant points of duration with one and the same ...oment, either in relation to the existence of ...e Deity or in relation to that of His creatures? ...the Deity and myself had a co-existence yes...rday, and have a co-existence to-day, would it ... possible for the co-existence of yesterday and ...at of to-day to be successive in relation to my...lf, and unsuccessive in relation to the Almigh...?

According to the theory of unsuccessive exis...nce, although the Deity actually lived along ...th Adam, and now lives along with my reader ...d myself, yet he could not have lived along ...ith Adam before he lived along with us, neither ...es he live along with us after having lived a ong ...ith Adam; but he must have lived with Adam ...d lived with us both at the same undivided ...oment of present being. An eternal now, is ...rhaps one of the most contradictory, absurd, ...d silly phrases that the claims of an implicit ...redulity ever wrung from the lips of credulous ...d unwary mortals. An eternal now. What is ...e meaning of now—or present time? A mere ...hronological point, an indivisible quantity of du...ation, or such a portion of duration as precludes ...ll succession. The term now, cannot apply to ...y measurable quantity of duration, and much ...ss to any immeasurable quantity of duration; ...ut the difficulty of measuring now arises from ...s minitude, while the difficulty of measuring ...orever arises from its magnitude. Such are the ...bsurdities into which people are betrayed when ...hey confound minitude with magnitude, indivi...ible quantities with inaugmentable quantities, ...nd a point of duration that excludes all succes...ion, with an eternal continuity of duration ...hat excludes alike a beginning and an end.

It has been strangely conceived, that as an ...finite being must occupy at once all the infini...ude of an unbounded expansion, an eternal be...ng must occupy at once, and in one indivisible ...oint of duration, all the infinite continuity of ...n eternal existence: Whereas every person's ...nsophisticated common sense would tell him, ...hat all which can possibly be implied in an in...inite and eternal existence, may be easily ex...pressed in these intellible words, LIVING EVERY ...WHERE AT ONCE, AND LIVING EVERY WHERE FOR...EVER. But to talk of living always in one indi...visible point of present duration, which is the ...notion of unsuccessive existence, is to talk un...intelligibly, and to assert what no man living is ...able either to explain or to understand. If such ...a proposition does not involve a gross absurdity, ...I will defy the objector to make out a case that ...will involve an absurdity.

A mind that would be able to conceive of eter...nal duration compressed within the limits of an ...indivisible chronological point, would find no ...difficulty in conceiving the possibility of an in...finite expansion reduced within the indivisible ...limits of a geometrical point. Space is measur...able, and so is duration; that is to say, all finite ...quantities are measurable both of the one and of ...the other; but measurable quantity is reducible ...to an indivisible point, either of space or dura...tion; and much less would it be possible to com...press an inaugmentable quantity into an indivi...sible quantity, either of extension or continu...ance of being. And yet the notion of unsucces...sive existence in the Deity involves these and a thousand other contradictions, equally obvious and equally absurd. Neither infinite space nor infinite duration can have any other but a rela...tive existence, being modes or properties of the Deity: but although their existence is only rela...tive, it is real, and they are capable of geomet...rical and chronological admeasurement. A cu...bical foot is a real part of the divine infinitude, and a single hour is a real part of the divine eternity; and the person who would be able to annihilate the space occupied by a single cubical foot, or the duration which is traversed by one diurnal revolution, would be able to annihilate the Deity himself. Parts of infinite duration and infinite expansion are obviously real, and that for this plain reason, that if they were but deducted from the whole sum, the remainder would then be less than infinite; and yet no numerical collection of finite quantities would amount to an infinite sum; and therefore, al...though all measurable portions of infinite space and infinite duration are real portions of their infinite and inaugmentable totals, yet they do not form any numerical proportions of that infi...nite or that eternity, without which they could not possibly exist.

The occupation of space by the substance of our persons, and the occupation of time, or rather of duration, by the continuity of our existence, present an intelligible comment on that well known scripture, in Him we live, and move, and have our being. It is from the expansion of ma...terial existence, and from the visible discovery of distant objects, that we derive, by deduction, the notion of an infinite expansion; and it is from the consciousness of our own existence and the continuance of our own being as well as from a perception of the existence and continuance of other created beings, that we derive, by deduc...tion, our notion of an unoriginated and intermi...nable duration. The question is one of personal duration. Only let this circumstance be kept in mind, and the subject will be sufficiently intelli...gible. Let my reader appeal to his own under...standing, by putting the following question to his impartial and unbiased judgment. Is the Dei...ty the subject of a personal duration of being? Does His existence endure or continue from one period to another, and from one date to another? Does His eternal existence involve an unori...ginated and everlasting continuance of being? If the Deity must endure and continue in being from one period to another, and if His continu...ance of being is without origin and without end, can it be possible for his actual and personal ex...istence to be confined to one indivisible point of present duration called now?

It is impossible to reconcile the notion of un...successive existence with a continuance of be...ing, and most of all impossible to reconcile it with an unoriginated and everlasting continuance of being. Unsuccessive existence is a phrase which no man who uses it can either explain or com...prehend. If it has, indeed, any meaning what...ever, it must destroy the doctrine of the divine existence. If the notion of unsuccessive exis...tence were but as potent in act as it is destruc...tive in theory, it would absolutely annihilate all existence both created and divine.

It must be confessed that it is always now with ourselves, and that of consequence it must be always now with the Deity, because His actual existence applies to the present only. In this sense, time is an originated and terminable now, created immortality is an originated and interminable now, and the divine immortal...ity must imply an unoriginated and interminable now. But in this acceptation of the term now, which is that of present existence, there is no exclusion of the notion of continuation: but it merely signifies a continuity of existence, which in relation to the present life, has a be...ginning and an end; in relation to the future state, has a beginning, but has no end; and in relation to the Deity, a continuity of existence without beginning and without end. But the notion of the nunc stans, makes the actual exis...tence of God to embrace alike the past, the pre...sent, and the future; and therefore, if this no...tion be correct, He must be now living in ages before the flood, and in stages of existence be...fore created beings were made. At this very moment the Deity must be equally living in to...morrow and in yesterday. But the most mon...strous consequences which would follow from these premises, are, that if the Deity does of ne...cessity occupy every part of an infinite duration at the same time, then He must at this very mo...ment occupy both the first and the last moments of His being; and thus the very consequences which the advocates of this theory are most anxious to avoid, are of necessity involved in their own hy...pothesis. And let me add, that if the Deity do actually occupy the whole of an infinite duration in every moment of His existence, then He must actually live eternally, and that more than once, for He must live through an everlasting existence over and over again, an infinite number of times. Such are the absurdities which the theory of unsuccessive duration must of necessity involve, and I call upon its advocates to shew that the theory does not actually involve such consequen...ces as I have now adduced.

When a man can once persuade himself that actual existence may possibly extend itself be...yond the limits of the present moment, either prospectively or retrospectively, what may he not bring himself eventually to receive? Why not believe that a being may possibly exist where he is not, and act where he is not, and be happy in a point of space where he has no personal exis...tence? In short, there is no Berleyism or Je...suitry, which, upon such principles, a person might not readily admit. Let a man appeal to his own understanding, whether an unoriginated and interminable continuity of being, does not necessarily imply all that is really implied in eternal existence. Whether such a notion is not clear and intelligible to every understanding, and whether he is able to add any thing to the notion without involving the most glaring absur...dities.

An eternal now, is a phrase that has been ren...dered familiar to our ears by long and frequent repetition, and has been hallowed to our feelings by its association with the great truths of christi...anity, and with the solemn verities of experi...mental and practical piety; or, otherwise, our ears would have detected at once its apocryphal character, and our understandings would have demonstrated, by one single deduction, that it is totally destitute of both rational and scriptural authority. We are well aware that it will be now always, because actual existence cannot possi...bly outself the limits of the present moment; and therefore all actual existence must be present existence. But we are at the same time equal...ly certain, that existence cannot possibly be sta...tionary, that it must of necessity be successive, and for these reasons the flow of existence must be equally and unceasing, and that it cannot re...main for two successive moments the same. It is evident, therefore, that the advocates of an eternal now, are betrayed into that egregious blunder, by not distinguishing between perma...nent and stationary existence. The most im...posing form in which the notion of unsuccessive existence has ever been proposed, is the follow...ing. Eternal existence, they say, must exclude both beginning and end, and consequently in eternal existence there can be no first, and no second, and no third. But why do they not add, and so on ad infinitum? This argument has been received with such implicit submission, and has been rendered so popular, that its advocates are quite astonished to hear its validity called in question. It is true, that where there is no be...ginning of existence there can be no first exis...tence; and it is equally true, that the actions of an eternal being cannot be numbered; and yet we are perfectly certain, that the actions of an infinite being must admit of a numerical aug...mentation, or otherwise there would be an end at once to his actions, and consequently to his being.

Mr. Editor: When I sent you those two num...bers on Baptism, my object was not controversy, but the promotion of truth, desiring that some one would undertake to answer my question and meet the argument fairly, and gravely, that your readers, after hearing both sides of the subject, might the more readily perceive on which side lay the truth. If your correspondent M. W., really intended to meet my argument and an...swer my question, and believes he has done so, and is willing that his great effort shall remain before your readers as such, I am sure that I have no objections whatever, that they shall be so con...sidered and judged of accordingly.

MEDITATION. NO. II.

ON THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE.

The life of a good christian, says one, "is a perpetual warfare," and he is a happy man who learns to fight successfully in this mighty contest. His time of rest and solid peace is not to come, till after re...peated conflicts and many victories. He must fight his way to heaven, amongst a host of desperate and deceitful enemies. To these enemies the Apostle alludes, when he says, "put on the whole armour of God; that ye may be able to stand a...gainst the wiles of the devil." The pan...oply which is mentioned here, says Dr. Clarke, refers to the armour of the heavy troops among the Greeks, those who were to sustain the rudest attack, to sap the foundation of walls, storm cities, &c. The wiles of the devil, may mean the method of the devil; the means, plans, and machinations, which he uses to de...ceive, entrap and ruin the souls of men. The wicked spirit alluded to, in the same chapter, bear us a mortal hatred, and they never cease to employ a thousand stratagems and allurements to decoy us from virtue and God; and drag us along with themselves, into the pit of sin and damnation. But to our consolation, if we are true to ourselves, they can never prevail against us. All the powers they can muster against us can never do us any real injury, unless we basely yield to their seductive arts and temptations. He that is for us is more than all that are against us. We have all the host of heav...en for our allies and the great King there...of Himself to defend us, and fight our battles, who never forsakes His soldiers in time of battle, when they most stand in need, if they do not forsake Him. What then can the soldiers of Christ desire more? They are sure of victory, if they do not throw down their arms and desert to the enemy.

Satan with all his infernal legions, knowing how little they can prevail a...gainst us, of themselves, have engaged the world and the flesh, as their auxilia...ries in this warfare, upon which they place a greater dependence than upon their own troops, and who in effect are greater annoyance, and do more mischief to our souls, than the spirits of darkness. By the world is meant the whole assemblage of wretched mortals, who have been al...ready deluded by satan, into the broad road of sin and perdition, have embraced both in principle and practice, the wicked maxims and customs which he has intro...duced, and continually propagate, both by word and example. This is the world which Paul says "be not conformed to." The world that lies in the wicked one and is his slave. This is that Babylon, the city of the devil, that incessantly wages war against the people of God, seeking to carry them away captives, and subject them to its wicked laws, the lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eye, and the pride of life. This is that wicked world, with all its pomps and vanities which some re...nounce in their baptism, and which we all ought to fight against, until death.

By the flesh we mean, our own inter...ior evils, inclinations, tempers and pas...sions, which war against the peace of the soul, and urge us to take sides with the world and devil, and to fight against God. It is said to be more difficult to overcome than the others. It being a do...mestic enemy. If all the enemies of the soul, taken together be so numerous, pow...erful, and subtle as well as dangerous, and destructive, it will require a great amount of courage, fortitude and perse...verance, to fight in this warfare, in which there is so much to gain or so much to loose. If I fight valiantly, I shall win eternal life, and be decked with an im...perishable crown. Stand, says Paul, therefore having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breast plate of righteousness: or that the soldier of Christ must first gird up his loins, or in plain terms set a firm resolution of re...straining his passions, to such earthly ob...jects as may embrace him in his spiritual conflicts, and afford the enemy an advan...tage over him. Now, the girdle or belt of the christian, is truth; the truth of the gospel, and the sincerity of the heart, christian simplicity, and purity of inten...tion in all we say or do, having God and the welfare of the soul only in view.

By righteousness, by which is not un...derstood, one particular, but the whole collection of christian virtues, in order to protect us against the violent tempta...tions of their opposite vices. Conclude, O my soul, to declare eternal war against all thy spiritual foes and fight manfully against them till death, and thou shall re...ceive the crown of life.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: It becomes my duty as sec...retary of a meeting of the male members of the M. P. Church in this place over the age of 21, called "for the purpose of e...lecting delegates to the approaching Annu...al Conference, and to express their opin...ion relative to the subject of slavery," to communicate to you the following preamb...le and resolutions.

WHEREAS, the last General Conference had before them, sundry petitions on the subject of slavery as existing in the M. P. Church, but no decisive action was had thereon, principally, because, the confer...ence was not sufficiently instructed as to the mind and wishes of their constitutents and the whole subject again was left with the people in their primary assemblies, with the expectation that through the An...nual Conferences, the succeeding Gener...al Conference would be fully acquainted with their wants and wishes on that sub...ject. Therefore, this church being now assembled for the purpose of expressing their minds and wishes, on the mat...ter set forth in the above preamble, afte... due consideration and discussion, pass the following resolution with instruction to their delegates to the Annual Conference to use all prudential, and proper means to unite with them as the opinion of the chruch in this district.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this meeting, the practice of buying or sel...ling of men, women or children, or hold...ing them in slavery as they are held, is contrary to the morality of the Holy Scriptures.

On motion, Resolved, That the secre...tary be requested to furnish a copy of the preamble and resolutions, to the Western Recorder for publication.

Yours, respectfully,
E. D. NORRIS, Sec'y.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Zanesville, O, August 5, 1841.

Br. Springer: The Lord has done much for us this year, and we still look for more of his goodness. We have received this year fifty on probation in Zanesville, and fifteen at Taylorsville. And the most of them bid fair to stand fast. Our congre...gations are much better than when I came to the station; our prayer meetings are well attended, and a good state of feeling generally prevails. If our friends here would only come up to the work as they might, and ought, the Lord would do wonders in the conviction, conversion, and sanctification, of the people: religion of Christ would prevail.

Yours, in Christ, T. FAIRCHILD.

Wayne circuit, O., July 31, 1841.

Br. Springer: Since our last communi...cation, we held a protracted meeting at East Union, which resulted in much good. Having the prejudice of our M. E. breth...ren to contend with, our meeting was un...questionably under unfavorable circum...stances. But the Great Head of the church was with us; sinners trembled, mourners cried to God for mercy, and souls emer...ged from under the dense cloud of nature's night, into the light of the gos...pel, rejoiced. It was truly a glorious time; 17 were added to the church; and more are expected.

Our Presidential meeting was one of some interest; at this we had in addition to what was expected, the labors of Br. Hughes, literary agent; two joined society; have received into society since my last communication 23, making in all nearly 50 since conference. What the net in...crease will be I cannot now say. But on the whole we think the Wayne circuit on the advance. May God send them pros...perity.

Yours, truly,
A. W. RUSSELL, Supt.

Warrensville, O., August 3, 1841.

Mr. Editor: After a long silence I wish to inform you that the Great Head of the church has verified His promise, "Lo I am with you unto the end of the world." Indeed. He has graciously condescended to be entreated and has answered prayer in favor of His cause and ours on this cir...cuit in several instances, in the conver...sion of souls and supporting His people by peace. Since we have been visited by the President and Br. Hughes, worthy and good men, things wear another aspect,—the mal-contents are silenced,—the public is convinced, and the church feel the ne...cessity of order, and I have no doubt but God will be glorified. The mist of error has evaporated, anarchy is crushed by the hue of reform, and the flag of mutual rights, and our constitution is graciously streaming occular to all the circuit, friends and enemies. Here we have many fath...ers, young men and children, and moth...ers in Israel, and virgins in the kingdom of God, worthy of the name of Methodist Protestants,—and the prospect is very fair, if not flattering. Sir, we have an officiary who are worthy to hold up the hands of a Moses—they are zealous for God.

Since the President's visit we have re...ceived five preachers, all zealous for re...form and the Lord of Hosts. The in...crease since conference has been forty-six —all sterling members, except two or three cat-fish caught in the nets; by let...ters received three. But they are gone with the freshet, and I charitably hope the others will be found fit for use when the great net is dragged to the eternal beach.

I say without flattery, I have done all, and will do all in my power, for the Re...corder, for it is worthy. But I think, Mr. Editor, it has been too silent on the all important subject of Reform. It is my opinion that Reformers should keep up the fire till the foe is routed, by writing lecturing and private counsel. This was the practice of the Reformers in Canada till we drove the high toned clerical su...premacy to seek refuge in the British Wesleyan reform. I have reference to the union that took place in the year 1830 —effected by worthy and good men, Wm. John and Edgerton Ryerson,—men that have been an honor to Methodism for many years in Canada.

Yours, &c. R. BAMFORD.

BISHOP REESE.—We are glad to find in the Detroit Advertiser the following cor...rection of the statement of Bernardius Castelli, touching the imprisonment of an American citizen at Rome. After copy...ing the letter to Mr. Webster, the Adver...tiser remarks—

In the first place, Bishop Reese is not an American citizen. He first came to this country in 1827, and was stationed at Cincinnati for some two years. He then returned to Europe, after which he again preached at Cincinnati, about a year. He then came to this city, and re...mained here a year and a half, and again went to Europe. Soon after his return, the circumstances transpired which in...duced him to go to Rome.

With regard to his imprisonment in a dungeon, we are informed that it cannot be the fact, as it is but very recently that a gentleman returned to this country from Rome, who dined with Bishop Reese at the Franciscan Convent, a spacious and beautiful retreat, where he was then liv...ing. It is possible that the Council of Rome requested him to remain there un...til the charges against him were settled, but no violence has been exerted towards him.

In a few weeks communications will be received direct from the Bishop to his friends in this city, when the real truth will be known. Meanwhile, it is hardly proper to countenance this evident mis...representation.

The editor of the Cincinnati Chronicle has been examining the six returns of the census, taken at intervals of ten years each since the adoption of the Constitu...tion. The investigations show some cu...rious facts:

1. The population of the United States increases exactly 24 per cent each ten years, and this doubles every twenty-four years. This law is so uniform and permanent, that when applied to the pop...ulation of 1790, and brought down to the present time, it produces nearly the very result as shown by the census of 1840. And thus we may tell with great accura...cy what will be the census of 1850. It will be nearly twenty-three millions.

2. But though this is the aggregate re...sult, it is by no means true of each par...ticular part of the country; for New Eng...land increases at the rate of 15 per cent. each ten years, while the North Western States increase 100 per cent in that peri...od.

3. The Slave population increased at 30 per cent., but since at less than 25 per cent. The Free population have, howev...er, increased at the rate of 36 per cent. At this rate therefore the difference be...tween the free and slave population is constantly increasing.

4. Another fact is that the colored pop...ulation increase just in proportion to the distance south; and that slavery is certain...ly and rapidly decreasing in the States bordering on the free States.

This state of things continued would in half a century extinguish slavery in these States, and concentrate the whole black population of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico, and the adjacent States on the Southern Atlantic.

MT. PLEASANT, Jefferson, O., May 20.

Dear Sir: Your letter of the 15th is a hand; and gives me much pleasure to an...swer your inquiries in regard to killing the chrysalis in cocoons. The mode by camphor or charcoal is decidedly the best and safest yet discovered in this country. The process with camphor is in propor...tion 4 oz. to 10 bushels cocoonss. moisten the camphor with alcohol sufficient to pulverize it, take an air tight box, sprink...le camphor, and so on alternately until full, put on the lid, and paste paper a...round the joints to exclude all air; 48 to 56 hours will sufficate them completely, after which dry them in the shade, on a floor or shelf, spread thin, the room well ventilated. They should be kept well air...ed until reeled.

For the process with charcoal, construct an air tight room, say six feet by eight feet, fill it with open work hurdles or shelves, eight or ten inches apart, spread the cocoons on them, and set in your pans of charcoal on fire, and close up the door tight; you can easily ascertain when the chrysalis sufficated by cutting a cocoon; then dry, and keep them as above describ...ed. In all cases the chrysalis should be killed as soon as the worm has finished spinning.

I am prepared to feed extensively this season. I have three large cocooneries, all fitted up complete, and thirty acres well stocked with trees. My manufacto...ry is in daily operation, and I am constant...ly adding improvements and machinary. We make and do all within ourselves, viz. reeling, winding, twisting, dyeing, warp...ing, weaving, printing, &c. Our manu...factured goods are pronounced equal to the same descriptions of foreign; they consist of plain and flowered velvet, plain and flowered levantine for vesting, the va...rious kinds of dress silks, cravats and handkerchiefs, white colored and printed, silk coat cloth, hat plush, silk hats, silk caps, and many other descriptions. I pur...chase the good cocoons brought to us for sale at $3,50 to $4 per bushel, excluding double eat out and soft indented or im...perfect ones, and silk properly reeled of eight to ten fibres, at from $5 to $6 per pound, payable half cash, half in silk goods; also we manufacture any reeling silk sent to us into any description of goods desired by the owner, charging the regular prices for manufaturing, many having a desire to have their own pro...ductions. It is a laudable pride, I take pleasure in encouraging.

Experience is daily confirming my o...pinion that the silk culture and manufac...ture is soon to be an important and lucra...tive business in the Ohio valley, and I hope especially so in our own state. Our citizens should demand of the next leg...islature an increase of the state bounty, to 20 cents per pound on cocoons, and $1 per pound on reeled silk, for the next eight or ten years. This would firmly estab...lish the business, and add immensely to the prosperity and capital of our citizens employing our now unproductive part of the community, and saving an annual outlay of many millions of dollars for the foreign silk we consume, and which we can produce for one half the expense it costs us to produce the flour and pork, &c. we export to pay for them.

In feeding worms, I would suggest to you the free use of air slacked lime, as a preventive against disease; sift just suf...ficient to whiten them every evening; keep them clean, the temperature regu...lar, and avoid disturbing them when moulting; this, with regular feeding; will insure success.

Yours with respect,
JOHN W. GILL.

EARLY RISING.—The air in the morn...ing is more bracing and balmy than du...ring any other part of the day. Every boy or girl who can be spared from house...hold affairs should be abroad with the lark and the robin, inhaling it. What will your sons or daughters be good for, if you allow them to be dozing and dream...ing, and breathing carbon in a close room when they ought to be out brushing off the dew drops from the flowers, and lis...tening to the minstrels of the orchard and grove? It is easier for a child to rise at five o'clock than at seven.

RATHER SEVERE.—A well dressed young gentleman at a ball, in whisking about the room, run his head against a young lady. He began to apologise. "Not a word, sir." cried she, "it is not hard enough to hurt any body."

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... AUGUST 18, 1841.

From the Philadelphia Sat. Ev. Post.

The Bankrupt Law.

The Bankrupt Bill, which has lately passed the Senate, and which although it has not yet been taken up by the House will probably become a law, is beginning to attract considerable attention. We therefore lay before our readers a synopsis of its provisions. Verbal accounts are unfavorable to its receiving the attention of the lower branch of Congress, at the present session, though these accounts are rebutted by a vote upon the motion to lay a resolution from the committee on judiciary, declaring it inexpedient, to act upon this subject this session, upon the table. The vote upon that motion was 118 affirmative to 81 negative, which may be regarded as an evidence of a disposition in the House, to take action upon the subject:

Section 1. Enacts that a uniform system of Bankruptcy be established thro'out the United States—and that all persons owing debts, who shall by petition, setting forth a list of his or their creditors, the amount due each, together with an inventory of his or their property of any kind, verified by oath, apply to the proper court for the benefit of this act shall be deemed bankrupts, and may be declared so by a decree of such court. All persons being merchants or retailers of merchandize, all bankers, factors, brokers, underwriters, or marine insurers, owing debts to the amount of not less than $2,000, shall be liable to become bankrupts, and may, upon petition of one or more of their creditors to whom they owe not less than $500, be so declared in the following cases to wit: whenever each debtor shall depart the State of which he is an inhabitant, with intent to defraud his creditors; or shall procure himself to be arrested, or have his goods, &c., taken into execution; or shall remove his goods, &c., or conceal them, to prevent their being levied on; or make any fraudulent assignment or sale of his lands, goods, &c., Provided, however, any person declared a bankrupt at the instance of a creditor, may by petition to such court have a trial by jury to ascertain the fact of such bankruptcy.

Sec. 2. Enacts that all future payments, conveyances, &c., made in contemplation of bankruptcy, or for the purpose of giving any creditor an undue preference, or any such payment or conveyance to any person not a creditor, for a valuable consideration, without notice, shall be deemed void and a fraud upon this act, and the assignee under the bankruptcy shall be entitled to claim and sue for the same; and the person making such unlawful preferences shall receive no discharge. And if it shall be made to appear to the court, that in the case of a voluntary bankrupt, he has at any time given or secured any preference of one creditor over another, in contemplation of the passage of a bankrupt law, he shall not receive a discharge, unless assented to by a majority in interest of those of his creditors not preferred. Nothing in this act shall in any way impair the rights of married women or minors, or any liens, mortgages, &c. which may be valid by the laws of the States respectively, and not inconsistent with the second and fifth sections of this act.

Sec. 3. All property of every description, of every person declared a bankrupt, except as is hereinafter provided, shall be ipso facto diversed out of the bankrupt, and the same shall be vested in such assignee as shall be appointed by the Court—suits pending by the bankrupt shall be continued by the assignee, and no suit by or against an assignee, shall abate by the death of said assignee. There shall be excepted from the provisions of this section, such necessary household and kitchen furniture of the bankrupt, as the assignee shall designate, having reference in the amount to the family and condition of the bankrupt, but in no case to exceed in value $300, and also the necessary wearing apparel—on exception being taken to the determination of the assignee, the matter to be decided by the Court.

Sec. 4. Every bankrupt, who shall comply faithfully with the provisions of this act shall, unless a majority in number and value of his creditors who have proved their debts, shall file written dissent thereto, be entitled to a full discharge from all his debts, and a certificate thereof granted him—such certificate, however, not to be granted until after ninety days from the decree of bankruptcy, nor until seventy days notice is given to all creditors and persons interested, to appear and show cause why such certificates should not be granted. Such bankrupt shall at all times be subject to examination orally, or upon written interrogatories, before such Court, on oath, in all matters relating to such bankruptcy, which are necessary for the purposes of justice. If in any case of bankruptcy, a majority, in number and value, of the creditors who shall have proved their debts, shall at the time of hearing of the petition for a discharge file their written dissent to the allowance of a discharge and certificate to such bankrupt, or if, upon such hearing, a discharge shall not be decreed to him, he may demand a trial by jury, upon a proper issue to be directed by the Court, or he may appeal from the decision to the Circuit Court. And if, upon a full hearing, it shall be found by the Court or the jury, that the bankrupt has in all things complied with the requisitions of this act, the Court shall decree his discharge.

Sec. 5. Creditors coming in and proving their debts, in the manner hereafter described, shall be paid, pro rata, and no priority or preference shall be allowed, except for debts due the United States, and laborers in the service of the bankrupt, when those of the latter shall not exceed $25. All creditors whose claims are not due till a future day, shall have their present value ascertained and allowed.

Sec. 6. The District Court in every district, shall have jurisdiction in all matters and proceedings arising under this act, the proceedings to be summary and the Court always to be open. The Cour to prescribe forms and rules for the regulation of proceedings, and to prescribe a tariff of fees.

Sec. 7. All proceedings in a case of bankruptcy shall take place in the district in which the bankrupt resided, when his petition was filed, and all proof of debts or other claims by creditors shall be under oath, before such court, or Commissioner appointed thereby, or before some disinterested state Judge, in such form as the Court may direct. But such proof of debt shall be open to contestation.

Sec. 8. The Circuit Court shall have concurrant jurisdiction with the district Court, of suits brought by the assignee against persons claiming an adverse interest, or by such persons against the assignee, touching any property, or rights of property of the bankrupt, transferrable to, or vested in, the assignee; all such suits barred after two years from the date of the bankruptcy.

Sec. 9. All sales, transfers, &c., by the assignee of the bankrupt's property, shall be made as ordered by the Court—all assets shall be paid into the court within sixty days from time of their receipt, subject to the order of the Court for their disposition—and bond shall be given by the assignee for the faithful discharge of his duties.

Sec. 10. The Court shall require the collections of assets, to be made as speedily as the interests of the creditors will allow, and a distribution of them to be made every six months, and all proceedings shall be closed if practicable in two years.

Sec. 11. The assignee shall have authority to redeem and discharge any mortgage, lien, &c., upon any property, and to enter a due performance of the conditions thereof, and also to compound debts, under the order or direction of the Court—and creditors shall have notice, and be allowed to show cause, why such order or direction should not be passed.

Sec. 13. The proceedings in all cases of bankruptcy, shall be deemed matters of record, but shall not be recorded at length. This section also establishes certain fees to be charged by the officers.

Sec. 14. This section provides for cases in which two or more persons, who are partners in trade, become insolvent, and directs the assignee to distribute the proceeds of property, joint and separate, among their joint and separate creditors according to equitable rules—in all respects, except as relates to the manner of distributing and disposing of the proceeds of the property of such partners, the proceedings against them shall be the same as if had against one person alone.

Sec. 15, prescribes the manner of constructing the deeds, to be given by the assignee upon the sale of any lands of the bankrupt.

Sec. 16, confers upon the Circuit Court of the United States, for the District of Columbia, and upon the Superior Courts of the Territories, all the jurisdiction, power, &c., vested in the District Court of the United States, in cases of bankruptcy.

Sec. 17, prescribes the time when the act shall commence taking effect, and the period of its duration.

Narrow Escape from War.—Capt. Drew, the commander of the expedition which destroyed the Caroline, was a short time since passing on the St. Lawrence in a steamboat, when the Captain of the boat unexpectedly announced his intention of putting in at Ogdenburgh.—Captain Drew remonstrated, and pointed out the consequences which might follow his being arrested in the States, but in vain; in went the steamer to Ogdensburg and out again, most happily. She went in without letting it be noised abroad that war between Great Britain and America, was on board. If Captain Drew had been arrested we should have had a grand flare up, and diplomacy would have been taxed to its utmost capacity, to save the honor of the two nations in any other manner than that to which dogs resort when one impolitely growls at the other. We hope Capt. Drew will consider how essentially the fate of the world is bound up in him, and give a liberal margin to the combustibles of the Northern frontier. —Jour. Com.

A Noble Act.—On Monday afternoon, August 2d, a little boy fell in the dock on Light street wharf, and was saved from inevitable death by the generous conduct of Mr. Thos. Sheppard, jr., who, seeing the critical situations of the lad, and regardless of all consequences to himself, plunged into the water and rescued him from a watery grave. No praise can repay such an act.

Puffing.—Speaking of the modern system of puffing, the Bostonian says:—By the bye we shall be requested to say we have used Dumfries' Itch Ointment with distinguished success!

News from Ireland.—The Dublin News says—On Friday morning a very interesting experiment on the power of locomotives on common roads, was made with one of Anderson's and Rogers' steam carriages. A wagon of immense size, was attached, and started from Nottingham street, filled with persons standing in it. Both machines proceeded to town through Sackville street, &c., and returned at a considerable speed, although surrounded at almost every point by crowds of all classes. Our informant tells us that he met it ascending the hill of Newcomen-bridge, and was struck by the extraordinary appearance of the wagon following, which was literally covered with people, and after seeing it pass the hill, that he followed it to Nottingham street, where he found that the number it contained was 61 or 62 grown men. Supposing them to be an average of 12 stone, we shall find that the live weight alone was about 4½ tons; and supposing the machine to weigh only one ton, the enormous weight of 5½ tons was actually drawn up one of the heaviest hills in this neighborhood, and run through the streets at a speed exceeding 10 miles an hour.

Failure of the Eastern Mails.—There have been several failures of the eastern mail within the two last weeks, and more than is agreeable, or could be satisfactorily accounted for at this season of the year. The following paragraph, from the Wheeling Times of Saturday, however, will explain the cause of the non-arrival of the mail here, on that day.

State Rights.—The mail upon the National Road both east and west was stopped yesterday at the toll gate, five miles out, by the Superintendent under an order from the board of public works of Virginia and toll demanded. This the contractors of course refused to pay, and the mail was thrown into the post-office at Triadelphia until one of the clerks at this post-office took the responsibility of going out and bringing it in. We think that some one will have to suffer for this, for two reasons: 1st, Virginia has no right to demand toll. 2d, the laws of the Union are very severe against stopping the mail.

Murderous Affray.—An account is given in the Southern papers of an affray which occurred on the Savannah road in Wayne county, Tenn. It seems that an officer by the name of Stutts went to the house of a man by the name of Brooks, to arrest him, and took with him several persons for that purpose. Upon arriving at the place, Brooks came out with his rifle and shot a young man by the name of Towery, who was along for the purpose of assisting the officer.—Towery died immediately. Stutts, the officer, then fired upon Brooks, as he retreated into the house, and put two pistol balls into his back. Brooks was living by the last account we had of him, but it was thought he had received a mortal wound. A general fight ensued between the constable and his posse, and the friends of Brooks, who attempted to prevent an arrest.

Justice Wiley.—Some men are born great, and some have greatness thrust upon them. In the latter category stands Justice Wiley. The other day, the Baltimore clipper headed an account of the robbery of its premises of $20 in shinplasters—"A Chance for Justice Wiley." The New Orleans Picayune, of the 24th, has the annexed. When we get hold of the Valparaiso and Patagonia papers, with similar compliments for the Justice, we will preserve them. Pic. says:

"A few days ago we were robbed of an almanac for 1842, the last copy of the New York Herald, the report of Glentworth's trial, together with a digest of the City Laws. If Justice Wiley of New York will recover these things for us, we will allow him a commission of 12 per cent."

The following from the London Weekly Dispatch, is equal to a paragraph which appeared in a Liverpool paper, stating "that Governor Porter of the State of Baltimore had issued a proclamation declaring that General Harrison was elected President of the United States of Boston."

"It appears by these papers that the story of the destruction of the Niagara Falls, is a gross lie, no such event having happened. A paper in this country which should make such an experiment at the expense of truth would incur more odium than credit for the "ingenious device." But the light in which Jonathan considers such matters ought to be overlooked in estimating such influated state papers as the one recently set forth by the redoubtable Mr. Pickens in the House of Representatives."

Mysterious Murder at Hoboken.—The body of a respectable young woman, Mary C. Rogers, who resided in Nassau street New York, was found at Hoboken, on the 28th ult. with marks of violence upon her person. The deceased had been absent from home since some time on the Sunday previous, and appears to have borne an irreproachable character. Her body was found in the river, where it is supposed to have been thrown after the desperate act of violence was committed. The Sun says she was known as the "beautiful cigar girl."

119,481 hogshead of Tobacco, valued at $9,884,051 were exported from the United States during the year ending 30th September last.

Death in the School-Room.

A FACT.

Ting-a-ling-ling-ling!—went the little bell on the teacher's desk of a village-school one morning, when the studies of the earlier part of the day were about half completed. It was well understood that it was a command of silence and attention; and when these had been obtained, the master spoke. He was a low thick-set man, and his name was Lugare.

"Boys," said he, "I have a complaint entered, that last night some of you were stealing fruit from Mr. Nichols's garden. I rather think I know the thief. Tim Barker, step up here, sir."

The one to whom he spoke came forward. He was a slight, fair-looking boy of about fourteen; and his face had a laughing, and good-humored expression, which even the charge now preferred against him, and the stern tone and threatening look of the teacher, had not entirely dissipated. The countenance of the boy, however, was too unearthly fair for health, it had, notwithstanding its fleshy, cheerful look, a singular cast as if some inward disease, and that a fearful one, were seated within. As the stripling stood before that place of judgment, that place, so often made the scene of heartless and coarse brutality, of timid innocence confused, helpless childhood outraged, and gentle feelings crushed—Lugare looked on him with a frown which plainly told that he felt in no very pleasant mood. Happily a worthier and more philosophical system is proving to men that schools can be better governed, than by lashes and tears and sighs. We are waxing toward that consummation when one of the old-fashioned school-masters, with his cowhide, his heavy birch rod, and his many ingenious methods of child-torture, will be gazed upon as a scorned memento of an ignorant, cruel, and exploded doctrince. May propitious gales speed that day!

"Were you by Mr. Nichols's garden-fence last night?" said Lugare.

"Yes sir," answered the boy. "I was."

"Well, sir, I am glad to find you so ready with your confession. And so you thought you could do a little robbing, and enjoy yourself in a manner you ought to be ashamed to own, without being punished, did you?"

"I have not been robbing," replied the boy quickly. His face was suffused, whether with resentment or fright, it was difficult to tell. "And I didn't do anything last night that I'm ashamed to own,"

"No impudence!" exclaimed the teacher passionately, as he grasped a long & heavy ratan "give me none of your sharp speeches, or I'll thrash you till you beg like a dog."

The youngster's face paled a little: his lip quivered, but he did not speak.

"Ah pray, sir," continued Lugare, as the outward signs of wrath disappeared from his features; "What were you about the garden for? Perhaps you only received the plunder and had an accomplice to do the more dangerous part of the job?"

"I went that way because it is on my road home. I was there again afterward to meet an acquaintance; and—and—But I did not go in the garden, nor take any thing away from it. I would not steal,—hardly to save myself from starving."

"You had better have stuck to that last evening. You were seen, Tim Barker, to come from under Mr. Nichols's garden-fence, a little after nine o'clock, with a bag full of something or other, over your shoulders. The bag had every appearance of being filled with fruit, and this morning the melon-beds are found to have been completely cleared. Now, sir, what was there in that bag."

Like fire itself glowed the face of the detected lad. He spoke not a word. All the school had their eyes directed at him. The perspiration ran down his white forehead like rain-drops.

"Speak, sir!" exclaimed Lugare, with a loud strike of his ratan on the desk.

The boy looked as though he would faint. But the unmerciful teacher, confident of having brought to light a criminal, and exulting in the idea of the severe chastisement he should now be justified inflicting, kept working himself up to a greater and greater degree of passion.—In the mean time the child seemed hardly to know what to do with himself. His tongue clave to the roof of his mouth.—Either he was very much frightened, or he was actually unwell.

"Speak, I say!" again thundered Lugare; and his hand grasping his ratan, towered above his head in a very significant manner.

"I hardly can, sir," said the poor fellow faintly. His voice was husky and thick. "I will tell you some—some other time. Please let me go to my seat—I a'n't well."

"Oh, yes; that's very likely;" and Mr. Lugare bulged out his nose and cheeks with contempt. "Do you think to make me believe your lies? I've found you out, sir, plainly enough: and I am satisfied that you are as precious a little villain as there is in the State. But I will postpone settling with you for an hour yet. I shall then call you up again; and if you don't tell me the whole truth then, I will give you something that'll make you remember Mr. Nichols's melons for many a month to come:—go to your seat."

Glad enough of the ungracious permission, and answering not a sound, the child crept tremblingly to his bench. He felt very strangely, dizzily—more than if he was in a dream than in real life; & laying his arms on his desk, bowed down his face between them. The pupils turned to their accustomed studies, for during the reign of Lugare in the village school, they had been so used to scenes of violence and severe chastisement, that such things made but little interruption in the tenor of their way.

Now, while the intervening hour is passing, we will clear up the mystery of the bag, and of young Barker being under the garden-fence on the preceding night. The boy's mother was a widow, and they both had lived in the very narrowest limits. His father had died when he was six years old, and little Tim was left a sickly emaciated infant whom no one expected to live many months. To the suprise of all, however, the poor child kept alive, and seemed to recover his health as he certainly did his size and good looks. This was owing to the kind offices of an eminent physician who had a country seat in the neighborhood, and who had been interested in the widow's little family. Tim, the physician said, might possibly outgrow his disease; but everything was uncertain. It was a mysterious and baffling malady; and it would not be wonderful if he should in some moment of apparent health be suddenly taken away.—The poor widow was at first in a continual state of uneasiness; but several years had now elapsed, and none of the impending evils had fallen upon the boy's head. His mother seemed to feel confident that he would live, and be a help and an honor to her old age; and the two struggled on together, mutually happy in each other, & enduring much of poverty and discomfort without repining, each for the other's sake.

Tim's pleasant disposition had made him many friends in the village, and among the rest a young farmer named Jones, who with his elder brother, worked a large farm in the neighborhood on shares. Jones very frequently made Tim a present of a bag of potatoes or corn, or some garden vegetables, which he took from his own stock; but as his partner was a parsimonious, high-tempered man, and had often said that Tim was an idle fellow, and ought not to be helped because he did not work, Jones generally made his gifts in such a manner that no one knew anything about them, except himself and the grateful objects of his kindness. It might be too, that the widow was loath to have it understood by the neighbors that she received food from any one; for there is often an excusable pride in people of her condition which makes them shrink from being considered as objects of "charity" as they would from the severest pains. On the night in question Tim had been told that Jones would send them a bag of potatoes, and the place at which they were to be waiting for him was fixed at Mr. Nichols's garden-fence. It was this bag that Tim had been seen staggering under, and which caused the unlucky boy to be accused and convicted by his teacher as a thief. That teacher was one little fitted for his important and responsible office. Hasty to decide, and inflexibly severe, he was the terror of the little world he ruled so despotically. Punishment he seemed to delight in. Knowing little of those sweet fountains which in children's breasts ever open quickly at the call of gentleness and kind words, he was feared by all for his sternness, and loved by none. I would that he were an isolated instance in his profession.

The hour of grace had drawn to its close, and the time approached at which it was usual for Lugare to give his school a joyfully-received dismission. Now and then one of the scholars would direct a furtive glance at Tim, sometimes in pity, sometimes in indifference or inquiry.—They knew that he would have no mercy shown him, and though most of them loved him, whipping was too common there to exact much sympathy. Every inquiring glance, however, remained unsatisfied, for at an end of the hour, Tim remained with his face completely hidden, and his head bowed in his arms, precisely as he had leaned himself when he first went to his seat. Lugare looked at the boy occasionally with a scowl which seemed to bode vengeance for his sullenness. At length the last class had been heard, and the last lesson recited, and Lugare seated himself behind his desk on the platform, with his longest and stoutest ratan before him.

"Now, Barker," he said, "we'll settle that little business of yours. Just step up here."

Tim did not move. The school-room was as still as the grave. Not a sound was to be heard, except occasionally a long-drawn breath.

"Mind me, sir, or it will be the worse for you. Step up here, and take off your jacket!"

The boy did not stir any more than if he had been of wood. Lugare shook with passion. He sat still a minute, as if considering the best way to wreak his vengeance. That minute, passed in death-like silence, was a fearful one to some of the children, for their faces whitened with fright. It seemed, as it slowly dropped away, like the minute which precedes the climax of an exquisitely-performed tragedy, when some mighty master of the histrionic art is treading the stage, and you, and the multitude around you are waiting with stretched nerves and suspended breath, in expectation of the terrible catastrophe.

"Tim's asleep, sir," at length said one of the boys who sat near him.

Lugare, at this intelligence, allowed his features to relax from their expression of savage anger into a smile, but that smile looked more malignant, if possible, than his former scowls. It might be that he felt amused at the horror depicted on the faces of those about him; or it might be that he was gloating in pleasure on the way in which he intended to wake the poor little slumberer.

"Asleep! are you, my young gentleman!" said he; "let us see if we can't find something to tickle your eyes open.—There's nothing like making the best of a bad case, boys. Tim, here, is determined not to be worried in his mind about a little flogging, for the thought of it can't even keep the little scoundrel awake."

Lugare smiled again as he made the last observation. He grasped his ratan firmly and descended from his seat. With light and stealthy steps he crossed the room, and stood by the unlucky sleeper. The boy was still as unconscious of his impending punishment as ever. He might be dreaming some golden dream of youth and pleasure; perhaps he was far away in the world of fancy, seeing scenes, and feeling delights, which cold reality never can bestow. Lugare lifted his ratan high over his head, and with the true and expert aim which he had acquired by long practice, brought it down on Tim's back with a force and whacking sound which seemed sufficient to awake a freezing man in his last lethargy. Quick and fast, blow followed blow. Without waiting to see the effect of the first cut, the brutal wretch plied his instrument of torture first on one side of the boy's back, and then on the other, and only stopped at the end of two or three minutes from very weariness. But still Tim showed no signs of motion; and as Lugare, provoked at his torpidity, jerked away one of the child's arms, on which he had been leaning over on the desk, his head dropped down on the board with a dull sound, and his face lay turned up and exposed to view.—When Lugare saw it, he stood like one transfixed by a basilisk. His countenance turned to a leaden whiteness; the ratan dropped from his grasp; and his eyes, stretched wide open, glared as at some monstrous spectacle of horror and death. The sweat started in great globules seemingly from every pour in his face; his skinny lips contracted, and showed his teeth; and when he at length stretched forth his arm, and with the end of one of his fingers touched the child's cheek, each limb quivered like the tongue of a snake; and his strength seemed as though it would momentarily fail him. The boy was dead. He had probably been so for some time, for his eyes were turned up, and his body was quite cold. The widow was now childless too. Death was in the school-room, and Lugare had been flogging A CORPSE.

In reading the obituary notice of Gen. Samuel Dale, formerly of Alabama, who recently died in Lauderdale county, Mississippi, I note an error in the description of his celebrated canoe fight on the Alabama river. The writer states—'When unaided he fought and killed seven warriors'—The correct narrative of the achievement I believe to be this. Colonel Dale, accompanied by a then lad, if my recollection serves me, about sixteen years of age, named Jeremiah Austel, (now a respectful cotton factor in the city of Mobile) was crossing the Alabama in a canoe, and when about half way over, described close at hand another canoe with seven Indians coming round a point, which had previously hidden them from the view.—The Indians were all fully armed warriors. Austel was pulling the oar in the bow, and Dale with his paddle in the stern steering. The instant that their enemies so suddenly appeared, Dale directed Austel to pull hard and prepare to board their canoe. The order was promptly and successfully executed. Dale's boat was brought to the side of the other—and he and his companion springing up together, placed one foot in each, thus bringing and keeping them together at both ends; and then with the butt of their rifles, knocked down and killed the whole seven warriors.

The error in the account of this affair as recently published, is not corrected with a view to detract from the merit of Colonel Dale, but to do justice to one, whom the writer has heard relate this, and other incidents connected with the history of the country during that period. Of his own deeds he always speaks with great modesty. Among them is one which I am happy to have the opportunity of repeating. On one occasion Austel was sent express from one distant post to another, riding through an extensive swamp all night. In the morning about sunrise emerging from the swamp and ascending the bank of a creek, he discovered in front of an old log cabin a few rods distant, three Indians, one of whom was in the act of tomahawking a white settler. The tomahawk was upraised but arrested as Austel came in sight. The instant he reflected on his situation, entirely alone, and the peril of his white brother, he turned his head, and looking back towards the creek, called out as to his men to hasten to the spot; and clapping spurs to his horse at the same moment rushed upon the three warriors, who abandoned their victim and fled to the swamps, pursued by Austel, until he had placed them at a sufficient distance to enable him to release their white prisoner. Having achieved this, he took him on his horse behind him, and pursued his route. Such was the young companion of Colonel Dale in the Canoe fight.

Robbing a Judge.—The New York Tattler of Tuesday tells the following:—Judge Noah's dinner was stolen from his kitchen on Saturday night, by a parcel of rampant young burglars. This is indeed "bearding the lion in his den"—but we'll bet another dinner that if the Judge could catch them, before they reached his official vision, he would sooner feed than persecute. Stealing eatables always seems to us the most excusable description of crime, as it indicates the necessity of the thieves.

Mysterious.—The Brooklyn Star mentions the finding of a leather pocket book on the shore of Gowannus Bay, which appears to have belonged to a person named James Claypool, of Lancaster, Ohio: "It contains three tickets in the Maryland lottery; a letter from his wife, (Ruth Claypool,) dated New Lancaster, May 16th, 1841; one from his son (W. Claypool,) dated High Bank, March 28, 1841; a bill of exchange on James Garraghty, $1,100; a receipt of Trotter, Morrell & Co., Philadelphia, dated May 10, 1841; a bill of exchange for $1,800, payable to the order of M. Garraghty, and other papers of no value. The pocket book was probably cast into the water from on board some packet vessel, and it is possible that a theft may be therewith connected. The pocket book and papers are in possession of Cornelius Bergen, Esq, of Brooklyn."

A dandy in New Orleans, wishing for an excuse to speak to a beautiful lady in the street, with whom he was unacquainted, drew his nice white cambric handkerchief from his pocket, as he approached her, and inquired if she hadn't dropt it. The lady glanced at the handkerchief, nodded assent, took it and marched on, leaving the exquisite to be laughed at by his companions.

A company of some ten or fifteen persons in Mobile, are making up an expedition to Yucatan, with the view of exploring the country, and if they find it to offer sufficient inducements, to locate there. They are to sail about the 10th of next month.

Bloody Butchery.—A dreadful affair, says the Richmond Star of the 23d ult., occurred on the 22d, in Screamersville, the like of which we scarce ever heard. It seems that two men named Robert Harris and James McDermott—the first a cabinet maker, the last a Printer, got into a drunken fight, during which Harris stabbed McDermott to an awful degree.

He stabbed him in near a hundred places, (so thinks our informant) cutting the throat, laying bare the windpipe and carotid artery, through the nose, in the left shoulder, in the chest, upon his thighs, and, indeed, literally slashing him to pieces. McDermott fought until he fell, when Harris mounted him and hacked his body at his pleasure; during the whole of which time, five men were looking on and not interfering at all.

Dr. Johnson was called in, and strange to say, the wounded man will probably recover, although the surgeon pronounced it the most perfect piece of butchery he ever witnessed.

There was quite an excitement at Niagara Falls last week, in consequence of a man (Allen) having been taken down the current and thrown upon one of the Three Sisters' Island, in the rapids, with his boat. He was crossing from the Canada side, and made known his fate by kindling fires. After remaining near three days where no human being is known to have been before, the people succeeded by means of boats and ropes in rescuing him.

Assault.—An outrageous assault was made on last Sunday evening, upon the person of William H. Roane, late U. S. Senator, from Virginia, by a slave named William Thompson. The only cause given for the assault was that the Hon. gentleman remonstrated with him for encroaching upon his farm. The negro was apprehended, and the honorable assaulted deemed out of danger from the injuries he received.

Frightful Accident at Reynoldsburgh.—We have vague accounts of a dreadful affair at Reynoldsburgh, Franklin, O., on Wednesday last. A large number of citizens were raising the frame of a church, when it unfortunately fell to the ground, injuring some thirty persons, some very severely. The village has been converted into a general hospital.—Columbus Journal, 11th inst.

Exploring Expedition.—The latest accounts informs us that the Exploring Expedition was sojourning in the neighborhood of the Sandwich Islands, and preparing for a cruise to Columbia river and the northwest coast. It is expected that from thence they will proceed towards the South Pole, and return home by the way of the Cape of Good Hope.

The Richmond Star says:—"The secret of Dr. Collyer's putting folks to sleep, has been discovered at last. He has a piece of the Boston Mail in his hands, and rubs it over the subject." The Mail answers by saying:—"The secret of his awakening folks out of the magnetic sleep has also been discovered. He takes a piece of the Richmond Star and holds it to the nose of the subject."

"Ned has run away with your wife," said one friend to another, "Poor fellow, I pity him," was the reply.

"Who Dar?"—Gumbo was a wicked negro who had witnessed the ravages of the cholera in 1832 with stoic indifference, but in '34, seeing his best friends dropping off by dozens in Negro Alley, Buffalo, began to have some fears of giving the last kick himself, in pretty much the style he was wont to "fro dat next brickbat," in a row. Gumbo then for the first time thought of praying, to use his own phrase, "to de angel ob de Lord," declaring that if he could only be spared "dis time," he would be ready next year to be taken up and "lib forebber in Massa Abraham's bussom." Some wags, having access to an adjoining room, separated by a board partition, hearing him at his devotions, knocked.

"Who dar?"

"De Angel ob de Lord?"

"What he want?"

"Want Gumbo."

Abominable.—An English paper says that a letter has been received at Lloyds, from their agent at Christiansand, Norway, dated June 30, which states that the master of the Flora, from Newcastle to that port had been condemned by the Primitive Court there, to twenty-eight days imprisonment on bread and water, to be flogged at the pillory, and put to hard labor in chains for the remainder of his life for having fraudently disposed of goods in his charge; and the owner of the same vessel, for having participated in the crime, to be flogged at the pillory, and put to hard labor in chains for the remainder of his life, also.

The English, French, and American Press.—The city of Paris has twenty-seven daily papers with a circulation of 90,000. London has only nine papers with a circulation of 45,000. What a contrast they both present with the American press, and what a corresponding discrepency in the independence and intelligence of the great mass of the English and French population, compared with the people of our own highly favored continent. Thanks to that lever of our liberties, the public press in general—the penny press in particular.

Florida.—Advices from Pilatka, received at Savannah, speak very encouragingly of the prospect of a speedy termination of the war in Florida. Fifteen Indians had gone to Tamoa,-from Sam Jones' camp, and stated that he and one hundred and fifty warriors were near at hand, and that many of them desired to surrender. Col. Worth had sent strong inducements for them to come in, and it was thought they would do so speedily.

Three prisoners escaped from the jail of Fayette county, Ohio, on the night of the 26th ult. Two of them were horse thieves—a class of gentry that are becoming rather numerous of late. A reward of $150 dollars is offered for their apprehension.

Matthias, the Imposter.—It is stated by the Highland Messenger that Matthias, the imposter, died in North Carolina in July, 1840. His age was about 60 years. He is probably the most stupid creature who ever set up for a prophet.

Battle in the Indian Country.—Under this head the St. Louis Argus of the 23d, contains the following important and interesting piece of intelligence:

"Large numbers of Indians, negroes and mongrels, from Florida, have been placed upon the borders of Arkansas and Missouri. By a gentleman direct from Fort Leavenworth, we learn that some 600 negroes from Florida, and runaways from the Choctaws and Cherokees, and from the whites, united with a few white men, have been gradually associated in the fastnesses west of Arkansas. Not long since they marched high up Red River, and encamped for the purpose of hunting Buffalo. They built a very tolerable fort with logs, surrounded by a ditch, to protect themselves against all danger. They caught very few Buffalo, and therefore to supply their wants invaded the possessions of the Choctaws and carried off cattle, poultry, grain, &c The Choctaws followed, but finding their numbers and fortifications an overmatch, they retired, and sent to Fort Gibson for the United States Dragoons. Captain Moore, of Company D. was sent to capture them with three companies of Dragoons, but after arriving upon Red River, he found their entrenchments too strong, and their number to great to venture an attack. He accordingly sent to Fort Townson and was re-inforced with a fine company of Infantry, and a couple of pieces of cannon.

"The cannon were shortly brought to bear upon the works, and soon made the splinters fly and the logs move so queerly that the refugees, at a signal rushed outside of their fortifications and began to form upon the prairie in front of their works. Ere they fully succeeded in doing so, Captain Moore and his gallant Dragoons charged upon them at full gallop. The carnage that ensued is represented as terrific; the Dragoons routed them in all directions, and after putting large numbers to the sword, succeeded in capturing the whole army. The conduct of the Dragoons is represented as worthy of all commendation as regards both skill and bravery. The bravery and numbers of the refugees availed nothing against the irresistible charge of the mounted Dragoons.

"This decisive blow will give security to that exposed portion of the frontier, and convince the refugee negroes and Indians that our Dragoons may not be trifled with. The loss of the Dragoons was unknown to our informant—he said an express brought the news to the Fort."

Most Horrible—Three Children Murdered by their own Mother.—We copy the following account of the most distressing and revolting infanticide that has ever come within our knowledge, from the Louisville, Miss. Tablet, of the 24th ult.

"One of the most awful deeds that has perhaps ever come within the knowledge of the human race, was perpetrated in the vicinity of this place, on Sunday morning last, by a Mrs. Roper. She killed three of her own children, by cutting their heads off with an axe. From the information which we have received on the subject, it seems to have been done while she was in a fit of mental derangement. It was her intention to have killed two more in the same manner, and afterwards hang herself with a hank of yarn, but her husband waking up, discovered something extraordinary in her actions, and seized her around the waist; after a strong effort on her part to escape from him, during which she tried to draw one of three knives from the ceiling, which she had previously sharpened and put there, they reached the door, when he discovered what she had been doing.

"She is a mother of eleven children, including the three which she killed.—She appears now to be restored to reason, and it is a pitiable spectacle of the deepest and most bitter anguish. She says that while under the influence of a distorted imagination, she thought she was doing a charitable action in ridding her husband of the burthen of supporting herself and their five youngest children; as he is a poor and very hard working man."

Caution.—The editor of the Dublin Freeman's Journal, cautioning the British Ministry against entering on a war with this country, uses the following language.—"When America was but a sapling, she put you to 170,000,000*l* of expense, in your unsuccessful attempt to cut her down. Her boughs have shot forth far since then—her trunk has grown in width and firmness—she has now a national bark full fifty years of age, gnarland and tough and unbroken—'twill take a sum of money to cut down this sturdy stem. Pray, think of it in time."

The ship Algonquin, at Philadelphia, has brought another female sailor. She shipped as a seaman, in men's clothing; her sex was discovered about five days out, and a new wardrobe was supplied. The Philadelphians are making a great fuss about the matter. The female still remains on board.

Samuel Swartwout.—The N. Y. Planet of yesterday, states that Mr. Swartwout, the ex-collector, was in that city on Tuesday, and appeared before the Custom House Investigation Committee, and went through an examination.

Packet Ship Louis XIV.—This vessel, concerning which some interest has been felt, from the fact that the passengers of Bath, were put on board of her after Gorham had abandoned his vessel, was spoken at sea 9th inst. in latitude 25, longitude 30 30, by Hamburg bark Victoria, which arrived at Boston on Thursday.

Intended Revolt of Slaves.—The following are the particulars of the contemplated revolt of the slaves in those parts of Louisiana and Mississippi bordering on the river. The news created some sensation at New Orleans, particularly as it was exaggerated in its repetition:

The overseer of the plantation of Robt. J. Barrow, of West Feliciana, having occasion to arise from his bed in one of the recent hot nights, heard what he believed to be negroes conversing in one of the quarters. On silently approaching the vicinity and listening, he overheard two of the slaves discussing the subject of rising against the whites. This led to the examination the next morning of the two fellows, when they confessed the fact, and gave information that led to the arrest of several others. The alarm was immediately spread abroad, arrests were made in various plantations, and it was found by the confessions that they all agreed in the main facts, that there was to be a general rise, and that the first of August was duly agreed upon.

A white man, a carpenter, who had lately done a job of work for Mr. Barrow was also arrested on suspicion, and examined. He said he had nothing to do with the plot—that he had never said anything to the negroes on the subject, but acknowledged that they frequently spoke to him, and informed him all about it.

This white man, with about forty negroes, all of whom had confessed their knowledge of the intended rising, were in the jail at St. Francisville, guarded by a company of volunteers. Their examination by a competent tribunal, was to have commenced yesterday at 10. A. M.

At Woodville, we learn numerous slaves were confined in the jail; having confessed to the same facts as those arrested in Feliciana.

Capt. Laurent states that on stopping at Point Coupee, to communicate information of the situation of affairs above, several gentlemen recollected occurrences of recent date which tended to confirm the suspicions that the slaves of their section were parties of the wicked plot. Doct. ——— said he had been asked what day of the month it was, by more negroes within the last ten days, than in seven years before—and there had been unusual assemblies of the slaves in rather bye-places, for several Sundays past.

Some of the negroes have confessed that the combination was from Bayou Sara to Natchez.

It may not be amiss to remark, that the plantations in Feliciana and Wilkinson county, from which the slaves were taken, are owned by the most wealthy and respectable planters of the States, whose kind and humane treatment of their slaves is proverbial.

A Horrible and Disgraceful Act.—It is stated in several Baltimore papers, that a murder was committed on the Reisterstown road, about six and a half miles from that city, on Wednesday evening last, between 6 and 7 o'clock, which surpasses in brutality any thing we have ever heard of in real life. A man and wife, who had been engaged during the day at work in a field, were returning home, when he induced her to accompany him to a barn near at hand, and from some unknown cause he shot her in the breast and arm, then broke a gun to pieces over her head and body, which were beaten in a shocking manner, and disgraceful to relate, the body was from the head to the feet cut and gashed with a knife, or some other sharp instrument. The body was found on Friday, and an inquest was held by Squire Bowman. The man was arrested and committed to Baltimore County Jail on Saturday. We regret to learn that the miserable man evinced no signs of the slightest remorse when arrested.

Suit against Mr. Biddle.—On Tuesday the President, Directors and Company of the Bank of the United States of Pennsylvania, through their counsel W. Rawle, T. J. Wharton, and F W. Hubbel, in their suit against Mr. Biddle, filed in the District Court a declaration setting forth damages sustained by that Institution to the amount of one million of dollars, and also entered a rule upon Mr. Biddle to plead within eight days, or judgment. We understand Messrs. Randall, Dallas, and Meredith, are the counsel engaged by Mr. Biddle.

English and American Navy.—We have in the United States, sixty eight national vessels; Great Britain has three hundred and fifty. The British navy carries 14,630 guns; ours 2,400; and this is exclusive of the steam force, which is perhaps worth all the rest collectively. Our readers know we are not among the alarmists—but we do think that, for national security, more attention should be bestowed upon our naval force.—Phil. Sat. Cour.

Completed.—The Boston and Portland Railroad is now in operation as far as New Market, N. H., a distance of fifty-seven miles from Boston. The cars leave Boston at 7 A. M. and arrive at Boston at half-past 9 o'clock.

The Hoboken Murder.—Three or four arrests of men supposed to have some knowledge of the murder of the girl Rogers, near New York, have taken place, but nothing elicited to aid in discovering the murderers.

Two teaspoonsfuls of common table salt dissolved in half a gill of vinegar, and swallowed at a draught, is said to be an effectual remedy for the diarrhœa or summer complaint, in most cases. Try it.

What will not a Mother do to Save her Child?—We learn that on Friday, as a child of Mrs. McGee of Westminster aged 5 years, was at play about the well, it climbed upon the curb, and was precipated headforemost into the well, which was about 20 feet deep. Mrs. McGee, missing the child, and hearing cries from the well, although in very poor health, and having a child only 3 weeks old, descended, and rescued the unfortunate sufferer, who was clinging to the stone of the wall, and crying for help. Such daring and bold achievements, although of rare occurrances show what a mother will do to save a suffering child.—Bellows Falls Gazetie.

A Fish Story.—The Planters' Banner says a gentleman of that parish, some time since, harpooned a large alligator in the Teche, which had committed depradations on his plantation, and was cruel enough to nail up his jaws and clinch them so close that there was no possibility of his opening his mouth. He was then set at liberty, and eighteen months afterwards was shot, with his jaws still closed and the nails rusted. He was identified as the same alligator by the marks of the harpoon and the manner in which the jaws were nailed. We are assured that this is a positive fact.

A NEW PUBLICATION BY THE CONDUCTORS OF THE BROTHER JONATHAN.

Jonathan's Miscellany,

PUBLISHED BY WILSON & COMPANY,
162 Nassau Street, New York.

The first number issued on the Tuesday following the Fourth of July, 1841.

THE Publishers of the Brother Jonathan, encouraged by the abundant and unprecedented success which has crowned their recent efforts in the publication of the "Dollar Magazine," have decided upon publishing a weekly sheet, expressly for the country, in a convenient form for preservation, under the title of Jonathan's Miscellany.

The Miscellany is issued every Tuesday morning, in a suitable form for binding, and contains eight large quarto pages, printed with a beautiful and clear type, on a sheet of twenty-eight by thirty-eight inches. Its columns will be made up principally of such matter as appears in the Brother Jonathan, and not in the Dollar Magazine—and to those who desire to receive the whole contents of the Brother Jonathan in a fit form to bind, the opportunity is now offered to do so by subscribing to the two publications, Jonathan's Miscellany, and the Dollar Magazine.

Serial works—The plan of the Dollar Magazine excludes the serial works which are published in the Brother Jonathan. The Miscellany will contain such new works from the pen of "Boz," "Harry Lorraquer," and others as may hereafter be commenced in the columns of the Brother Jonathan.

Jonathan's Miscellany will also embrace the cream of the news, the latest and most important having the preference. It will be published on Tuesdays, and will thus anticipate the Saturday papers of the same week several days.

In cheapness and excellence the Miscellany will challenge comparison with any other periodical in the world!!

In point of embellishment, and in general literary character, the Miscellany will be identical with the Brother Jonathan; and the unexampled popularity of that sheet induces the publishers to think that nothing farther is necessary in this prospectus than to state the

It seems now to be necessary, in self-defence, for us to give the communication of Brs. Porter and Cullin, upon which we put the editorial veto in consequence of the indecorousness of its style. All we intended was to reprove impertinence in young men, and not to refuse them a hearing in self-defence. That object is now accomplished and will, no doubt, in due time work its effect.—Here follows their defence:

For the Western Recorder.

PORTER & CULLIN FOR THEMSELVES.

Mr. Editor: In the 32d No. current vol. of the Western Recorder, you publish at the instance of the Pittsburgh quarterly conference, the action of our last Annual Conference upon a protest from some brethren in the city against the doings of the quarterly conference of Pittsburgh Ct. in the case of licensing 'two young men.' It will be well understood, by the readers of the Recorder, throughout the district, that we are the young men referred too, and as the matter now stands before the public it cannot fail to operate very unfairly and injuriously, in begetting evil suspicions, weakening confidence, and hence preventing usefulness; and therefore demands of us an explanation. We sincerely regret this necessity, inasmuch as we deprecate any collision of feeling, or sentiment, with our brethren, especially those to whom we are wont to look as nursing fathers, and we sensibly feel the need of being strengthened & supported in the cause in which we have embarked, by such, rather than weakened and prevented, by involving character in such a cloud, as the publication referred to creates. In relation to it, we remark:

1. That the statement that we "applied to the Pittsburgh quarterly conference for license to preach and the application was rejected by that body," is false. We never applied to that body for license to preach; and for reasons which we deemed altogether sufficient, had fully determined long before we took our transfer to the church at Sharpsburgh, that we never would apply.

2. The statements in the protest of the brethren, on which the action of the Annual Conference seems to be predicted, are, so far as we have knowledge utterly untrue They state that our license was "procured by the proceedings" of the superintendent of the circuit, and that it was "a violation of the articles of discipline" and "an unjustifiable interference with Pittsburgh station." We positively aver that neither the superintendent, or the quarterly conference interfered in the premises. The plain history of the matter, is this; upon our conviction of duty and propriety, and in accordance with the advice of brethren in the 'station' we took our certificates from the superintendent of the station, and attached ourselves to the church at Sharpsburgh, and in this church all the disciplinary steps were taken in our case. It is true we did not take certificates from the station until near the sitting of the quarterly conference at which we were licensed; though we had, for a length of time before, identified ourselves with the circuit, and had acquainted many of the brethren with our design: and we are yet unable to see ought in the whole matter, for these brethren to protest against except it be our preference of the church in Sharpsburgh, to the church in Pittsburgh: right of locomotion exercised in moving our standing from the latter to the former church, or aught of "injurious tendency, opening a wide door for anarchy," except the caus ■ produced on the part of the station, which compelled our preference and transfer.

3. Some of the principal causes why we transferred our standing to another church, were, 1st. A repulsive and depressing indifference, extensively met with among our leading and official brethren in the station. 2d. While pursuing a course of preparation for the ministry, we were informed by members of the quarterly conference of the station, that that body had previously "Resolved not to license any person whom they would not be willing to receive for their preacher," and we had good reason to believe that but very few men in the district, (not even the editor of the Recorder) could be licensed under this restriction. 3d. We knew that repeated efforts had been made by the superintendent of the station, in accordance with the direction of discipline, to obtain a meeting of the official members for the purpose of acting upon an application for license by a candidate whom the President was desirous of employing on a destitute circuit, and in every instance they refused or neglected to meet, and the young man, by advice of the President and superintendent, removed his standing to Allegheny station, and was immediately licensed there, and forthwith became an efficient itinerant. 4th. The people of the circuit were better acquainted with us, and our own qualifications for the ministry, than those of the "station," and in our view better qualified to act intelligently and judiciously in our case.

4. We believe the matter would have harmlessly rested where the Annual Conference left it, had not a similar "protest," relating to the very same matter been sent to the second quarterly conference of the circuit, six months after the rise of the Annual Conference.

Finally, in view of these facts, we hope the readers of the Recorder unacquainted with us and the circumstances referred to, will not be hasty in concluding, from the representation heretofore given, that either we, or the quarterly conference by which we were licensed, besought the gratification of an unworthy ambition, rather than the good of souls and the glory of God, or that we have set "a precedent of injurious tendency and opened ■ wide door for anarchy in the church;" such ■ result will readily be produced by the causes which render'd it our duty to ourselves, to the church at large, and to the station, to remove our standing to a peace-keeping and law-abiding church, where the helps and enjoyments of religious fellowship could be realized.

THOS. CULLIN,
A. W. PORTER.

April 17, 1841.

It will be necessary here to republish the explanation, &c. of Br. J. Clarke, given in our last, as we had not room nor time then to attend to it.

For the Western Recorder.

THE QUARTERLY CONFERENCE OF PITTSBURG CIRCUIT—BRETHREN PORTER AND CULLIN —AN EXPLANATION.

Mr. Editor: The following resolution was adopted by a very full meeting of the quarterly conference of Pittsburgh circuit, the writer alone objecting:

WHEREAS, a publication has been made in the 83d No. of the Western Recorder, which reflects injuriously upon brethren Porter and Cullin—upon this body, and to some extent upon our superintendent. Therefore,—

Resolved, That Br. Jno. Clarke be authorized and respectfully requested to correspond with the editor, in view of a satisfactory explanation of the whole matter.

The duty imposed on me by the act of the quarterly conference, is one I had rather decline, if I thought the greater good would result from thus doing. I fear the ultimate want of success in giving an explanation that will be satisfactory to all; and I dread collision with the feelings or prejudices of any of my brethren. Inasmuch, however, as "truth injures no man," if you will permit the following brief narrative of the facts in the case, to go out after the publication above referred to, the object of the brethren may be obtained, and no person injured.

I believe the matters with which the brethren feel aggrieved, are, 1. The protest of some brethren in the Pittsburgh station, in which "the proceedings in the case of licensing brethren Porter and Cullin," are characterised as "a violation of the discipline," "an unjustifiable interference with the station," "opening a wide door for anarchy," and are attributed to the "superintendent of the Pittsburgh circuit." 2. The action of the Annual Conference predicated upon the representation of said protest. 3. The editorial statement, that the young men had applied to the quarterly conference of the station, and were rejected by that body. 4. The editor's manner o. condemning and rejecting their explanation on account of its style, when it is supposed that with equal convenience, he could, upon the authority of their communication, have corrected the main facts in the case, in a proper style.

The whole matter may be deemed rather trifling, yet the injury resulting from it, is known to be somewhat serious, especially to the young men; and if this little effort to repair that injury will be in any degree successful, none will be more thankful than the writer. The case is simply this. The young men believing themselves called of God to the ministry—their superintendent and leader, and most of their brethren regarding them as worthy—were brought out before the church, occasionally, in the regular appointments, upon the week evenings. They were also (I understand, unanimously) recommended by the class of which they were members—and were kindly aided in their studies by Br. Shinn, of the examining committee. Thus far toward applying to the quarterly conference of the station for license they went, but no farther. In the meantime they met with circumstances, (we do not recite them,) which were severely repulsive and afflicting to their feelings, and on account of which I was advised by their friends, (among whom was the superintendant of the station, and their leader, Doctor M. Adams) to open their way, within my charge, which was closely neighboring, and in which they were perhaps, as generally and as well known, as in the station. I accordingly obtained an interview with one of them, (Br. Porter,) and was informed then by him, that they both had made up their minds decidedly, never to suffer themselves to come before the quarterly conference of the station for license to preach; and that they were entirely satisfied that it was their duty to remove their standing from that church, and that the church's interests, as well as their own, required that they should. I also knew that they were advised to this step, by very judicious members of the station. From this time on they identified themselves with the circuit, and were cordially embraced in the affections and confidence of the people, and their public efforts were highly appreciated and commended. Yet they attended upon the instructions of Br. Shinn, and did not present certificates from the station, until the approach of the quarterly conference, by which they were licensed; but it was generally and well understood by the people of the circuit for a length of time before, that they were candidates for the ministry among them, and all the steps required by the discipline in cases of granting licenses, were fully and properly taken in their case on the circuit, and the quarterly conference which did unanimously license them was as competent to judge, and act in such cases as most other similar bodies in the connexion. Nor is it likely the case would have been further heard of, after the rise of the Annual Conference but that a similar protest to that which had been there acted on, was also presented, six months after, to the quarterly conference of the circuit.

Now, it is admitted that under ordinary circumstances the case would furnish a precedent of injurious tendency, that ought carefully to be guarded against; yet in view of the causes which influenced the young men in leaving the station, I believe the whole transaction proper and judicious, nor can I conceive that the discipline, either in spirit or letter, has been violated, either by them or the people of the circuit. In relation to this, however, we are perfectly willing that those in possession of all the facts should judge.

The foregoing is written in the spirit of kindness toward all concerned, and if not satisfactory to all, we sincerely hope it may be injurious to none.

Respectfully,
JNO. CLARKE, JR.

We remark upon this whole subject:

1. The publication of the letter, signed Porter and Cullin, we think was an uncalled for, and an imprudent document. In the first place it was calculated to keep up strife among brethren, and in the second place i s tendency was to injure the young men whose signatures it bore, by informing the public that they were the persons who withdrew their standing from the Pittsburgh station to the Pittsburgh circuit, in order to procure license to preach, which comparatively few of the church would otherwise have known. The inferences which the public would naturally make from these premises are, 1st. If these young men thus withdrew it must have been because they were satisfied the quarterly conference of the station, would not license them; and secondly, if this body would not license them, there must have been something wrong in the men, and thus a prejudice raised against them, in the community, which it would take years of fidelity to erase. Take notice, we do not say that the young men were unworthy, for we mean to give no opinion upon the merits of the controversy, between the parties; we simply mean to say that such would be the inferences of the readers of that document. Hence, its publication, in relation to the standing of the young men themselves, was imprudent. That the publication of the resolutions of the Annual Conference contained in our 83d No., was called for, every friend of order will admit; but, of the propriety of the resolutions of the Pittsburgh quarterly conference, contained in the same article, we give no opinion as they refer to circumstances of which we have no knowledge. But this we will say, we thought the first resolution too personal, as it gave the names of "Porter and Cullin," when the principle could have been secured without; therefore, in kindness to the young men, we took upon ourself the authority to erase their names and to substitute blanks.

2. We gave it as our opinion that we had been misrepresented to those subscribers, on the Pittsburgh circuit, who were about to withdraw their patronage from our paper, because of our relation to the Porter and Cullin affair. In conformation of this suggestion we give the following extract from Br. Clarke's letter, above; "3. The editor's manner of condemning and rejecting their explanation on account of its style, when it is supposed, that with equal convenience, he could, upon the ☞authority of their communication have corrected [stated] the main facts, in the case, in a proper style." Here it is asserted that the communication of Porter and Cullin authorized us to correct its style. Now, we answer in the very polite and courteous language of that document, that the assertion is "false," 'utterly untrue.' The reader may satisfy himself by examining the communication, above, where we have given it every word every syllable, save the endorsement on the back. He will see there is not the least item of discretion in it.—Besides, take the following quotation; 'the young men say they found it to be a duty to themselves, to the church, &c. "to remove our standing to a peace-keeping and law-abiding church, where the helps and enjoyments of religious fellowship could be realized." Here it is insinuated, that the Pittsburgh church was neither 'peace-keeping' nor "law-abiding," and that they were destitute of the "helps and enjoyments of religious fellowship." Now, we ask, how could we correct such insinuations in "proper style" without suppressing them altogether? Besides, again, this letter signed Porter and Cullin, bears the style, and is in the hand writing of a man, who seems to think that such harsh expressions, and severe insinuations, is his greatest merit as a writer. And should we therefore have modified them in anyway, we should have had to met his censure for exercising ■ dictatorship over the press. So that situated between the alternatives, as we were, we chose to meet the difficulty at the threshold. Now any man who would make such an incorrect assertion as above,—that the rejected communication, itself, authorized 'us to correct' its "style," thus public, would make the same in private; and any man who would say such things both publicly and privately, to our injury, would, also say other things equally unfounded.

3. Br. Clarke charges us with misstating facts when he said that Porter and Cullin applied to the Pittsburgh quarterly conference for license to preach and were rejected. Porter and Cullin, as we understand it, make this charge upon the Pittsburgh quarterly conference. The statement is ours and was made under the following circumstances; the resolutions, &c., of the Pittsburgh quarterly conference were forwarded to us for publication, without any statement as to their object or cause, and we were requested to give such a statement as would set them in a proper light. In compliance with this request we stated as objected to. But such precisely were our views of the facts at the time, and we got our impression from Br. Clarke himself. For at the Steubenville conference, when the Pittsburgh Protest came up, he insisted that we should take a part against it; and represented as though the Pittsburgh church was guilty of ■ kind of religious barberism toward these young men, against which the conference ought to shew its disapprobation. However, having other business on hand we paid no attention to the case, and received no other impression, in relation to it, but what we received from this interview with Br. Clarke—But it now appears, that we were mistaken.—They did not apply to the quarterly conference of the circuit for license to preach, after being requested, but they applied for fear they would be rejected by the Pittsburgh quarterly conference. And though our statement was literally "false," it is nevertheless virtually true.—It was our intention at the time we rejected the communication under notice, to have made the necessary correction, but through the hurrying and confusion of business we forgot it.

4. Now, if for these young men, on their very first step into the world, to tell a large church, embracing men of age and standing, that what they said was "false"—"utterly untrue;"*—that they were not a "peace-keeping and law-abiding church," and that they were destitute of "religious helps" and "fellowship," &c., &c., was not impertinence, and did not merit reproof, we have lost our judgment in the case. But we are not here to be considered ■■ passing any judgment upon the merits of the question at issue between the parties. We frankly confess that we do not understand its merits. We are only now defending ourself, from the public and private attacks made upon us. We will, however, say this much in relation to the Pittsburgh quarterly conference: they used to have some pretty hard cases among them, and for ought we know, may yet have. But we consider them a respectable body of men, entitled to the confidence of the church. And far us to open our columns to men of yesterday, to heap vituperation and abuse upon them, or upon any other respective body, is what we shall not do, let the consequence be as it may. However, calm and respectful investigations of any question, or the doings of any public functionary, shall always be admitted into our columns.

5. We do sincerely regret being under the necessity of stricturing so severely on this subject; and we think it much to be lamented that the imprudence of supposed friends has brought these young men in this way before the public. If the efforts to injure us had been kept private we should have said nothing on the subject.—But when attacked and misrepresented in our own columns, we feel it to be our duty to repel such efforts to injure us. Our good Br. Clarke appears to be the master spirit in all this business. When he calls for it, the "unanimous resolution" of the Pittsburgh circuit quarterly conference is at his disposal: when he wishes to gratify his peculiar appetite for writing harsh and severe things the names of "Porter and Cullin" are at his command. At his nod patronage is withheld or bestowed.—An intelligent layman, a total stranger to all the parties, remarked to us at the last Annual Conference, that let these young men be what they might, he was afraid they would be injured under the tuition of Br. Clarke. To shew what kind of a spirit Porter possesses, probably as the effects of his late teaching, we will give an extract from a letter he wrote us from Pittsburgh, the 20th ult.

"MR. EDITOR.—Dear Sir: I would not have dared to address you, lest my language should prove 'indecorous' and 'disrespectful,' but from the fact that it is to oblige Br. James Clancy who wishes you to discontinue his paper," &c.

"I remain, sir, yours, &c.
■ "A. W. PORTER."

* What is here charged as "utterly untrue" upon the Pittsburgh brethren, viz: their statement, "that the license of Porter and Cullin were procured by the proceedings of the superintendent of the circuit" is substantially admitted, above, by the superintendent himself. He procured an interview with Br. Porter, he tells us, and of course took him in his leading strings, and "procured" the accomplishment of the whole matter. He took his lamb out from among the Pittsburgh wolves and placed it among decent people, where it could have some "helps."

Here we are assailed with a taunt of irony, and then chastised with the surrender of one of our subscribers, the withdrawal of whose patronage his mighty influence had procured. Now the mind which is capable of such an effusion as that above must be so small, that, as Presiding Elder Hamilton said of some of his Freeport members, it would "rattle in a tobacco seed;" and that under its influence still smaller of course. Br. Cullin, we believe, labors on Middletown circuit, Va. We hear of no mawkish sympathy for him, or discontinuation of patronage on his account; yet the people, where he abides, are quite as intelligent, and as sensible in their feelings, as those of Pittsburg circuit. It is probable that it is his good fortune to have better historians than his colleague. And if he be agreed to take what we are here compelled to give him, in self-defence, we have nought against him.

6. As it respects the 14 names that Br Clarke tells the people he has in his pocket, ready for discontinuance we say that we regret to loose any good subscribers, particularly at present, when we shall need all the cash we can command. We are now erecting some buildings, which will cost near $300, which are indispensibly necessary to the perpetuation of our printing operations. The proceeds of our paper barely clears expenses without remunerating us for our services. As we have not plenty of means to make our present establishment, we have to labor and give constant personal attention. Indeed, our toil is greater than that allotted to ■ Southern slave, and nine-tenths of it for the benefit of the church, without expectation of reward. We would care not for all this, if we could be sustained by the brethren, and enjoy their good wishes. But to be harrassed, with this kind of petty annoyance, makes our task cheerless. However, we suppose we will have to bear with our dear brother Clarke, for he seems, God bless him, to have been born in hot water, and it is highly probable he will never be able to get out of it as long as he lives.

Camp-Meeting Notices, &c.

We shall have a camp-meeting on the last Sabbath in August, at Pleasant Bethel, on this circuit, to commence on the Thursday previous. Our brethren in the ministry are respectfully invited to attend and help us. You, Mr. Editor, will please come if in the compass of your power.

W. L. BALDWIN.

Buckhorn, O., July 14, 1841.

CAMP-MEETING.—It is concluded by the brethren of Pittsburgh circuit and Allegheny station to hold a camp-meeting, at the old ground, on the land of James Clarke, in the vicinity of Sharpsburgh, (by Divine permission,) commencing on Monday evening, August 23

The brethren of Union circuit will perceive that our appointment, to some extent, conflicts with theirs, but unavoidably, as the harvest of this region will not permit it earlier, and later would not give time for the families in the station to prepare for the conference among them, after their return from the meeting. The friends of the Pittsburgh station are expected to participate in the meeting as on former occasions. And ministering brethren from Ohio and Youngstown circuits, and any others who can, are respectfully invited to our assistance.

JOHN CLARKE, JR.

July 16, 1841.

ALLEGHENY, PA., JULY 28, 1841.

Br. Springer: PLEASE NOTICE.—The members of conference are requested when they visit us for conference, those that cross the Monongahela, will please to call on Brother G. Brown on Fifth street, between Wood and Smithfield, Pittsburgh. Those that come in by other ways will please call on me at my house, adjoining the M. P. church, East Common, Allegheny, that they may be directed to their places of lodging during the session.

The time of our fourth quarterly meeting is fixed to commence on Friday 3d of September, hoping to be favored with the presence and labors of some of the brethren who may be able to be with us. As the conference commences its session on the Tuesday following, may not we hope for help from those that have to leave their charges some days before the commencement of conference, to be here in time; come brethren.

JOHN BURNS.

P. S.—Br. Brown's quarterly meeting is at the same time, and he requests me to say that he extends the same invitation, J. B.

Mr. Editor: As the matter on which we write is of considerable importance to the itinerant ministers, and preachers of the Pittsburgh District, we whose names are hereunto subscribed, have agreed to venture a call on the stewards of the circuits and stations, to make conference collections, in accordance with the rules of our discipline. Our superintendents will every one of them be asked at conference, if they have required the stewards to do their duty in relation to this matter. So sayeth a resolution of our last Annual Conference, and we want them all to be ready to answer in the affirmative—and especially do we want a good lot of money, by ministers, preachers, and delegates, paid over into the hands of the conference steward, to meet the deficiencies of those ministerial brethren, who have labored hard the past year on poor circuits, and have received but little to feed and clothe themselves and families.

Yours, truly, GEO. BROWN,
Z. RAGAN,
JNO. BURNS.

THE FIRST NUMBER OF WHICH WILL BE ISSUED ON THE FIFTEENTH DAY OF OCTOBER NEXT.

Edited by Thos. Affleck.

THE Western Farmer and Gardener is published in monthly numbers of 24 large octavo pages each, with the addition of one or more copperplate engravings, and an extensive advertising sheet, all neatly done up in a printed cover—at one dollar a year, payable in every instance in advance.

All payments by mail must be made in bank notes of par value in Cincinnati, or in such notes as are perfectly current, and generally bankable in the State in which the subscriber resides; and all letters to the Publisher, (except such as contain articles for publication, and which may be addressed to the Editor) must be post paid.

The Publisher assumes the risk of loss by mail, of all letters and remittances conforming to the foregoing conditions, and which have been properly committed to the mail, or to the hands of a Post-master.

The Post-master General states, that "a Post-master may enclose money in a letter to the Publisher of a newspaper, to pay the subscription of a third person, and frank the letter, if written by himself."

Subscriptions must commence with the beginning of some one volume, and can in no instance be received for part of a volume.

The first number of the third and of each subsequent volume, will be sent to every subscriber to the work, with a request to retain the number and remit, if they desire the work continued to them—if not, they will return the number as early as possible. Without payment of the subscription price in advance, it will in no instance be continued—the very low price at which the work is published, and the difficulty of collecting so small ■ sum, must be the excuse for enforcing this rule.

Any subscriber, postmaster or any other person, may obtain subscribers either as a friend to the work, or for his own profit on the following terms:

Six copies for $5—no allowance can be made on a less amount than five dollars remitted.

Twenty per cent commission on twenty-five or more subscribers:

Twenty five per cent commission on one hundred or more.

Any person remitting two dollars for his own subscription and that of one other, shall have forwarded to him by mail, one copy of the "Western Farmer and Gardener's Almanac, for 1842;" or one copy of "Bee-Breeding in the West."

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the hackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.
